Even after the stoppage of hostilities and the raising of the Cuban blockade had been formally announced, it required several days to make the Spaniards in Havana understand the situation. Com. Howell's flagship, San Francisco, and the torpedo destroyer, Sylvia, were cannonaded by the guns of the Moro fort on the 13th but did not reply. When the cannonade ceased, the Sylvia was sent into the harbor under a truce flag, with communications respecting the cessation of hostilities. The Spanish batteries at Manzanillo were bombarded on the 12th and 13th by Admiral Sampson's ships, and the bombardment ceased upon the arrival of the peace news. In both these cases, it was explained that the Spaniards had begun the attacks, not understanding that peace had been agreed upon.

Our Fleet Ordered Home.

Upon the peace news reaching Havana, Capt.-Gen. Blanco immediately telegraphed his own resignation and that of his staff to Madrid, being unwilling to be present at the evacuation of the Antilles. One naval expedition to Isle of Pines, a possession of Spain in Cuban waters has been recalled. Our blockading fleet has been ordered home from Cuba, and will proceed to New York, where the ships will be thoroughly overhauled in the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The Navy Department officials state that hereafter, our war-ships will be kept in condition so as to be available for service at any time on the shortest notice. It is of the highest importance that our vessels should be kept in commission, especially at a time when they may be called upon to make long cruises for the protection and upbuilding of American interests in distant parts of the globe.

Reducing the Army.

It has already been practically decided that our army is soon to be reduced, although 100,000 men may be retained as the effective standard for the present. The volunteer corps will be mustered out as rapidly as possible, and the entire department placed once more on a peace footing. For the present, however, the maintaining of 100,000 troops is rendered necessary, as large garrisons will be required, not only in the West Indies, but in Manila, the Ladrones and Hawaii.

Madrid dispatches report a feeling of profound relief among all classes over the advent of peace. Spain is agreeable to all the conditions proposed by the United States, but still has hopes that the Peace Commission may save the Philippines to the Spanish Crown. The Carlist insurrection is more threatening than ever, and it is quite likely that the government will soon have a home revolution to contend with that may overthrow the present regime.

SPANISH TROOPS IN HAVANA WHO WILL NOW BE SENT HOME.

These troops were the last to arrive from Spain before the conclusion of peace.

The Peace Commission.

All statements of the personnel of the Peace Commission are thus far conjectural. It seems to be settled, however, that Secretary Day will be the leading member of the United States side of that body. Other names mentioned in the same connection are Elihu Root, Senators Gorman and Allison, Hon. Joseph Choate, Justice White of the United States Supreme Court, Adj. Gen. Corbin and Gen. Miles. On the Spanish side, the Commission may include Senor Castillo, Spanish Ambassador at Paris, Senor Moret, Minister of the Colonies, Duke Almodovar de Rio, Foreign Affairs, and Polo y Bernabe, formerly Minister to Washington. The sessions of the Commission will probably be held in Paris.

Everywhere throughout the Union, the news of the conclusion of peace has been received with deep gratification. President McKinley has expressed himself as sincerely thankful that the war has at last come to an end. The trying situation in which he has been placed during the last four months has been a severe mental and physical strain, relief from which he now gladly welcomes.

At Camp Wikoff.

The greater part of our troops have now returned from Cuba, and the sick are convalescing rapidly. There is little danger of a serious outbreak of fever at any of the camps which have been established for the soldiers. Camp Wikoff, at Montauk Point, N. Y., has been the scene of great activity during the last two weeks. Thousands of soldiers, many of them weak from wounds and the effect of exposure in the sickly Cuban climate, have arrived there from the transports, and are quartered as comfortably as the hasty nature of the preparations would permit. Among the troops which are now stationed there are the Rough Riders, Third and Sixth Cavalry, Sixth, Ninth, Tenth and Thirteenth Infantry, and the 71st. New York. Our artist has shown, in the illustration on the front page, a scene witnessed on the arrival of several transports. Glad to be once again on their native soil, the returned soldiers are hurrying ashore to the quarters prepared for them, where they will receive kind treatment and cordial welcome from friends. In the cool, salubrious breezes of that beautifully located camp, they will quickly recover their lost strength. Many of the sick became convalescent on the voyage home.

It is pleasant to note the tone of the press of Europe in commenting upon the peace negotiations. The London Times praises the statesmanship of President McKinley, and then makes the significant statement: "What occupies the American people at this moment is not the cost of the war, the value of their acquisitions, or the balance of the profit and loss account, but the moral result of the struggle and the nature of the ideas which it stimulates." The leading German journals recognize that our government has acted with a generous dignity in dealing with Spain, and those of Paris are equally friendly in tone. On the other hand, the Madrid press is plunged in gloom, and several journals print the peace protocol in mourning borders. Their one gleam of hope amid the darkness and humiliation of defeat is in the direction of the Philippines, which they trust may be saved from the general wreck.

The Christian Commission's Work.

Now that peace has fortunately come, the Christian Commission, which has done invaluable work in the camps and at the front among the troops, will find still wider scope for its spiritual energies. Whatever the ultimate disposition of Cuba and the Philippines may be, it is reasonably certain that our troops will hold these possessions for many months to come, and that there will be abundant opportunity for religious work among the large garrisons stationed there. There is a probability also, that our home camps will be continued until the close of the summer and possibly even until the Peace Commission concludes its sessions, for until that event takes place, the war cannot be said to have absolutely ended. Both at home and abroad, therefore, there will be continuous work for the Christian Commission for many weeks to come. In this evangelistic work, Mr. Moody and the other members of the Commission look forward confidently to the support of Christian America.

The "Dead" and "Missing."

Many sad letters come to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from parents and other relatives who have some dear one at the front—some soldier boy, from whom they have had no word or sign in many weary weeks, or possibly months. The writers ask us to ascertain, if possible, the fate of their absent ones. Is he alive or dead, wounded or sick? Where is he now—in a Cuban camp, fighting the pestilential fevers of the tropics, or in a soldier's lonely grave? We have sent a number of inquiries concerning such cases to the War Department, and doubtless, wherever information was available, answers have been sent to the anxious friends.

One of the saddest features of war is the list of missing—the long array of disappearances, the contemplation of which brings anguish to many hearts. In the fighting before Santiago, there were, unfortunately, many such cases. In his beautiful poem, "Missing," Bushrod W. James, L.L.D., has graphically pictured the sorrow and anxiety of the friends of those whose fate is hidden in mystery:

The papers were scanned each morning
With eagerly anxious eyes,
For the war-cloud had frowned its warning—
Had broken and dimmed the skies.

* * * * *

And o'er each long, slim column,
"The Wounded," "The Missing," "The Dead,"
Bent eyes with expression solemn—
O'er-dimmed with the tears they shed.

* * * * *

Oh, tell us where we may find them,
Our brave ones who went away!—
Whether chains of the foeman bind them
Or Death holds them in his sway!
We hope, and despair, and ponder,
And search where the battle led,—
Heart-weary our spirits wander!
Ah, "Missing" is worse than "Dead!"

Notes of the War.

Generals Gomez and Garcia, immediately after receiving the peace news, ordered their Cuban troops to cease fighting.

Spain's troops in Cuba are being sent home as rapidly as possible. Some will be landed at Vigo, and others at Santander and Coruna.

Immediately after Spain evacuates Cuba, a United States war vessel will be stationed at each of the ports on the island, to preserve order and to support the garrison of occupation.

Peace!

WELCOME to peace! We are not a warlike people, and would prefer, as much as in us lies, to live peaceably with all men. When it is necessary to fight—and there have been times in our history when no other course was open to us—we draw the sword reluctantly, and are glad when we can return it to the scabbard. Short and glorious as this war has been, we rejoice that it is at an end. Like the youthful Hebrew champion, we cheerfully put off the armor of the warrior, for we are not used to it. It was vexatious to have to do with a neighbor who was unable to manage his household, whose children and servants were continually quarreling and fighting, and who was a perpetual nuisance to us. He would not accept our advice, and his brutalities continued in spite of our protests. It became necessary to tell him that he must reform, or we must interfere. He paid no heed to our warning, and even dealt treacherously with us in blowing up our ship. Then there was only one course. We were compelled to speak to him in the only language he would understand. The voice of our guns told him that our mandate must be obeyed. He learned that we were able to enforce our will. But when he confessed himself beaten, we cheerfully ceased to punish, and have made his submission as little of a humiliation to him as possible. He has consented to quit our neighborhood and to abandon the task of governing other races, for which he has everywhere proved his incapacity. This was all we required of him, and now that he has promised to go, we bear him no ill will. We would have preferred that he would have gone voluntarily, without waiting to be driven away, but he would not. We bid him a joyful farewell, and shall now proceed to put his house in order. The war has been a disagreeable duty, well performed. Its close is a welcome relief, for which we are devoutly thankful to God.

The First Soldiers' Bible.

WHEN THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some time ago announced its purpose of putting and circulating among our gallant defenders at the front a War Testament, of a size suitable to be carried in a soldier's pocket in camp, the intelligence was hailed with genuine delight by all who are interested in the spiritual welfare of the brave fellows who were to face danger and even death at their country's call. Pastors, chaplains, evangelists, Christian workers, and a very large proportion of the rank and file welcomed the War Testament as something greatly needed. At the present moment, many thousands of these clear-typed, compact little volumes are in the hands of our soldiers and sailors in Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, as well as at the home camps and on our warships, and the distribution is still going on; for, though the war is at an end, our soldiers and sailors, who are guarding and occupying the nation's new possessions, will see much foreign service, fortunately of a pacific sort, in the near future. With nearly 40,000 American soldiers in the Eastern world and considerable armies in the West Indies, and with a greatly augmented Navy, there is a field that calls for continued and earnest evangelistic effort, and especially for the dissemination of the Word itself.

History affords but one other instance of a "Soldier's Pocket Bible," of which we have ever heard. It was printed for and circulated in the English army during the time of that sturdy old warrior and believer in the sacred book, Oliver Cromwell.

In one of the upper chambers of the Lenox library, New York, locked away in a special glass case, amongst the treasures of the collection, lies a small and ancient volume of sixteen pages, including the title page, and modestly bound in brown calf. Only one other copy exists and it is in the British Museum. The copy in the Lenox library was purchased in Boston for the sum of $2,200. Its title page has this inscription:

"THE SOULDIER'S POCKET BIBLE"

Containing most (if not all) those places in the Holy Scriptures which doe show the qualifications of his inner man, that is a fit souldier to fight the Lord's battles, both before the fight, during the fight, and after the fight.

Which Scriptures are reduced to several heads and fitly applied to souldier's several occasions, and so may supply the want of the whole Bible, which a souldier cannot conveniently carry about him.

And may also be useful for any Christian to meditate on, now in this miserable time of war.

Every man in Cromwell's army, by command of the Protector, carried a copy of the "Souldier's Pocket Bible," which was generally buttoned between his coat and waistcoat "next his heart." Two reprints of the famous book have been recently made, one for private circulation, in 1861, and another, a neat fac-simile, was later produced in London, to which was added the following brief preface by Lord Wolseley:

In my humble opinion, the soldier who carries this Bible in his pocket possesses what is far higher than the proverbial Marshal's baton, for, if he carries its teaching in his head and lets it rule his heart and conduct, he will certainly be happy and most probably eminently successful.

We desire that our own brave soldiers, who have proved themselves so courageous and steadfast in their country's cause, should, every man of them, be provided with a copy of our vest-pocket War Testament, that they, too, might "wear it next their heart" to comfort, to guide and cheer. Not a meagre sixteen pages of selections, however choice, but the full and complete New Testament. An opportunity is now afforded for all who desire to become actively interested in this missionary work, to do so. One dollar will supply ten soldiers with War Testaments. Soon these little volumes will become precious as souvenirs of our war with Spain, and as reminders of the hearty manner in which Christian America remembered the spiritual welfare of those who were risking their lives in the cause of freedom and humanity.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its publication, and that upon they whose sermons, written for Christ, are printed in it and in their application may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the edification of God's people.

BISMARCK'S RELIGION.

AFTER the death of Gladstone, two and a half months ago, Bismarck remained the greatest intellect of the political world. It has been seldom in ancient or modern times that Providence has allowed any one man to be so potential in founding a nation as Bismarck in the creation of the German Empire. His colossal brain, his political sagacity, his peerless diplomacy, his real genius, his irresistable will have been emphasized as elements of his greatness and success. He had other elements of character not as often noticed, but just as essential. They were his love for his wife and children, his devotion to his country, his simple, sincere faith in God, and his sense of personal responsibility for time and eternity. If his intellect was a mountain losing its head in the sky, if his will was a storm sweeping every thing before it, his heart was a deep, blue sea.

Bismarck's religion was dominant in his individual character and public life. If the chain with which he bound the German Empire together could be discovered, it would be found fastened to the throne of God. In one of the ablest speeches he ever made in the Reichstag, he reached the climax in "The Germans fear God and nothing else in the world." The old Bismarck coat-of-arms was a shield with a crown above it, out of which came two buffalo horns, with the black eagle of Prussia to the left and the eagle of Brandenburg on the right, and this motto at the bottom, "In Trinitate Robur" ("My strength in the Trinity"), referring to the three-leaf clover and the three oak leaves in the shield, and especially to the Trinity of God.

At the Easter of 1830, on his sixteenth birthday, Bismarck was confirmed in the Trinity church, of Berlin, by the celebrated Schleiermacher, and remained a member of the Lutheran Church to the day of his death. While in college, he became somewhat sceptical, to which fact he refers regretfully in a letter to his wife from his college town:

I visited Wiesbaden, the scene of my former follies. How many of those with whom I flirted, and drank and gambled are now under gronnd! What changes my views of life have undergone in the fourteen years since then! I cannot imagine how a man who thinks at all about himself, and yet refuses to hear anything about God, can endure life without weariness and self-abhorrence. I can't think how I endured it formerly! If I had to live now, as then, without God, without you, without children, I don't know why I should not throw off this life like a filthy garment.

Through his long life, he not only believed in a God above him, but openly professed the presence of God in his soul. He had implicit faith in the Scriptures, and with them he often tried to win his friends from scepticism. After one of the most exquisite descriptions of a swim in the Rhine by moonlight, he wrote:

I sat with Lynar on the balcony, with the Rhine beneath us. The starry sky above us and my little Testament brought us to religious topics, and I tried for a long while to shake the tendency of his mind to the moral teaching of Rousseau.

Bismarck had implicit faith in Divine Providence. He said in a critical time in his history, "I am ready for anything God may send." At another time he said, "If God will continue to give health to my wife and children, in thirty years from now it will not make any difference whether I play the part of the diplomatist or country squire." His wife was very much afraid of his assassination and he wrote her: "Trust in God, dear heart; there is more danger to be apprehended for the king's life than for mine, but this also is in God's hands." In a gloomy period of the nation's history he wrote, "Thank God my health is good; but one needs an humble faith in God not to despair about the future of our country. May he grant the king good health above all." Bismarck's faith in the providence of God over Prussia and the German nation was a part of his life. He said: "Sooner or later, the God who directs our battles, will throw down the iron dice which will give the final decision." After a most graphic description of Napoleon's humiliation at Sedan and of his conference with him, he wrote:

These two days cost France 100,000 men and an Emperor. If I did not believe in the divine government of the world, I would not serve my king another hour. If I did not obey my God and put my trust in him, my respect for earthly rulers would be but small. Title and decorations have no charm for me. Take my faith from me and you take my country, too.

Bismarck had a vital faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. We remember to have read nowhere a clearer or more powerful exposition of the relation of Christ's teachings to the State than in one of Bismarck's addresses. He said:

If the State wishes to secure its own duration, and to prove its right to exist, it must be established on a religious foundation. Ocean Postal Development.

CANADA is to be congratulated on a concession of postal facilities, which her statesmen have had an active part in securing. In the near future, her citizens will be able to send letters to England or to South Africa at two cents, instead of five cents, the half ounce. Canada has the honor of having proposed and urged this reduction of rates. She was cordially supported by the statesmen of South Africa, and eventually the English postal authorities were induced to take the matter into consideration. An effort was made to bring all the English colonies into the union. A Council was organized of representatives of Canada, South Africa, India, Australia and other colonies, to arrange terms. The Council, which was composed of men of experience in postal business, assembled in London, and has just concluded its work. It was found possible to conclude arrangements for the reduction in the case of the more distant colonies, but Canada and South Africa agreed to make the experiment. It was also arranged that any country under the English flag might, at any time, make a similar arrangement by notifying the English Government of its desire to do so. It is practically certain that all of them will eventually avail themselves of the opportunity. Probably there will be a loss of revenue for several years, both to the colonies and to the mother country, but as was pointed out by Mr. Chamberlain, who has heartily advocated the change from the first, there is something besides revenue to be considered in giving facilities of this kind for increased communication. The facilities for rapid ocean travel, which have so lately developed during the last few years, have drawn the countries into closer bonds of union, but only the wealthy classes have been able to avail themselves of them. To the great masses of the people on both sides the Atlantic, the money and time required for a voyage, made it impossible. The only way to help them was to promote the intercourse, which brings knowledge and nurtures sympathy, was to reduce the cost of correspondence. This has now been done, and henceforth the emmigrant in a British colony, however poor he may be, will be able to keep his family at home informed of his experience, and the family can at small cost give him news of his home affairs. Of course, this will be a boon only to those whose interest in the home continues, in spite of separation; it will be of no moment to those who, in their new environment, lose their attachment to their parents and friends. It is strange that there should be such people. Still more strange is it that there should be people in the world who neglect to keep up communication with their heavenly home, which is altogether free and fruitful in blessing.

"Thou castest off fear and restrainest prayer before God (Job 15: 4).

Immigration Uniforms.

A writer in the New York Sun complains of the deceptions being practised upon the public by persons who, although not in the army or navy, wear uniforms resembling the regulation garments. He says: "The excitement of the war, and perhaps the fact that there is no law to prevent any person from wearing the uniform of the army and navy, or a colorable imitation of it, may be responsible for the curiously clad persons now moving around the city. One department store has put the drivers of its delivery wagons in a costume that even at a short distance is hardly to be distinguished from the canvas field uniform worn by the infantry. Three undersized men were wandering about South Ferry the other day in brand new uniforms. On the collar of their unbuttoned blouses were the letters 'R. R.' in gilt. The 'R. R.' was doubtless meant to insinuate that they were rough riders; the official name of the regiment called rough riders is First Volunteer Cavalry. Many of the wearers of uniforms seem to have assumed too great license; the results indicate that there should be some rules in regard to the wearing of uniforms. Things are too mixed just now." They can impose only on the general public. If they present themselves to receive pay or rations, or to enjoy the privileges of soldiers or sailors they would be speedily detected. It is so with persons who, for the sake of winning public confidence pretend to be Christians when they are not.

The Lord knoweth them that are his (II. Tim. 2: 19).

Died of Nostalgia.

In Gen. Shafter's reports of sickness and death among our troops before Santiago, is one entry that is very pathetic. It is that of the death of a man belonging to a Massachusetts regiment, whose ailment was home-sickness, to which the physicians give the technical name of nostalgia. Medical men formerly ridiculed the idea of men dying from any disease that did not attack some part of the body and would not admit that any one could die even from a broken heart; but they have learned of late that there is a closer connection than they supposed between the mind and the body, and that men may die of mental distress. Thus we get a distinct recognition in this instance of a mental cause for physical death. This man who was exposed to danger from Spanish bullets and from fever, escaped both, to die of home-sickness. It is especially sad that his death should have occurred just at a time when the only effectual remedy was so near at hand. If he could only have known that peace was coming so soon and that his return to the home for which he pined, was so near, he might have revived, and lived to come back. We may hope that his affections were not so centred on his home that he had not looked beyond it, seeing that at longest there must come a day when he would have to leave it and would need a refuge that would continue forever.

Because man goeth to his long home (Eccl. 12:5).

Evading the Immigration Laws.

Complaints have reached the Government of late that persons excluded under the immigration laws from entering the country are coming in by way of Canada. The Immigration Commissioners at New York and other ports are vigilant in their watch, and they have felt some chagrin at learning that persons whom they have rejected are now in the country. Two officers of the Government have accordingly been sent from Washington on a tour of inspection on the Canadian border with a view of suggesting a remedy for the evasion of the law. Formerly by an arrangement with the Canadian steamship lines, a United States Inspector was stationed at Canadian ports of entry to assist the Dominion inspectors and to collect the head-tax on such immigrants as admitted their intention to cross the border within thirty days. The present Administration, however, withdrew them and since then there have been a greater number of evasions than ever before. Probably the officers now conducting the inquiry will advise their being replaced, or may suggest some other means of checking the influx. Happily for us there is no prohibition to keep undesirable people from entering Christ's kingdom. Indeed he expressly invited the outcasts and those whom the world despised. But even he insisted on a regular entry, and would not tolerate an evasion of the rule. The wealthiest, like the poorest, must enter by repentance and faith in him, and there is no other way.

He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. . . . I am the door of the sheep (John 10: 1, 7).

Kindness Cost a Life.

A lineman in the employ of a telephone company lost his life in Staten Island, N. Y., a few days ago through doing an act of kindness. He was walking on the roadway near his home, when he met two fellow-linemen dressed in holiday garb. They were in a disagreeable mood. The superintendent had promised them a half-holiday, and they had dressed to go to Bath Beach for a few hours' enjoyment, but just as they were starting, news came that a wire at Cebra Avenue was damaged, and he told them they must go and repair it at once. They had brought no ladder, and they were looking for some one from whom they could borrow one. The lineman promptly brought his ladder, and said that as they were wearing their best clothes, he would go up and repair the wire for them. The men protested against his doing their work, but he insisted, and was soon at the head of the pole among the wires looking for the damaged one. The two men started off for their trip, but had not gone many steps when they heard a cry. Looking back, they saw their friend swing a moment in agony, and drop unconscious to the pavement. They knew what had happened. He had touched an unprotected light wire, and two thousand volts of electricity had passed through his body. They picked him up, but he was dead. His volunteer service had cost him his life. It was undertaken only that his friends might have a little longer pleasure, and of course he had no idea what it would involve, but his memory will always be a hallowed one to them. How infinitely more hallowed ought the name of Christ to be to us, seeing that he deliberately laid down his life that we might have eternal happiness.

Christ who hath loved us and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God (Eph. 5:2).

GREAT BRITAIN'S OCEAN PENNY POSTAGE COMMISSIONERS.

The New Governor-General.

The difficult problem of finding a successor to the popular Earl of Aberdeen as Governor-General of Canada has been solved by the appointment of the Earl of Minto, whose portrait appears on this page. He is not altogether a stranger to the Dominion, having served for about four years as Military Secretary to the Governor-General in the time of the Louis Riel troubles. The experience he gained then is likely to be of use to him now that he comes to occupy his distinguished position. Lord Minto is the fourth of his line; the first Earl was raised to the peerage in 1813. He is fifty-three years of age. His experience hitherto has been chiefly that of a soldier. He served four years in the famous regiment of Scots Greys. Afterwards he fought in the Russo-Turkish war, in the Afghan war of 1879, and in the Egyptian campaign of 1882, in which he was wounded, and was honorably mentioned for distinguished service in the dispatches. His wife is a sister of the present Earl Grey. His capacity as a ruler is yet to be tested, but we may hope that one who must be aware of the responsibilities of his exalted station knows also how he may gain the wisdom he needs, and like the great king pray:

EARL MINTO.
The New Governor-General of Canada.

Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy great people (I. Kings 3: 9).

A New Filament.

One of the chief difficulties in electric lighting is to find a filament which will emit the light without being itself consumed. A scientific journal reports the discovery of a new substance which appears to have the qualities desired in greater proportion than any yet used. This is called osmium, the densest and most refractory of all metals, being infusible except at the highest attainable temperature. Osmium is found native as an alloy in certain ores of platinum and iridium. It is a hard, bluish-gray metal with an extraordinary atomic weight and enormous specific gravity. It is said to be the heaviest substance known. The properties that suggested its use for incandescent lamps are its practical infusibility, and its known resistance to temperatures in which platinum and iridium volatilize and disappear. It is well known that the intensity of light emitted by an incandescent substance increases rapidly with its absolute temperature. By heating osmium in a vacuum with an electric current strong enough to volatilize platinum, it is said to attain a luminosity hitherto unknown, emitting a white light of agreeable color, but of great intensity. The substance is dull and uninteresting in appearance; it is only when the electric current passes through it that it gives its wonderful light. There are some men who resemble it in this particular. They are accounted dull by the world, but Christians get light from them when the Holy Spirit uses them to declare the truth.

The entrance of thy word giveth light (Ps. 119:130).

SUNDAY AT MONT-LAWN.

The Happiest Day of All the Seven—Song and Story—Child-Worshipers—Bobby's "Christmas" Card Text.

IT is set apart as a holy day, and every effort is put forth by housemother and caretakers to make it the sweetest, happiest, dearest day of all the week. Play is not interdicted, but the influence of "teachers," as the children rightfully call the wise and tender women who care for them, pervades and directs it in such a way as to differentiate it from the play of other days.

GOING UP ON THE SATURDAY BOAT.

Sunday breakfast, dinner and supper are the best of the week, for on Saturday, good things, in the shape of pies, cookies and fresh eggs are laid in stock. When the gong rings for breakfast, the housemother on the steps, gives out the Golden Text for the week.

After breakfast, while the children are playing on the lawn, the housemother and teachers gather together in the Home parlor for their Sabbath hour of praise and prayer. While they are singing the first hymn, little guests, self-invited, steal in, until every chair is filled, and a lot of small people are sitting around on the floor. When the meeting dissolves, all go forth with smiling faces to the week's work. Out on the lawn children gather about the teachers and listen to pretty Bible stories and look at Bible picture-books, or in quiet walks and talks the teachers show them their loving Father's hand in the beautiful world about them—that wide-open, wonderful Bible of beauty that is written in wooded hills and daisied fields and wide calm river.

The mellow notes of the chapel bell ring out, and the children march into chapel, singing:

How beautiful to walk in the steps of the Saviour

When they are seated, they sing:

Hosanna to the Son of David,
Hosanna to the King of kings,
Hosanna in the highest heaven,
Hosanna to the King of kings.

The lesson is studied in large letters over the blackboard, and Miss Dane's little guests delight in every opening that brings them to the answer of Jesus.

Then as Bible stories come to me,
Come another, another, another,
I'll store them away in my heart, I'll store them away,
Keep them to use every day,
And tell them over and over to me.

The lesson is studied in large letters over the blackboard, and Miss Dane's little guests delight in every opening that brings them to the answer of Jesus. Then as Bible stories come to me, Come another, another, another, I'll store them away in my heart, I'll store them away, Keep them to use every day,

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Home for Chinese Waifs.

The Blind, the Orphan, and the Child of the Leper, is Sheltered—China Feels Her Reproach—The Christ-Spirit in Home-Life.

OUR readers in the HOME AND FAMILY CIRCLE will be interested in the following letter from Rev. F. Ohlinger, Superintendent of the Rebecca Orphanage, Hinghua, China: "The Rebecca Orphanage was established by Bishop C. McCabe and named for his wife, who donated $3,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of buildings. No work in all the great heathen world is more Christ-like than the work done in this orphanage, and none can yield more abiding fruit. The children receive not only Christian and mental, but also a manual training. They are mostly the orphans of deceased Christians, and would never perish or fall into the hands of heathen relatives if we did not provide for them. We also work for the blind, the outcast, and the healthy children of lepers. The cost of rescuing a child from a leper village is $20 per annum; benefactors to name the child they rescue. Cost of supporting an orphan, foundling, or blind child, $20 per annum. The work is growing rapidly.

"China is beginning to feel the reproach of her position. Her mails, for instance, have to be paid for separately so soon as they go to other countries, while the mails of the smallest countries come and go, bearing only their own stamps. Even Japan, little Japan, whom the Chinese regarded with such supreme disdain, is imitating the powers that are dictating the policy which China shall pursue in certain matters. China will learn before long the lesson that religious toleration is essential to progress, and that Christian missionaries are here, as elsewhere, to be welcomed as the vanguard of civilization."

"Blindness is an affliction remarkably common in Eastern countries, due in some measure to the glare of the sunlight, but in larger degree to the ignorance of the ordinary laws of hygiene. When Christianity enters a country, instructing the young, leading the old to Christ, and otherwise influencing private and public morals through the home-life, there is a marked diminution in physical as well as mental and moral afflictions, so true it is that, Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings." True this is in our own home-life. Many of us, blind with unbelief in our heavenly Father's unfailing love and care, fret and doubt ourselves into sickness, ill-temper, and sometimes into sin. The surest way to keep home sweet, is to preserve our spiritual vision clear of any film or beam that keeps us from recognizing God's love for us and from seeing good in those around us. Recognizing whatever is good in others is the way to encourage them in well-doing, and thus assimilate them to increase their virtues.

Chicago Vacation Schools.

"What shall we do with the children of crowded districts during vacation?" is a question which is coming home with force to other cities besides New York. The Woman's Club in Chicago inaugurated a movement which has crystalized this summer in the establishment of five vacation schools, six play-grounds and a play-room under the direction of the Vacation School Board. The park and boulevard system of the city are not so arranged as to afford relief to the congested districts, and the institution of the schools and playgrounds is a timely provision. The schools take the children on frequent excursions to the parks or into the country, and seek to interest them in nature studies. The City Council made an appropriation of $1,000 to the play-grounds, which being located in different sections, reach different groups of children. Teachers in athletics and kindergartens direct the play into healthful channels. The statistics of juvenile criminality shows the importance of providing entertainment and occupation for the city child during the summer months when the close of the public schools turns them into the streets.

"Christmas Trees" in August.

It was bed-time at Mont-Lawn. In the cool, sweet dusk of the great dormitory, many little cots bloomed white, and many little tots were slipping quietly off into the Land of Nod, but at the extreme end of the room a number of fair and dark heads were lifted and looking out of the window, "Teacher!" "Teacher!" came soft calls in hushed voices of the gazers, who were newcomers to the Home: they got their arms about "teacher" as she sat down among them, and pointed in eagerness out of the window—all in a way that made the teacher think of the soft flutterings in a dove's nest. "Teacher, they's Christmas trees out here." They were pointing to the spruce trees in the yard. "Such big ones! An' here's what grows on 'em:" they had gathered some cones and taken them to bed. Heretofore they had only seen "Christmas trees" in the stores and in the mission at Christmas season.

SIGHTLESS WARDS OF THE REBECCA ORPHANAGE.

The Scalp-Dance.

A trader, recently returned from a visit to the Blood Indians, speaks thus of their scalp-dance:

Those who had lost relatives painted their faces black, the women cutting their hair and scarifying their arms and ankles. They carried the scalps of the enemy suspended from sticks, and went through the camp, stopping here and there to dance and sing the plaintive scalp-song. Few white persons have any taste for Indian music, yet some of our greatest musicians have pronounced it purely classical in construction. One could clearly perceive in this scalp-song the dominant theme of sorrow for the dead kindred, and a minor one of joy that they had been revenged. Afterwards these scalps were handed over to the warriors and they in turn danced with them; but their song was one of exultant victory.

Even among savages we see that the woman's war song of triumph is tinctured with anguish. Here is the watching and waiting without the accompaniment of drum-beat, bugle-note and band-playing. And to her, in the kingdom of the home, lies the power of making war needless by raising sons too pure ever to contribute to the injustice and oppression which provokes war.

"The Rock that is Higher than I."

A traveler to the Klondike writes:

Five Finger Rapids is the next place to worry the gold-seeker. There are three rocks in the river and one on each side. The day we came through a foreigner took the wrong channel and his boat and outfit were lost, but, with the Lord's help, he managed to cling to the rock and climb to the top, and no doubt was the only man ever on it. The rock is fifty feet from the shore, so one of the pilots made a strong string by unravelling a rope and tied a stone on one end, and, throwing it to him, he pulled over a heavy rope and tied it around himself, and in this manner they pulled him through the current and up the other side.

Sometimes we take the wrong way out of difficulties, and it looks as though the current of evil tempers and desires will carry us away, but let us remember that there is always the rock of faith upon which we may climb out of the reach of all unholy thoughts.

Shooting Stars.

August is the month of harvest moons, of beautiful stars and of meteoric displays. "Tears of St. Lawrence," as falling stars have been called in memory of the martyr, glorify the August sky, because the earth rushing through the swarm of meteors captures myriads of the tiny atoms that compose it, sets them on fire by the concussion with her atmosphere, and the light of the combustion is visible in the form of shooting stars. In astronomy shooting stars are known as Persids, because their radiant point is the constellation Perseus. As this constellation rises about nine o'clock, the display begins about ten, and it is said that an observer on a clear, moonless night will see from four to eight meteors an hour. From ten to fifteen million interplanetary meteors of visible size, are said to enter the earth's atmosphere daily, while the number of those too small to be seen, is far greater.

The Value of Habit.

Throughout all life, both mental and physical, writes Frederick M. Giles, of the University of Chicago, it is only by making the to-day's work habitual that we are able to accomplish something new to-morrow. Hence it is important, especially in childhood and youth, which are critical periods in the formation of habits, to get as habitual as many things as possible that in later life we may have more time to attend to new problems. We must have habits—that is inevitable; but would we do the best work we must have the right habits. It must be noticed on the other hand that habits must be kept flexible. In the common-place phrase, we must not become "the slave of habit," but its master and user.

YOKE-FELLOWS.

ALONG the quiet village street
Two oxen came with heavy load,
And as their driver paused to greet
A friend, one, weary, sank upon the road;
The other, patient, stood and bore the yoke,
Now doubly weighted with his partner's fall.
Wondering I saw, and light upon me broke.
"Oh, Lord, it is thy yoke I bear,
The strength to hold it comes from thee.
If thou wilt stoop to draw with me
Earth's heavy loads, and all my burdens share,
Oh, grant that I may ne'er again despair,
And, by my faltering, added burden be.

Indian Day.

INDIAN Day at Albany, N. Y., when the tribes of five nations gathered to the opening of the State Department of Indian relics, was a most interesting occasion. New York State has lately been made official Wampum keeper by the Indians, and the famous belts were on exhibition. The way Indians recorded history was by the designs in which they beaded these belts. The party gathered at Albany was a motley throng, most of them being in costumes remote in style from those seen in cities. One chief of the Onondagas wore a leather garment, and upon his cheeks were daubs of brilliant paint. Another wore upon his head a display of eagle feathers which ended in a trail extending down his back. One little fellow who accompanied his father as a guest of the State, wore an entire Indian costume, and carried in his little brown hand a bow and arrow. A representative of the Albany Historical and Art Society was accompanied by his wife, and while the Indians were at their repast she held the great granddaughter of Chief Brandt who aided the Americans in the war of the Revolution, when he led the Mohawks. The nut-brown infant of two months was the centre of attraction.

"Mammy's" Burial.

One of the most impressive scenes ever witnessed in a cemetery, occurred recently in Jackson, Miss., when "Aunt Susan," a colored woman who had lived out her four score and three years was laid to rest in the plot of her "old master," Dr. T. J. Mitchell. Richard Green, Gordon Green and George H. Peets, all white men whom she had nursed and raised, being her pall-bearers. Many had gathered to do her honor. Prominent white people of the city walked behind her coffin as mourners, and her grave was literally covered with flowers. Aunt Susan, for over seventy years, had lived with the family of her "old master"—the Mitchells, the Bibbs and the Greens—nursing and ministering to the sick, tending the children, a blessing to every one. "Those who knew her," says a Memphis paper, "do not doubt she is with the angels. Whiter than the snow was her heart." The old-time Southern "mammy" was one of God's elect; through love she made herself mistress of the hearts of children, and was really, like "Uncle Remus," the kindergartener of the Old South.

A Letter to an Emperor.

Do any of our little readers feel that if they were kings and queens, life would be all sunshine? Let them read this letter, written by Dom Pedro I., immediately after his abdication, when on board the Warspite, ready to leave his country and his little boy forever. The letter is to that little boy, Dom Pedro II., at that time just five years and four months old:

My beloved son and my emperor, very agreeable are the lines which you have written me. I was scarcely able to read them, because tears impeded my sight. Now that I am more composed, I write this to thank you for your letter and to declare that as long as life shall last affection for you will never be extinguished in my lacerated heart.

Our readers will remember that this little boy, who became Emperor of Brazil, in fact when less than fifteen, himself voluntarily abdicated, after a long reign, in the interest of peace, and that through this act of his an empire became a republic without the shedding of a drop of blood—a thing unprecedented in history. Nobler patriotism this than to have established his throne in bloody triumphs.

Life in a Persian Palace.

An Experience as Related in the Diary of Hannah Yoseph, "The Christian Herald's" Medical Missionary.

[Our readers, who have been made familiar with Dr. Yoseph's good work in the Orient since her return to the East from this country, will be interested in the full and graphic account which she sends us of her visit and prolonged stay in the house of a distinguished Persian. The narrative needs no comment. In presenting the truth, it gives a strong argument to Christian people for sending the Gospel to Persia.]

CHAPTER I.

The Journey to the Palace—The Bride—The Shepherd—Meeting With the Princess—The Doctor's First Night in the Palace—Persian Ideas About Lying.

IT was in August, just when grapes begin to get their beautiful crimson color. And just when the bul-bul's sweet song compels the traveler to look for her mitten-like nest swinging from the tender branches of the willow trees.

It was one of these days that the governor requested me to go to his country house (nine or ten miles distant), because his "children were ill" and needed medical attention. A Persian never mentions his wife's name before other men. He speaks of her as, "my family," "my home," "my house," "my children," "they."

Next morning, horses were brought, and we rode through avenues and roads that were thickly shaded with poplar and willow trees. Our horses could hardly pass between the loaded, little brown donkeys. Their drivers wore leaves of castor plant under their hats as a protection against the heat. How hard the donkeys work! It does seem that no one appreciates their faithfulness, for a donkey's owner, when his beast is too tired to travel fast, urges it forward by sticking a large, needle-pointed nail into its hindpart and legs until, as you often see, blood flows from several points.

It would be more just to have the donkey, than the lion, on the national flag. The donkey's service to this country is far more than the lion's. We could no more do without donkeys than Western countries could do without railroads.

A few miles out, our attention was drawn to a group of horsemen who were bringing a bride to the city.

"I hope they are not fighting," said one of my companions. "How frightened she looks, poor little thing! Oh, it is only a mock fight!"

Reapers (men and women) from nearby fields had brought a sheaf of wheat as a gift to the bride. It is an ancient custom of the country to meet travelers and brides with gifts of fruits or sheep. One of the reapers was challenging anyone of the horsemen to box and wrestle with him, or give him a gift of money or second-hand clothes.

One of the horsemen ended the matter by handing a small coin to the reaper, saying:

"I am ready to wrestle or box with any one of you. But being so late, we are in a hurry to take the bride to the city, and have no time to stay here. Therefore accept this, and for the sake of Imam Hoosan let us go in peace."

So the reapers went their way, their sickles resting over their shoulders, their skin-aprons flapping as they went, joyfully singing their harvest songs.

Some of the men of the bridal party were so hilarious that they could hardly sit in their saddles. Some were singing in Persian, some in Turkish; two men were playing pipes, two were beating drums; four or five of them were firing their guns off at one time; others were racing and playing their dancing horses, as only a Persian horseman can. The merry party disappeared from sight and the bride's red costume faded into the distance.

We reached the foot of the mountain, and not far from us saw a shepherd leading his flock to water. As soon as he saw us he took hold of one of the sheep, threw it over his shoulder, and ran toward us. From behind some one said:

"Doctor, slow your horse. The poor shepherd's load is heavy and he is coming to offer it to us."

The frightened sheep is the one to be pitied. The shepherd forcibly stretched the sheep on the hot ground almost under the feet of our horses; took hold of its chin and pulled it back, and with his right hand laid the knife on its throat, and with his feet planted on the feet of the sheep, looked up at us and waited for orders. The poor sheep's eyes were so full of terror that they seemed starting from their sockets. Our travelers, knowing the custom of the country, gave the shepherd a few tanbals; the sheep was released and danced joyfully away. I could not but think of the contrast between the picture of this shepherd, with a lamb in his arms, and that of the Good Shepherd, who loveth his sheep, and giveth his life for them. Here is the translation of a Persian poem, giving the Persian lamb's view of the case:

A LAMB'S PLAINT.

When I was but a little, tender lamb,
My shepherd carried me upon his breast,
Carried me over rocks, and streams, and hedges,
It had been so with shepherds for long ages.
Our shepherd loves us now only for profits,
And holds us in his arms only for gifts;
Casts us upon hot ground and knife in hand,
Holdeth us down and waiteth death's command.
And if you only knew, O traveler dear,
When Kajava passeth the flock near,
How helpless lambs tremble and dread the sight,
And pray the shepherd may not see aright!

The appearance of vineyards and trees give evidence of habitation. The world begins to look like a green sea. Dew-covered grapes, just beginning to ripen, glisten through leaves like jewels in a jeweler's window. Here and there are small booths made of the branches and leaves of trees, to shelter the little Shulamites of twelve and fourteen years of age, who watch over the vineyards; a custom dating back to the time of King Solomon. You remember what his "beloved" says, in the Songs of Solomon, "Look not upon me because I am black, because the sun hath looked upon me; my mother's children were angry with me, they made me the keeper of the vineyards."

A little Shulamite rushed down from one of the booths to the vineyards and picked some clusters of fine grapes and offered them to us. We gave her a few tanbals, and she said:

"I had been waiting for travelers to pass for so long, and now these tanbals are my kismat (portion), and I am going to buy with them a little chewing gum and some silk thread to embroider my cap with."

The governor's palace, a half mile distant, keeps peeping out at us, now on one side of the road and then on the other, until at last we stand before the immense gate made of walnut trees, mounted and fastened with strips of iron.

All the buildings (three or four in number) are surrounded with a mud wall, eight feet high. The gate is guarded by soldiers, who keep constant watch, standing like sentinels, with muskets at rest. They saluted as we passed. Through extensive grounds we drove to a second mud wall, fourteen feet high, and passed in front of a small door. A servant called, "Calbally, come and lead Hakum Khanim (the doctor) to haramkhana" (the harem).

THE GOVERNOR AND HIS WIFE.

A few yards from the door, an old man of eighty sat in the sunshine. When he saw us he gathered his stiff limbs together, put his hands upon the earth, slowly stood up, looked toward us and began to arrange his apparel, drawing together the hems of his numerous long coats and straightening his long black pipe-like hat; taking a small comb from his pocket, he proceeded to comb his long, white silvery beard; and all this time we were watching him at his toilet.

Then slowly he walks toward us, never hastening. I think that he must have had donkeys to care for in his younger days. He said his "salaam," laying his hands over his breast and bowing. Then he leads us to haramkhana through another yard, smaller than the first, and calls out:

"Aghboorchak (white-haired maid—who is the maid constantly with the lady of the palace—the name is more applicable to a companion than a maid), Hakum has arrived."

A woman of fifty came and led us to an apartment where we were to await the princess. This room was about fifteen yards long and eight yards wide, and the floor was covered with beautiful rugs. On each side were six windows of exquisitely stained-glass, and curtained with thin white silk; over the two doors were thick green silk curtains, wrought with gold thread. On both sides of the room, between the windows, were square, shelf-like recesses about half a yard above the floor and about eight inches deep. These were filled with beautiful chinaware, some of them very large pieces, decorated chiefly with Chinese plays and games; and much exquisite glassware, imported from Constantinople. These finest treasures were for tamasha (show and beauty). On one of the shelves was the useful aptapa and lagan (pitcher and bowl), made of silver, which comes into requisition fourteen or fifteen times in twenty-four hours, after and before eating, and at prayer times. The maid takes the aptapa in one hand, the lagan in the other arm, with a towel thrown over her arm, passes from person to person, putting the lagan on the floor in front of each and pours water over their heads from aptapa. On both sides (lengthwise) of the room are thick and soft mattresses, covering a part of the wall and forming three divisions of yard each from floor to ceiling; just over the mattresses, cylindrical bolsters like sausages, a yard in circumference and a yard long, one on top of the other. Mattresses and cushions are covered with yellow silk. A small revolving, silver looking-glass which was constantly used during receptions, dances, and during conversations was in evidence. There was an open fireplace in the wall.

THE PALACE OF THE PERSIAN GOVERNOR.

From a photograph taken by Miss Yoseph.

While I was admiring the room and its contents, I heard some one in an adjoining apartment say:

"She-dog, why don't you hasten with your aptapa and lagan? Shahzada Khanim (Princess) is waiting." Aghboorchak (as I afterwards learned was the speaker, and she was addressing one of the maids. "If I get hold of you the same voice continued, "I will pull every hair from the roots! she-ass, hurry up!"

Then some one came running, and breathing heavily, and said:

"There it is. I thought the Shahzada Khanim was not up yet. I was watching Fatima dancing in the yard."

Aghboorchak answered, with a sarcastic slap, "I will tell the Shahzada Khanim of you."

Then the maid said, chokingly: "For the sake of Imam Hoozan do not tell her me!"

Aghboorchak replied: "I will not tell on you this time, if you will help me out of a difficulty and not tell any one about it."

The maid answered: "No, you have no luck on me! No, I will not tell anyone."

Then Aghboorchak was saying, with a change of voice and softly: "Your excellency's maid, who brings water for your excellency fell into the pond, and nearly got drowned. She was changing her garments; that was why she was late." (This was untrue).

I knew by the tone of voice that the mistress had entered. One of the maids came in where I was and drew back the curtain from the door, and the governor's wife appeared.

"Salamalikum (Peace to you)," she said. "Alliema salaam (Peace be to you). Kapin lakhshydy? (Are you well?) tepatiini artikh aolsin" (May your favor increase.)

Then she said to her maid, "Sanin (By your God) ask some one to bring Kalian (Persian tobacco pipe) to Hakum Khanim. She must be tired."

I declined, saying that I never made it my custom to smoke.

"You do not drink, you do not smoke? Turning to the maid, she said, "Bring some pomegranate sherbet."

In a little while the maid brought a tray, on which was a large, beautifully carved, wooden spoon, which holds about nine ounces, lying beside it. The sherbet, cool and delicious, was flavored with attar of roses.

The princess was a woman thirty years of age, the mother of ten children; two of her daughters are married, and she has two grand-children. She is, in a way, quite satisfied with her fate, her husband has given her a letter from his mother that as long as she lives, he will marry no one else.

At supper, as we ate together, she said:

"I have heard much about Issa (Jesus), I do admire the Christians. The women free and independent, and men do not marry more than one wife."

After supper I said to the lady of the house: "When I have rested a little I will see why you are not feeling well. Will some one show me where I am going to remain for the night?"

"Shahboorchak," said the lady, "show the doctor hallakhan, and see that everything is ready for her."

The room, into which I was shown, was small and square, the floor was covered with the softest felt of brownish gray color over which was a large piece of white material, called ru-i-parsh (carpet's face). Mattresses and cushions were covered with red silk. The curtains of the windows and the doors, were of dark green braided with gold thread. Its walls like spaces were filled with native glassware, which held home-made ar-ticles oils and infusions, that were manufactured from different kinds of flowers, herbs and seeds. I concluded, and correctly that my room is the drug-store that supplies medicines to the surrounding villages. It is the family collection box. (Everything from this room is given for the sake of charity). The room smelled like a rose garden. The Persian ladies make delicious sweets and candies, which are perfumed with these home-made odors. On a shelf was the everlasting aptapa and jan.

After I was rested, I sent word to the lady that I was coming down to see her. The return message was, "Wait ten minutes. Five minutes later, with Aghboorchak he came in, saying: "I was afraid that you would enter while my sahib (husband) was there, and would say that I am not ill: for six weeks I have been begging him to send for you, all the time telling him that I was ill, and if you had not known—I know that you Christians can lie—you would have made me a liar before my sahib, and he would not believe me any more. You know," she continued, "we could not get along without taking lies; it would never do for us to let our sahibs know everything. We could not exist without lies once in a while. About two weeks ago, another ladies and I wanted to visit a near-by garden. My sahib would not let me go for many circumstances, because, he said, 'men might see you,' and I said to him, 'you know better than I do; being a woman my brain does not understand affairs.' But next day, after my sahib left the city, my friend (who has a sahib who is an opium eater, and does not care where his wife goes, so long as he has his opium, and who lets his wife do as she pleases), came, and we, dressed like men, went to the shrine and came back no one recognized us; but my maid, being quick-headed, left my dervish costume in the room. In the evening my sahib returned, and saw the attire in the khanhana. If he had believed that I had worn it, and had gone out with undue advice, he would have shot me on the spot. But I said to him: 'My maid's brother is a dervish and is going on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and needed some clothing, and, as it was savab (charity) I gave it to her; while she was talking to me, I put, your excellency came in, and she had went out.'"

"What!" she continued, "it is a savab, to tell a lie."

I said "I do not wonder that you speak of having read the Koran all through, but remember that it anywhere forbids falsehood."

"It does not," she replied, "our prophet Baykhambar (prophet) knew that could not get along without it. I could not have brought you here if I had not told my sahib believe I was ill. I could not have asked for you as a guest. Many people would say: 'She is eating and drinking with the unclean Christians, we must not let her mix with us and defile us,' but we ladies here planned your coming, and it is a great pleasure for us to speak and live awhile with one who is different from ourselves. We are so tired of our prisons; we see nothing, and see no one beyond the high walls of our yard. The only place I can go freely, is this yard," extending her hand to the yard. "All! When I go to the yard, it makes me feel sadly. Worse praise be to Allah! Mahomet loved us women as much as he does the birds and butterflies. I go often in the yard and see our own bees, gather the honey, and watch the beautiful butterflies, and singing birds, flying on this flower and that flower, now on this bush, now on roses, then on tulips, then on the grass, again flying over the water and dipping into it—and then they disappear beyond the haramkhana walls and get lost in the air. Do you not see how flushed and red my cheeks have grown?" at the same time looking in a mirror, "My sahib will think that you have already benefited me."

But I said, "I have done nothing for you."

Suddenly she called out. "Iooros! Iooros! (Russia! Russia!) gal boora (come here)."

How God Helps the Sinner to Quit his Sin. Ezek. 18: 20-32; Acts 26: 19, 20.

Infinitely pathetic is the prophet's message, when account is taken of the difference between the Pleader and those to whom the message was sent. God would not compel men to be righteous; he would have them choose righteousness of their own volition. He instructs his messenger to plead with them, not in this instance pressing his own claims on their allegiance and obedience, but urging only their own eternal welfare. He has, he says, no pleasure in their death. Strange that it was necessary to tell them so! But in those days when efforts were made to appease the anger of strange gods by sacrifices, and even in our own day, when many people think of God as a hard, wrathful being, it was well that such a message should come under divine authority. God desires our happiness, then, and that fact ought never to be forgotten. He sees that there is only one way to secure it and that way is righteousness. That is the law of the world, as much a law as gravitation. As inventors and discoverers have found, the only way to success is to find out natural law and place themselves in harmony with it, so the way to spiritual development is to live according to spiritual law. When the Eddystone lighthouse was built, the builders found that howsoever strong they made its walls, the waves could overturn it. But when a builder came who had studied the action of the waves and perceived that by building a circular lighthouse of keystones, the waves would only drive them closer together, he constructed an edifice that no storm could overturn. So it has been in every department of science and industry. To use, not to oppose, natural law, is the secret of success. Spiritual life comes on the same terms. He who sins wrongs his own soul. The drunkard has his morning headache, the wasteful man sinks to poverty. There are corrections on all sides, if we will only heed them. To every man the sad pitying appeal comes, as it came to Paul: "It is hard for thee to kick against the goad." When a man realizes that fact and turns to God, the hand of welcome is held out to him. That is what God wishes to see. Repentance and conversion, howsoever we refine about them, are just that—disgust with sin, a resolve to renounce it and an honest and sincere petition for God's help to live a righteous life. That is the beginning of all good in every human being. That is what Christ came to develop. He was the Hand of God held out to men, the bearer of the power that God gave, the life he imparted, so that poor, weak, sinful, irresolute men, having their better natures reinforced, might become victors in the struggle to overcome their own propensities, to quit sin and to rise out of animalism into the glory of sons of God.

A Home for Orphans.

Miss Clara Somers, of Ocean Grove, N. J., has given to Rev. H. M. Wharton, D.D., of Baltimore, Md., a beautiful Home at Ocean Grove, to be used for the care of orphan children. It consists of a large, new twelve-room house with ten acres of ground, and outbuildings. There are two barns, a carriage house, two henneries, an ice house, summer kitchen, etc. It is situated just outside the limits of Ocean Grove, and is valued at $10,000. The only conditions are, that it be kept as an orphanage and that children of soldiers, American or Cuban, and the children of parents who have been ruined by drink, be given preference, and that it bear the name of "The Willard Home." It will be supported by the free gifts of the people, and be entirely non-sectarian. The Home will be opened in a short time as there is pressing need for it. Any one desiring to aid in the project may address Dr. H. M. Wharton, Baltimore, Md.

This makes the third orphanage which Dr. Wharton has under his care; the other two being the "Whosoever Home" and "Farm" in Virginia, and "The Wharton Industrial School for Colored Children," in Charlotte, North Carolina. All these institutions are dependent upon the contributions of kind-hearted ones who are willing to help the most helpless of the human race. There are no sectarian or denominational lines, and no distinction is made in the reception and care of children or the employment of help. Such enterprises involve heavy expenditures, but Dr. Wharton says no child at any of his Homes has ever gone without a meal or good clothing. He is a pastor and evangelist, and lives by his ministry. He trusts in God for help, and it comes.

Evangelist J. H. Murray, well-known to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, has been strangely led to take charge of the new Home. The lady who gave the property enquired of Mr. Murray the address of Dr. Wharton and in connection discovered that Mr. Murray was without a home. At her suggestion Mr. Murray went there with his family to live and was already on hand when the Home was transferred. So "he just went with it as a part of the outfit." The ways of Providence are mysterious.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Persis Lee's Private Hospital.

THE little mountain farm was beautiful to see on that golden day in the late summer, when, for the first time since June, mother and daughter sat down quite alone by themselves, to eat their supper. It was a relief to set the table for two, and to put on just the bread and butter and honey, the white, creamy pot-cheese, the smoked beef, the steaming tea-pot and the raspberry preserves, and both drew a deep breath of rest. It had been a long summer, full of hard work, but the last lingering boarder had left in the stage two hours ago, and the purse showed a bulging fulness, that in the spring had been pitifully scant and thin.

"Now, mother," said Persis Lee, "we can take it easy about cleaning the house and getting settled for the fall. And don't you think we can afford ourselves a holiday, after all the drudgery, and go for a week to Elsie's and see her new baby, and buy your new gown? There are two errands for us. Elsie must be pining for a sight of you, mother."

"I don't know, Persis. I think maybe we ought to send for Elsie and the children to come here for a while."

"Oh, not just yet, mother. Let us be quiet a little while. I don't want three restless boys and a baby here till I've got over waiting on the boarders. Besides Elsie can't come, the boys will soon start at school again, and she'd rather have us there. I've got to the point where I think we can both be selfish and not commit a sin."

"Well, dear," said the mother, "have it your own way."

This was the usual conclusion of arguments between Mrs. Lee and Persis. The mother was tall, slender and stately-looking, a lady from the top of her silvery white head to the toe of her slipper. She looked as if she were of most independent nature and stubborn fibre. Nobody would have suspected, looking at her, and then at Persis, a wisp of a girl with light brown hair, and soft blue eyes, that the younger was the more resolute character of the two. Persis was thirty years old. She had arrived at a trying phase of life, and a trying period of looks, when the first beauty of her girlhood was a little faded, and she had not yet received any new endowment of charm in its place.

Just now she was very tired and craved change. To make the bread and roast the meat and stir the puddings and broil the steak, and generally to cater and to cook for fourteen hungry city people with sharp mountain appetites, through a hot summer, is, upon the whole, enough to take the spirit out of a woman who is not quite a Hercules.

Elsie, the Lee's married daughter, who lived in the nearest town, twenty miles away, was overjoyed when she saw her own people. With Persis Lee, to plan was to act. And the very next afternoon, after the talk just quoted, saw the house locked up securely, the key and the cat carried to the next neighbors, a half-mile down the mountain, and the two ladies well started on their little jaunt. Rufus Chester, who always did their chores, and looked after their horse and cow, drove them to the station. They were off for a week in the beautiful, golden weather.

Rufus lived at home and came morning and night, to see to the Alderney and old Dan, the sober, middle-aged horse, who led a tranquil existence, lording about the country with his gentle owners.

"Now we have not a care," said Persis, composedly, as she regarded the little trunk and settled her mother's and her own belongings in their many great chamber. "For one week we are going to be as luxurious as if we were millionaires. I don't mean to remember even that I've ever made butter and kneaded bread. I'm going to be a lily of the field."

"Persis, dear," said her mother, "I wish you didn't hate housework so. I wish you could live your life and be happy."

"I wish so, too, dear, but I seem to be of so little use, and one day is so exactly like another. I'm tired out, and not sweet like you. I'm sorry you've found out that I'm discontented. You see, mother dear, you've had your life, and its behind you, and you've memories that nobody can rob you of. But since I left school, not one thing has happened to me. Just the unending procession of the days, going on, on, on, summer boarders every summer, our two selves every winter, and life so narrow. There, I've said it now, and its done me good, and I'll try not to bother you with it again."

"Oh, Persis, dear," said the mother, "if you only had the peace of God!"

"If your prayers could bring it, mother, I would not have long to wait."

And so they went to sleep.

Early the next morning, Elsie's husband, who went to his store before breakfast and returned for the meal, came in full of excitement and eagerness.

"There's a carload of fellows come in from the front, some of them wounded, some sick, looking like ghosts. Persis, you must come down with Elsie and see what can be done for them. The people are fixing up the Town Hall as a hospital. Some of the boys can go to their own homes till their furlough's over, but most haven't got homes here to go to. But that doesn't matter, they belong to us all, and they're welcome to the best they can get, and the best we can give."

That sentiment voiced the feeling of everybody who looked into the pale, sallow faces, and at the gaunt, wasted forms of our volunteers, who, but a few short months before had gone with jaunty steps and smiling eyes to challenge death and right a wrong and stand nobly for our country.

Mrs. Lee took care of the cooing, laughing baby, and her daughters went to the station where already a throng of interested people had gathered, all intent on helping in some way the brave boys in blue. From one to another of the soldiers the women went, asking questions, proffering help.

One slender, white-faced boy, the white hue of long illness having replaced the tan of exposure to the fierce sun, enlisted the quick sympathy of Persis Lee.

"Where is your home?" she asked in a kindly tone.

"Away off in Northern Iowa. The surgeon let me come north with these fellows, because I was sure to die where I was, and I couldn't get home. But I don't know, the journey's been just awful."

"Tell me about your wound. I see you've your arm in a sling."

"I'm mighty lucky to have an arm. The man next me had his shot off from the shoulder. The one next was in the middle of a sentence when a ball came whizzing along, hit him in the temple and over he went, dead. I felt something like an electric shock, then tearing along across my shoulder, and out, just missing my spine, went the ball that did the business for me; it had shattered a small bone and ploughed its way through my right arm. With the other wounded men I was picked up and carried seven miles in a cart to the hospital where my wound was dressed roughly enough, for the doctors were driven to get through the work they had to do. Then I had fever, and I tell you, its hard to have fever and suffer and count the days and lie awake all night, away from home.

"I used to think, if I could see my home again, mother stepping from the stove to the table, making pies and slipping them into the oven; father reading the newspaper, and looking up over his spectacles to read us a bit of news, and Harry standing in the doorway with a bucket of milk. If I could see it all just for a minute, I'd be willing to die."

"Dear," said Persis briskly, "is not to be thought of. You are going to get well and go back to your command as good a man as there is in it, and, in the meantime, if my mother doesn't object, you shall spend your furlough in a real home, a farmhouse, too. How long a furlough is it, by the by? You needn't go to the hospital, I'm sure, if you've had enough of that, as I think you have, to last one man for this war."

The young fellow laughed. Her merry voice and kind manner touched him; if he had had a sister, she might have been something like this bright clever young lady. He was willing: Persis was energetic. That night, Mrs. Lee and Persis stepped blithely around their own house again, not having been gone more than twenty-four hours. In the parlor-chamber, a cool, airy room, on the same floor with the kitchen and living rooms, one wounded guest was comfortably established. The young man from Iowa was on a cot in the sitting-room with the door open, so that he could see all that was going on. Two more men, pale and wan, not wounded, but ghosts of themselves recovering from a deadly fever, were installed in two upper rooms, and Persis Lee's private hospital was in full swing.

Through the weeks of the summer and the fall, Persis kept on; when one batch of sufferers went away, the house was ready for another. There was so much to be done, that she sent to town for a strong maid, a thing that had never been done in the many seasons of summer boarders, but both Mrs. Lee and Persis felt that convalescents must have the best care they could possibly receive, convalescents whose sufferings came from their service in the field.

One day, very late in the fall, a tall, bronzed, bearded stranger made his way to the lonely mountain farm. There were no soldiers there then, and indeed, Persis was too weary to have carried on her labor of love at that time. She was lying back in an easy chair, pale and languid, very unlike her usual brisk self. Her mother was anxious about Persis. It did not seem right to see her so tired, "tuckered out," the neighbors called it.

"I am Harry Bickwell," the young man said, "brother to Jim Bickwell from Iowa, whom you were so good to awhile back. I've come two hundred miles out of my way to bring you my father's and mother's thanks for what you did for Jim, and to get acquainted, if I may, with Miss Persis Lee."

It transpired before long that Harry Bickwell was a widower with three little girls who were the very light of his eyes. Hearing his brother talk of Miss Persis, it had occurred to him that she would make an ideal stepmother, and, odd as it was, he had come from the West with the distinct purpose to woo and win her, and carry her back if he could.

And thus it ended. Mrs. Lee will make her home with Elsie in the future. The little farm is to be sold. Persis, who grows prettier and younger every day, with the love in her heart shining through her eyes, is going to be Harry's wife, a mother to Harry's children, and a sister to Private Jim Bickwell, who considers his brother most fortunate, and thinks Persis "just fine."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

In St. George's Chapel, 1603.*

THE Princess Elizabeth had but a short season of rest at Combe Abbey. The only compensation for her in her speedy removal to Windsor was the prospect of meeting her brother, Prince Henry, whom she had been separated during the last part of her journey from Scotland.

When she arrived at Windsor, eager to see her brother, and to tell him of all she had seen and delighted in at Combe Abbey, it was a keen disappointment to her when she found the Queen had not kept to the day originally fixed, and that there was no brother to greet her. Tears rolled down her cheeks, and it was difficult for Lady Kildare to pacify her.

"He will never come; he will never come!" she cried. "I cannot be happy without my dear brother, my dear brother," she repeated.

But the next day her disappointment was forgotten, as the grandeur of Windsor Castle was opened before her. She listened to the chat that the Lady Anne Clifford, now in attendance upon her, told her of the beauty of Elizabeth, whose portrait hung in the corridor at Windsor—the Queen whose name she bore.

"She is not like the Queen, my mother," the little Princess said. "The Queen, my mother, is far fairer to look upon. My dear mother, Queen Mary, was beautiful. I would I had been named for her. They say the Queen of England hated her mother, kept her in prison, and ——."

Lady Anne Clifford felt they were treading on dangerous ground, and hastened to lead the Princess to the terrace, whence the lovely panorama of widespread fields, and the river, shining in the summer sun, lay before them.

"Windsor is Eton, a college of learning," Lady Anne said. "Your Highness will go there some day."

"My brother is sure to do so." Elizabeth replied. "He loves learning, and can already speak in other languages. I think," she continued, looking from the landscape back to the huge, solid walls of the old castle full of kings and princes, "Windsor is a mighty big, grand place, but I love Combe Abbey best. I would fain return to Combe Abbey. When shall I return there?"

"You must await the King's commands; and you will see grand doings here shortly, for your brother, Prince Henry, is to be made a Knight of the Garter."

Then, with the sudden change from a child's precocious seriousness of bearing and of speech to the free joyousness of childhood, the little Princess summoned one of the maidens always in attendance and bade her show the way to the tennis-court and find balls, for she longed to play. "I would that maiden Lady Katherine were here to play with me; but I shall want no one—no one—when my brother comes—my dear brother!"

So after there was a stir in the great courtyard of the Castle; horsemen galloped up the steep ascent, trumpets sounded, and the long-expected Queen and her eldest son were received with loud huzzas from the people, who came running from all parts of the town of Windsor to bid them welcome.

Prince Henry's first thought was for his sister, and while the Queen and her long train of ladies were passing through to the apartments prepared for her, the Prince turned to a gentleman and said:

"Where shall I find the Princess, my sister?"

"Her Highness was on the terrace an hour ago. I will send a messenger to inform her," was the reply.

"Nay; rather take me to her. This is not a palace, I shall need direction."

Then, with his accustomed courtesy, which never failed, he added, "I shall owe you thanks, sir, for acting as my guide."

The Princess had just returned from the tennis-court, and was at the further end of the terrace when she saw her brother approaching.

With a joyful cry of "My brother! my brother!" she ran swiftly towards him and flung herself into his arms. "Methought you would never come," she said.

The Prince, with his cap in his hand and his arm around his sister, said: "I must do my devoirs to these gentlewomen, Elizabeth; name them to me.

The gallant young Prince was now bowing, with a grace peculiarly his own, to the ladies who were in attendance on his sister; and, looking over the wild landscape, bathed in the sunshine of the last day of June, he said:

"Sure this is a fair heritage; but, for all that, we will not forget Linlithgow, Elizabeth, methinks. I miss the outlines of the blue mountains against the sky. This is a flat land of meadows and rivers and distant woods."

"Yonder is a college of learning, Henry," the Princess said.

"Yes, Eton. I see it, and where is St. George's Chapel? I would fain visit it."

At break of day on the second day of July, Prince Henry awoke, and before his gentlemen in attendance were astir, dressed himself in a loose gown, and, with his fair head uncovered, stole out of the Castle and found his way to St. George's Chapel.

He found all was quiet there. The guards at the door were asleep, and the young Prince passed noiselessly into the Chapel.

The eastern end was lighted by the glory of a sky, where, though the sun had not yet risen, the hues of coming day were making the horizon a vision of loveliness. Pale emerald green was merged into daffodil, and little flocks of cloud caught, one by one, the tender rose color, which is not revealed at any other hour of the day. The hues of sunset may be more gorgeous and of a deeper red, but the hues of dawn have a beauty which is peculiarly their own.

The boy went, as if lead by an unseen power, to the altar steps, where, kneeling, with his head raised and his hands clasped as if in prayer, he might well have been the model for the picture of some knight of olden times who spent the vigil before he received his spurs in fasting and devotion. The boy's spirit was stirred within him, and when he turned to leave the Chapel there was a light upon his young face which told of communion with God.

A Bird's Eye View of the Holy Land. One of the latest and most unique of Bible maps is Mr. D. W. Ellises' Bird's Eye View of the Holy Land. It is lithographed in three colors, makes a very handsome ornament, and will be of great service in explaining to Sunday schools and other classes the general topography of the land of the Saviour. The map is 24 by 36 inches, mounted on heavy linen with roller top and bottom. Price, $1.75. Ellis & Poulter, publishers, Freedman Building, Ogden, Utah.

Our Orphans at Oorfa.

MISS CORINNA SHATTUCK, missionary teacher at Oorfa, in Armenia, writes an interesting letter describing the progress of her orphan charges in the Armenian Mission at that place. She says:

"I have your valuable communication of June 7, and personally, and in behalf of all concerned, sincerely thank your readers for the kind grant made and the assurance of the help continuing for three years. We will now watch the leading of Providence, and if we can see a supply for our teaching force, we may yet let the boys we felt must wait, go on with their mates in September. At least we have no longer to bear anxiety for support of those whom we decided must go even before we fully knew where their funds would come from.

"There is an eagerness about settling into vacation work that is quite in keeping with our boys. Thirty-five are at trades as follows: One in bakery, two at tailoring, nine olaja weaving, three common weaving, four with carpenters, four at kerchief stamping, six at saddlery, and six shoemakers (these last, being oldest, have some work of teaching the younger boys for half a day). They of the household also help in the water-teaming. I see them all. I hear them bustling, shouting, running about. All are in our Father's care. C. SHATTUCK."

HERE AM I.

I HAVE heard thy gentle word
Bidding to thy service, Lord,
And I joyfully reply
Here am I, Lord, here am I.

I will serve thee while I live,
Glad to have one life to give;
Thine to live or thine to die—
Here am I, Lord, here am I.

On thy mission send me forth
With thy message, "Peace to earth,"
To proclaim salvation nigh;
Here am I, Lord, Here am I.

Make me mighty, Lord, and wise,
Strong to help and sympathize,
Thine to serve the souls who sigh—
Here am I, Lord, here am I.

O to set poor captives free
And to lead the lost to thee,
And their deepest needs supply,
Here am I, Lord, here am I.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Flora, Trenton, N. J. How did the ivy get its name?

There are many pretty legends and myths connected with the origin and naming of the plant, but the simple facts shown in the derivation of the word seems explanation sufficient and poetic enough. The Welsh name of the plant is eiddew, the Anglo-Saxon ifig, the Gaelic eidhean. The plant seems very appropriately to take its name from the Gaelic eid, to clothe.

J. K. R., Athens, Ont., Can. Why is the word "seven" used more than any other number in the Bible?

The symbolism of "seven" should be traced back to the symbolism of its component elements, "three" and "four," which represent divinity and humanity. Hence, "seven" represents the union between God and man. Among the Persians, the Greeks, the ancient Indians, the Romans, and all nations where seven days in the week were recognized, the influence of the number seven prevailed. It was called by Cicero "the knot and cement of all things," because in "seven" the spiritual and natural world were comprehended in one idea. Some writers claim that the Hebrews borrowed it from their heathen neighbors. The Sabbath, being the seventh day, suggested seven as the appointment for all sacred periods. The seventh month was ushered in by the Feast of Trumpets; seven weeks was the interval between the Passover and the Pentecost, and so on, recognizing seven as the symbol of all connected with the Divinity.

Miss M. W., Columbus, O. Are signet rings of great antiquity? Have we any record of how they first came to be used?

The earliest mention of signet rings, in sacred or secular history, is probably that found in Gen. 38: 18 25. They may, however, have been in use much earlier. Signets and seals were in use in Egypt at a very early period. Engraved stones were hung on strings and worn about the neck, others were set in rings. Many were made in the form of cylinders, to be rolled over the documents, while the clay or wax was soft. A signet in the Alnwick Museum bears the date of Osirtasen I., or between 2,000 and 3,000 B. C. The ancient Egyptians sealed the tombs of their dead with lumps of clay, and it was customary, on leaving property with strangers, to seal it so that it might not be opened without legal proof of the fact. Many people have the idea that all ancient seals, being signets, were rings to be worn on the hand. This was not the case, neither is it so in the East, where signets are still as common as they were in ancient times.

Elizabeth T. S., New York, writes:

In THE MAIL-BAG of August 10th, in your reply to J. R. L., Newburg, in speaking of an international ocean patrol, you mention the leading navies of the globe beginning "England, France, Germany." There is a country called England, but it is only a part of the British Empire. There is no such thing as an English Navy or Army—it is the British Navy and Army.

Inquirer, Virginia. Some folks who went West a number of years ago, in making a mistake, took the name of Christ name for the last, intending to use it only for a short time, and then remove to a better place where they would receive [illegible] at short notice. They got in strong [illegible] and made good, warm friends and there were until they could not bear the thought of leaving. They joined the church and lived through and began work. Is it right to use the name of God in vain to test why? Will it that there not of heaven.

The changing of a man's name can be done legally by act of the Legislature. Under an assumed name, however innocent the cause of the assumption, the leader of the name is always at a disadvantage and, in certain States, can't legally transact business, or buy, sell or transmit real estate, and a will by such a person may not stand in law. The case you state is a peculiar one. There would seem to be no serious question of morality involved. If, on the whole, it is decided to adhere to the adopted name, and there are good reasons for doing so, a legal right can be acquired through an act of the State Legislature which any legislative member in the district would be willing to introduce.

From an officer in the Volunteer Army, who is doubtless now in Santiago with his command, we received a few days ago this cordial note, written just before leaving camp for Cuba:

MACON, Ga.

Accept our most cordial thanks for the copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that come to Company "C," Third U. S. Vol. Infantry to cheer the soldiers in their monotonous camp-life every week. Let me assure you that its visits are like so many angels bearing messages of mercy and love to the soldiers. Let not those who contribute to the fund that makes it possible for this religious weekly to reach the camp life of the soldier be discouraged. Their labor is not in vain. Could you but see the boys seated around their respective camps, devouring every page, your hearts would leap with joy. We have received orders to be in readiness to move to Santiago at any moment. Oh, that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would follow us there! In that far-off tropical clime, the boys will appreciate it more than ever. I only wish we had twelve times as many copies, so that I could distribute them through the whole regiment. I am a lieutenant in Company "C," and my time is pretty well all taken up with official duties, but I do not neglect to preach to these boys occasionally and to see that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is properly distributed among them.

M. L. WILLIAMS,
2d Lieut. Co. "C," 3d U. S. V. Infantry.

Reader, Lonville, Pa. How many of our soldiers have been cooverted at each camp in the United States during the Gospel meetings held since the war began between the United States and Spain?

We have no data for each camp, but Mr. D. L. Moody, the head of the Christian Commission, in a letter published elsewhere in this issue, estimates that fully 5,000 soldiers regulars and volunteers have confessed Christ since the meetings began. His estimate is entitled to consideration, as he has had the direction and control of the evangelistic movement at all the camps, and consequently should be well informed.

L. J. A., Westfeld, Mass. Was primitive man a savage (barbarian) or a civilized being?

All the evidence goes to show that the earliest members of the human race—Adam and his immediate descendants—were intelligent and possessed of a cultivation sufficient at least for their surroundings and natural requirements. Adam himself was an "instructed" man, that is, his intelligence was a part of the endowment received from the Creator. There is no trace of barbarism or savageism discoverable before the "confusion of tongues," and everything points to the conclusion that the state of the savage, or barbarian, is one of degeneracy from an original condition of intelligence which had been designed to be progressive. Modern research has revealed many examples of degeneracy from primitive intelligence to savage life.

Asa Z. Hall, Cleveland, O., sends us this bright little incident for THE MAIL-BAG:

A traveler arrived in Florida late in the evening. As he gazed at the novel scenery already indistinct in the twilight, some distant palmetto trees attracted his attention. Nothing was discernible but thick tufts of dark green foliage, high in the air. "They remind me of tramps," said he to a friend, "because they have no visible means of support." The morning sun revealed a far different scene. The beautiful masses of fan-like leaves were now seen to be supported by tall, graceful tree-trunks. Like Elisha's servant, our eyes are often dim and our vision blurred. Darkness shuts off the view. All the loftiest heights of religious aspiration, all the holy lives of earth's noblest sons and daughters, seem like tufts of leaves suspended in mid-air. The dawn of faith will reveal a secure Support, as it revealed to Elisha's servant the mountain peopled with flaming hosts.

E. M., New Orleans. To whom does Paul refer in Galatians 1: 19 by the title of James, the Lord's brother? I find two men by the name of James in the lists of the Apostles but neither of them could be the brother of Christ as their parentage is given.

There has been a bitter dispute as to the identity of this James and indeed as to whether Christ had a brother at all. Scholars, however, outside the Roman Catholic Church, are now generally of the opinion that this James was a son of Joseph and Mary; that he did not believe in Christ until after the resurrection; that he was a man greatly respected by the Jews on account of his blameless life, until he became a Christian; that he became the bishop of Jerusalem, and was President of the Council mentioned in Acts 15: 13, and was the author of the Epistle of James.

A. S. Benjamin, Preston, writes:

A letter appeared in the Boston Herald two years ago, saying: "Wear powdered sulphur in your shoes. Many years ago the Hon. Casey Young told me that he and many others escaped from yellow fever, which had been prevailing to a terrible extent in Memphis, by simply wearing powdered sulphur in their shoes. In one instance he had a large number of gentlemen in his offices, and advised them in regard to this matter, and every man who acted upon his advice escaped the fever, while quite a number of them who did not had it. When the grippe was attacking almost every family in Boston a few years ago, I sent an officer to the match factory, who reported that out of all employed, not one had the grippe. I remember, also, in a book written by an eminent German physician, his assertion that persons observing the ordinary rules of health and wearing sulphur constantly in their shoes were protected from cholera."

DAYS OF BLESSING AT NORTHFIELD.

The Annual Bible Conference for the Deepening of Spiritual Life Under Mr. Moody's Leadership Brings a Multitude of Christians Together.

(See First Page Illustrations.)

SACRED memories of deep spiritual experience cling about the name of Northfield. Its annual Conferences have been a source of stimulus and renewed consecration to thousands of ministers and Christian workers. Soldiers in Christ's army weary with their struggle with the powers of evil, worn and depressed in their effort to overcome the indifference and worldliness of their people, have gone in past years to Northfield and there sitting at the feet of Christ and holding communion with him, have gained new power and have returned to their spheres of labor invigorated and energized for a renewal of the battle. It is not the place that gives this strength, although this is wonderfully beautiful, and its pure and quiet are soothing to the troubled mind. The spiritual atmosphere, the contact with consecrated souls and the intense earnestness pervading the great assemblies are the means of gaining the blessing which Christ gives by the Holy Spirit to those who unite together in seeking it.

MR. MOODY'S MARKED BIBLE.

Mr. Moody, who arranges these conferences, is a host in himself. His stimulating words, his strong, unswerving faith, and his indomitable energy are contagious, and he always succeeds in getting assistance from some eminent teachers, either American or foreign, who are specially qualified for the work of deepening the spiritual life. They are men who believe fully in the power of Christ, and are thoroughly consecrated to soul and service. This year, in addition to such men as Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, Major Whittle, Dr. Wilton Merle Smith, of New York, Dr. Wharton, of Baltimore, Dr. Teunis Hamlin, of Washington, D. C., and Dr. Torrey, of Chicago, Mr. Moody had brought over from England the two famous preachers who were heard at Northfield last year, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and Rev. Geo. H. Macgregor. Mr. Moody appears to have had a prevision of the season of blessing that would come from the preaching of these men of God, for he lengthened the conference to three weeks. It was thought that probably this would result in decreasing the attendance at the daily meetings, but there was no decrease. Never before were there so many people at Northfield, and while all the meetings were largely attended, some of the audiences numbered fully three thousand persons.

An idea of the way the days pass at Northfield during the Conference may be obtained from the following description of one day as witnessed by a correspondent of the New York Tribune: "Immediately following breakfast at the hotel and the several halls, the guests gather for family prayers, and after singing one or two Gospel hymns a clergyman or other Scripture worker will read a Scripture passage and comment briefly upon it, and then offer prayer. These little gatherings in the early morning hours are among the most delightful services of the day. Every morning one of the speakers goes to Camp Northfield, on the hill overlooking the Auditorium, and conducts family prayer for the young men who are tenting there. This morning it was Dr. A. C. Dixon, of New York, spoke to the boys.

Shortly after 9 o'clock the morning congregation begins to gather in the Auditorium, and at 9.45 o'clock the choir begins the praise service, which is led by Mr. Sankey or Mr. Stebbins. At 10 o'clock Mr. Moody comes in and takes charge of the meeting. Hymns, solos, choruses, prayer and comment occupy three-quarters of an hour, and at 10.45 o'clock the first sermon begins. This morning Mr. Morgan preached first and was followed, without an intermission by Mr. Macgregor. To-morrow the order will be reversed—Mr. Macgregor being the first speaker. The morning service closes soon after 12 o'clock.

"Dinner is served at 12:30, and at 3 o'clock Dr. Torrey preaches upon "The Holy Spirit." Every day, at this hour, he has the same general subject. At 4 o'clock daily V. D. David, the Tamil evangelist, speaks at Round Top. At the same hour Charles Dudley Smith, of London, speaks at the church to the children. At 6:30 o'clock the Round Top meeting is held, the Rev. Dr. Wilton Merle Smith, of New York, being the leader to-day. An hour later a service of song begins in the auditorium, and at 8 o'clock the sermon is delivered, with Dr. Dixon as the preacher. Not much time is left for rest or recreation for one who attends all of the meetings, and much of the time which would be available for these purposes is taken up in discussing what has been heard at one of the services. Now and then, however, one is found wise enough to follow Mr. Moody's advice and break entirely away from the meeting for an afternoon, and driving parties may be seen starting for Mount Hermon, Winchester and Brattleboro."

Mr. Moody encourages out-door games, having a firm belief in the wisdom of the old aphorism about having a sound mind in a sound body. A base ball game was played every day, and the tennis courts were generally in use. Much interest was taken in a match between the members of the Young Men's Christian Association, who were camping in the neighborhood, and the clergymen at Northfield, in which the victory went to the latter. On this question of recreation Mr. Moody is very emphatic. At one of the meetings he said: "A young man came to me yesterday, and with diffidence asked me if I was willing that the young people should play tennis when the meetings are in progress. I told him certainly. The young people can play tennis or baseball or football all day if they want to do so. If we can't make these meetings interesting enough to draw them in away from their games, let them play. And, then, I am glad to see proper recreations. If we had not taken these English brethren down to the house evenings, after the meetings, and had a little let-up, they would have been on their backs. I believe in religion, but I have not got to keep talking about it day and night. I love my wife awake or asleep, but I do not have to tell her so every five minutes. Some people are so pious that they cannot even go to the table to eat a meal without having a Bible in their laps. I am afraid of such people and I always run away from them. Let us have our season of uplifting and our times of pleasure also. I am glad to see so many young people at Northfield. There are more this year than ever before."

One of the most interesting days of the Convention was that on which the cornerstone of the new chapel on Mount Hermon was laid. The history of that chapel was told by Mr. H. M. Moore, of Boston, who performed the ceremony. He said: "Perhaps some of you will ask how this chapel came to be built. Some of us who are here present to-day know that at some of the sessions of the past conferences Mr. Moody some one afternoon always invited the friends to visit Mount Hermon, and he invariably took them up upon this beautiful spot, which he named 'Temptation Rock,' and, when asked why he called it Temptation Rock, he replied: 'Because I am in hopes some one will be tempted to build a chapel here.' Two years ago, after one of these gatherings, as I walked out of the village church, the Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, took me by the arm, and said: 'How I wish Mr. Moody could have that chapel built which he so much desires. He has a great many dear friends in Great Britain, who, I think, would be glad to contribute toward a birthday fund, with which he could erect a chapel. Don't you think that his friends in the United States would be glad to join in such a gift?" The result was, that on Mr. Moody's sixtieth birthday, which occurred last year, $15,000 sent from England, and another $15,000 subscribed by friends in the United States, were in hand to build the chapel. It was then contemplated to build it of brick, but it has since been decided to use Northfield granite, and another $10,000 has been raised to cover the extra expense.

ONE OF THE MEETINGS AT ROUND TOP.

INTERIOR OF THE AUDITORIUM AT NORTHFIELD, MASS.

The two speakers who have been heard most frequently during those three wonderful weeks at Northfield, are both remarkable men. They are comparatively young, but they have attained commanding positions in the religious life of their own country. Mr. Campbell Morgan is pastor of a Congregational Church in the Northern district of London, which has been famous for more than two hundred years for the eminence of its pastors. It was formerly located near Temple Bar, and there it had among its pastors, Richard Baxter, author of "The Saints' Everlasting Rest." When the Government required its site for the new law courts, a new building was erected in a district chiefly occupied by the class of clerks and professional men who had attended it in its old location. The church under Mr. Morgan's pastorate has increased and extended its activities. Its Sunday School, Christian Endeavor Societies, Missionary Societies, Watchers' Band, Dorcas Society, Gymnastic and Recreation Society, and a number of other organizations keep the interest of the members at an intense pitch, and in all of them the stimulus of the pastor's individuality is felt.

Mr. Macgregor is a Scotchman by birth. His father was an intimate friend of the late Dr. McCosh, of Princeton. He had a distinguished career at the University of Edinburgh, and commenced his ministerial work in an important church in Aberdeen, where in five years the membership increased from five hundred to fifteen hundred. He is now pastor of a Presbyterian Church at Notting Hill, London, where the membership has trebled in number in three years. Mr. Macgregor is one of the leaders of the Keswick movement, with which Mr. Morgan is also in sympathy. This is based on a profound conviction that to the man who will give himself up entirely to God's guidance, there comes not only direction, but a higher, purer life, a conquest over sin, and a peace that passes understanding. The preaching of both men at Northfield was of a most searching, personal character. There was little of eloquence, but throughout a pleading with the Christian to give up anything in his life which separated him from God and hindered his usefulness in the world.

The sermons were pointed with apt illustrations and incidents. One that was particularly appreciated occurred in a sermon on "the New Song" that is sung in heaven. Mr. Morgan said: "It was my pleasure to know intimately Peter Mackenzie, a Wesleyan preacher in England, full of humor and a most godly man. He was preaching once from the text, 'And they sang a new song,' and he said: 'Yes, there will be singing in heaven, and when I get there I will want to have David with his harp and Paul and Peter and other saints gather around for a sing. And I will announce a hymn from the Wesleyan Hymnal. Let us sing hymn No. 749. 'My God, my father, while I stray.' But some one will say, 'That won't do. You are in heaven, Peter; there is no straying here.' And I will say, 'Yes, that is so. Let us sing No. 651, 'Though waves and storms go over my head.' But another saint will say, 'Peter you are in heaven now, you forget that there are no storms here. We will put you out unless you stop giving out inappropriate hymns,' then I will say, 'What shall we sing?' And they will all say, 'Sing the new song, the song of Moses and the Lamb.'"

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

DIVINE EVOLUTION.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Romans 1: 22, 23:

Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds and four-footed beasts and creeping things.

THIS is a full-length portrait of an evolutionist who substitutes the bestial origin for the Divine origin. I showed you last week that evolution was contradicted by the Bible, by science, by observation, and by common sense: that the Bible account of the creation of man and of brute and of the world, and the evolutionist's account collided with each other, as certainly as two express trains going in opposite directions at sixty miles the hour, their locomotives meeting on the same track. I showed that all the evolution scientists, without any exception, were pronounced infidels: that evolution was a heathenism thousands of years old: that such men as Agassiz and Hugh Miller and Farraday and Dawson and Dana had for that doctrine of evolution unlimited contempt. I showed you that their favorite theory of the "survival of the fittest" was an absurdity and an untruth, and that natural evolution was always downward and never upward, and that there had never been any improvement for man or beast or world except through the direct or indirect influence of our glorious Christianity. And in the closing part of that sermon I told you I was not a pessimist, but an optimist, that instead of it being eleven o'clock at night it is half past five in the morning.

Now, I go on to tell you, it seems to me that evolutionists are trying to impress the great masses of the people with the idea that there is an ancestral line leading from the primal germ on up through the serpent, and on up through the quadruped, and on up through the gorilla, to man. They admit that there is a "missing link," as they call it, but there is not a missing link—it is a whole chain gone. Between the physical construction of the highest animal, and the physical construction of the lowest man, there is a chasm as wide as the Atlantic Ocean. Evolutionists tell us that somewhere in Central Africa, or in Borneo, there is a creature half-way between the brute and the man, and that that creature is the highest step in the animal ascent and the lowest step in the human creation. But what are the facts? The brain of the largest gorilla that was ever found is thirty cubic inches, while the brain of the most ignorant man that was ever found is seventy. Vast difference between thirty and seventy. It needs a bridge of forty arches to span that gulf.

Besides that, there is a difference between the gorilla and the man—a difference of blood globule, a difference of nerve, a difference of muscle, a difference of bone, a difference of sinew. The horse is more like man in intelligence, the bird is more like him in musical capacity, the mastiff is more like him in affection. That eulogized beast of which we hear so much, represented on the walls of cities thousands of years ago, is just as complete as it is now, showing that there has not been a particle of change. Besides that, if a pair of apes had a man for descendant, why would not all the apes have the same kind of descendants? Can it be that that one favored pair only was honored with human progeny? Besides that, evolution says that as one species rises to an other species, the old type dies off. Then how is it that there are whole kingdoms of chimpanzee and gorilla and baboon?

The evolutionists have come together and have tried to explain a bird's wing. Their theory has always been that a faculty of an animal while being developed must always be useful and always beneficial, but the wing of a bird, in the thousands of years it was being developed, so far from being any help must have been a hindrance until it could be brought into practical use away on down in the ages. Must there not have been an intelligent will somewhere that formed that wonderful flying instrument, so that a bird five hundred times heavier than the air can mount it and put gravitation under claw and beak? That wonderful mechanical instrument, the wing, with between twenty and thirty different apparati curiously constructed, does it not imply a divine intelligence? Does it not imply a direct act of some outside being? All the evolutionists in the world cannot explain a bird's wing, or an insect's wing.

So they are confounded by the rattle of the rattlesnake. Ages before that reptile had any enemies, this warning weapon was created. Why was it created? When the reptile, far back in the ages had no enemies, why this warning weapon? There must have been a divine intelligence foreseeing and knowing that in ages to come that reptile would have enemies, and then this warning weapon would be brought into use. You see evolution at every step is a contradiction or a monstrosity. At every stage of animal life as well as at every stage of human life, there is evidence of direct action of divine will.

Besides that, it is very evident from another fact that we are an entirely different creation, and that there is no kinship. The animal in a few hours or months comes to full strength and can take care of itself. The human race for the first one, two, three, five, ten years is in complete helplessness. The chick just come out of its shell begins to pick up its own food. The dog, the wolf, the lion, soon earn their own livelihood and act for their own defence. The human race does not come to development until twenty or thirty years of age, and by that time the animals that were born the same year the man was born—the vast majority of them have died of old age. This shows there is no kinship, there is no similarity. If we had been born of the beast, we would have had the beast's strength at the start, or it would have had our weakness. Not only different but opposite.

Darwin admitted that the dovecote pigeon has not changed in thousands of years. It is demonstrated over and over again that the lizard on the lowest formation of rocks was just as complete as the lizard now. It is shown that the ganoid, the first fish, was just as complete as the sturgeon, another name for the same fish now. Darwin's entire system is a guess, and Huxley, and John Stuart Mill, and Tyndall, and especially Professor Hæckel, come to help him in the guess, and guess about the brute, and guess about man, and guess about worlds, but as to having one solid foot of ground to stand on, they never have had it and never will have it. I put in opposition to these evolutionist theories the inward consciousness that we have no consanguinity with the dog that fawns at our feet, or the spider that crawls on the wall, or the fish that flops in the frying pan, or the crow that swoops on the field carcass, or the swine that wallows in the mire. Everybody sees the outrage it would be to put aside the Bible record that Abraham begat Isaac, and Isaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat Judah, for the record that the microscopic animalcule begat the tadpole, and the tadpole begat the polywog, and the polywog begat the serpent, and the serpent begat the quadruped, and the quadruped begat the baboon, and the baboon begat man.

The evolutionists tell us that the apes were originally fond of climbing the trees, but after awhile they lost their prehensile power, and therefore could not climb with any facility, and hence they surrendered monkeydom and set up in business as men. Failures as apes, successes as men. According to the evolutionists a man is a bankrupt monkey.

I pity the person who in every nerve and muscle and bone and mental faculty and spiritual experience does not realize that he is higher in origin and has had a grander ancestry than the beasts which perish. However degraded men and women may be, and though they may have foundered on the rocks of crime and sin, and though we shudder as we pass them, nevertheless, there is something within us that tells us they belong to the same great brotherhood and sisterhood of our race, and our sympathies are aroused in regard to them. But gazing upon the the swiftest gazelle, or upon the tropical bird of most flamboyant wing, or upon the curve of grandest courser's neck, we feel there is no consanguinity. It is not that we are stronger than they, for the lion with one stroke of his paw could put us into the dust. It is not that we have better eyesight, for the eagle can descry a mole a mile away. It is not that we are fleeter of foot, for a roebuck in a flash is out of sight, just seeming to touch the earth as he goes. Many of the animal creation surpassing us in fleetness of foot and in keenness of nostril and in strength of limb: but notwithstanding all that, there is something within us that tells us we are of celestial pedigree. Not of the mollusk, not of the riziped, not of the primal germ, but of the living and omnipotent God. Lineage of the skies. Genealogy of heaven.

I tell you plainly that if your father was a muskrat and your mother an opossum, and your great aunt a kangaroo, and the toads and the snapping turtles were your illustrious predecessors, my father was God. I know it. I feel it. It thrills through me with an emphasis and an ecstasy which all your arguments drawn from anthropology and biology and zoology and morology and paleontology and all the other ologies can never shake.

Evolution is one great mystery. It hatches out fifty mysteries and the fifty hatch out a thousand, and the thousand hatch out a million. Why, my brother, not admit the one great mystery of God and have that settle all the other mysteries? I can more easily appreciate the fact that God by one stroke of his omnipotence could make man than I could realize how out of five million of ages he could have evolved one, putting on a little here and a little there. It would have been just as great a miracle for God to have turned an orang-outang into a man as to make a man out and out—the one job just as big as the other.

It seems to me we had better let God have a little place in our world somewhere. It seems to me if we cannot have him make all creatures we had better have him make two or three. There ought to be some place where he could stay without interfering with the evolutionists. "No," says Darwin, and so for years he is trying to raise fan-tailed pigeons and to turn these fan-tail pigeons into some other kind of pigeon, or to have them go into something that is not a pigeon—turning them into quail, or barnyard fowl or brownthresher. But pigeon it is. And others have tried with the ox and the dog and the horse, but they stayed in their species. If they attempt to cross over it is a hybrid, and a hybrid is always sterile and goes into extinction. There has been only one successful attempt to pass over from speechless animal to the articulation of man, and that was the attempt which Balaam witnessed in the beast that he rode: but an angel of the Lord, with drawn sword, soon stopped that long-eared evolutionist.

But says some one, "if we cannot have God make a man let us have him make a horse." "Oh, no!" says Huxley, in his great lectures in New York years ago. No, he does not want any God around the premises. God did not make the horse. The horse came of the pliohippus, and the pliohippus came from the protohippus, and the protohippus came from the miohippus, and the miohippus came from the meshohippus, and the meshohippus came from the orohippus, and so away back, all the living creatures, we trace it in a line until we get to the moneron, and no evidence of divine intermeddling with the creation until you get to the moneron, and that, Huxley says, is of so low a form of life that the probability is it just made itself or was the result of spontaneous generation. What a narrow escape from the necessity of having a God!

As near as I can tell, these evolutionists seem to think that God at the start had not made up his mind as to exactly what he would make, and having made up his mind partially, he has been changing it all through the ages. I believe that God made the world as he wanted to have it, and that the happiness of all the species will depend upon their staying in the species where they were created.

Once upon a time, there was in a natural amphitheatre of the forest a convention of animals, and a gorilla from Western Africa came in with his club and pounded "Order!" Then he sat down in a chair of twisted forest root. The delegation of birds came in and took their position in the galleries of the hills and the tree tops. And a delegation of reptiles came in, and they took their position in the pit of the valley. And the tiers of rocks were occupied by the delegation of intermediate animals, and there was a great aquarium and a canal leading to it through which came the monsters of the deep to join the great convention. And on one table of rock there were four or five primal germs under a glass case, and in a cup on another table of rock there was a quantity of protoplasm. Then this gorilla of the African forest with his club pounded again: "order! order!" and then he cried out, "Oh, you great throng of beasts and birds and reptiles and insects, I have called you together to suppose that we move up into the human race and be beasts no longer; too long already have we been hunted and caged and harnessed; we shall stand it no longer." At that speech the whole convention broke out into roars of enthusiasm like as though there were many menageries being fed by their keepers, and it did seem as if the whole convention would march right up and take possession of the earth and the human race. But an old lion arose, his mane white with many years, and he uttered his voice, and when that old lion uttered his voice all the other beasts of the forest were still, and he said: "Peers, brothers and sisters of the forest. I think we have been placed in the spheres for which we were intended; I think the Creator knew the place that was good for us." He could proceed no further, for the whole convention broke out in an uproar like the House of Commons when the Irish question comes up, or the American Congress the night of adjournment, and the reptiles hissed with indignation at the leonine Gambetta, and the frogs croaked their contempt, and the bears growled their contempt, and the panthers snarled their disgust, and the insects buzzed and buzzed with excitement, although the gorilla of the African forest with his club pounded, "order, order!" there was no order; and there was a threshing out of adderine sting, and a swinging of elephantine tusk, and a stroke of bear and a swing of claw until it seemed as if the convention would be massacred.

Just at that moment, at the door of the natural amphitheatre of the forest, the curtain of the leaves lifted, and the bars and bars of the tree branches were shoved back, and there appeared Agassiz, and Audubon, and Silliman, and Moses. And Agassiz cried out, "Oh, you beasts of the forests, I have studied your ancestral records and found you always have been beasts, you always will be beasts; be content to be beasts." And Audubon aimed his gun at a bald-headed eagle which dropped from the gallery, and as it dropped struck a serpent that was winding around one of the pillars to get higher. And Silliman threw a rock into the tertiary formation at the mammalia and Moses thundered, "Every beast after its kind, every bird after its kind, every fish after its kind." And lo! the parliament of wild beasts was prorogued and went home to their constituents; and the bat flew out into the night, and the lizard slunk under the rock, and the gorilla went back to the jungle, and a hungry wave passing out ate up the primal germs, and a clumsy buffalo upset the protoplasm, and the lion went to his lair, and the eagle went to his eyrie, and the whale went to his palace of crystal and coral, and there was peace—peace in the air, peace in the waters, peace in the field. Man in his place; the beasts of the earth in their places.

But, my friends, evolution is not only infidel and atheistic and absurd; it is brutalizing in its tendencies. If there is anything in the world that will make a man bestial in his habits it is the idea that he was descended from the beast. Why, according to the idea of these evolutionists we are only a superior kind of cattle, a sort of Alderney among other herds. The l sure, we browse on better pasture, and cions, but then we are only Southdowns

REDEEMING THE CRIMINAL.

The New York State Reformatory Work for Fallen Humanity — Converting Young Offenders into Useful Citizens.

OUR readers, who have every movement for reclaiming fallen humanity, at heart, will read with interest of the work being done in this direction by the New York State Reformatory at Elmira. If any advance in civilization demonstrates the fact that Christ's spirit is permeating society and government, it is the establishment of penal institutions whose object is the reformation of young criminals. Surely if any prisoner should have the visitation of those imbued with the Master's spirit, it is the lad or the young man who by inheritance and association, has not had a fair chance to know right from wrong, but whose youth makes reformatory processes possible. Not only are such systems desirable for the benefit of the criminal, but for the benefit of society, to which, if possible, he should always be returned from prison a useful and self-supporting citizen.

The average age of prisoners received is between sixteen and twenty years. Of the 8,786 offenders admitted into the institution since its founding twenty-two years ago, only one per cent. began life in good home environments; and a heavy percentage were children of insane or intemperate parents. Yet with the curse of this inheritance and of the felony for which they were committed hanging over them, a large proportion have been released, or graduated, from the reformatory, competent workmen, able and willing to make an honest living, and many instances might be cited to show the wonderful transformation wrought in these men by the training they receive. During the present year 613 prisoners have been received, drawn from the State Industrial School at Rochester, the House of Refuge at Crandall's Island, through committals by the United States Court, and conviction of felonies by the New York Courts of Record. The total number discharged during the year was 520. The average number of inmates at one time is about 1,500—a large field, this, for true missionary work. As the number of committals increases with each year, the need for more room is greater, and the importance of making appropriation for such enlargement cannot be too strongly urged upon the Legislature.

The purpose of the Reformatory (says the Board of Managers' report) is to train the inmates in industry, intelligence and self-control until they who have shown themselves unsafe shall become reasonably safe to go at large. Their reluctance to enter upon the prescribed training treatment must be overcome, and they must be fitted to live orderly, self-supporting lives in free society, or they should be retained in custody until that purpose is accomplished. The opportunities and privileges supplied here are unequaled in any prison establishment anywhere. They are such as would strongly appeal to a normal and better class of young men as a rare opportunity to obtain an education together with industrial training. . . The public does not know that the influence of imprisonment upon this class of offenders, if it does not accomplish their improvement and so contribute to the public security when they are released, will of necessity increase their criminous characteristics, and so increase the danger to society from them when they are again at liberty.

MECHANICAL DRAWING IN MANUAL TRAINING DEPARTMENT.

A CLASS IN SLOYD IN THE REFORMATORY "KINDERGARTEN."

A CLASS IN WOOD-TURNING.

The reformatory is, in fact, a great school of industrial and manual training, with departments of letters, military, discipline and physical culture. The School of Letters embraces the entire reformatory population, and in it are found illiterates who can neither read nor write, and men who study with pleasure and profit percentage and its applications, history, literature, and ethics. In the ethics class, the prisoners discuss questions bearing upon social and political duties of the individual with surprising interest and discrimination. A Normal Class of thirty to forty inmate teachers who are reformed criminals assist the Director and the Lecturer. In this, as well as in all other departments, utilitarian principles govern. What will be useful to the men in free life is carefully considered. Maps, blackboard drawings, and stereopticon slides are freely used. In nature studies an aim kept constantly in mind is the leading of the thoughts of the men from the thing created to the Creator. In the history course, a purpose kept steadily in view is enabling the men to appreciate the privileges and duties of American citizenship. Lecturer Chapman says:

> Looking back over the year, I ask myself, "What is there to show for the work?" The answer is full of encouragement. Evidences of progress, quickening, and the power of rational self-direction are too frequent and too plain to raise questioning. Watching the men from week to week and month to month, one sees changes in the facial lines which correspond to changes within. But most of the changes are so gradual and subtle that they pass unnoticed, until one suddenly and in some unexpected way, is made conscious that a man who seemed to be unmoved and unaffected has been all the time undergoing physical, mental and moral uplifting.

The law prohibiting manufacturing in State penal institutions, threw many prisoners out of employment: and to meet this condition day classes were organized in every department of the Trades School, with the exception of the cloth-cutting, stenography and type-writing, wood-turning and machine wood-working classes, which continue to meet as before in the evenings. In addition to the classes in drawing, barbering, bricklaying, blacksmithing, tinsmithing, etc., which make up the very full complement of the Trades School studies, classes in color-mixing and stone masonry were lately organized.

The Manual Training Department (only three years old) commands particular interest. It was designed to meet the needs of men especially defective. The courts commit men to the Reformatory under the indeterminate sentence system (although maximum sentence is fixed) leaving the period of "parole" commission to be determined by the Board of Managers. To obtain parole, the Board demands that men must pass successive examinations in Trades School, and Department of Letters, and shall have a sustained perfect demeanor record for four months, upon fulfilment of which conditions they are released. It was discovered that many, after long stay and hard effort, could not bring themselves up to this standard because of deep physical and moral limitations. Hence, the Manual Training School, the "kindergarten" of the Reformatory, was inaugurated, and graded classes organized in athletics, calisthenics, clay-modeling, sloyd, mental arithmetic, sentence-building, etc. Many prisoners, who had failed in the Trades School, passed from successful examinations in this to similar triumphs in that. The gymnasium, the baths, the military drill and discipline have been important adjuncts to this as well as to other departments. One prisoner, who had made a hopeless record before his entrance into the kindergarten, has made such happy progress since that time that he is now retained as an instructor. The Year-Book, a well-prepared volume, and the photographs on this page (received through courtesy of the officials) are the product of prisoners' labor. J. B. Rathbone is President of Board of Managers; Z. R. Brockway, Superintendent; able instructors direct the different departments.

SINFUL INDULGENCE.

S. S. Lesson for Sept. 11. Amos 6: 1-8. Golden Text, Isaiah 28: 7.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

IN the chapter before us God gives us a picture of Israel and Judah, Samaria and Zion during a time of outward prosperity in the reign of Uzziah, King of Judah, and of Jeroboam II., King of Israel. "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion, and to them that are secure in the mountain of Samaria, the notable men of the chief of the nations, to whom the house of Israel come" (Amos 6: 1, R.V.). "Israel was destined to be set on high above all nations of the earth" (Deut. 28: 1). But God's ancient people greatly mistook their calling in turning the great advantages which God had given to them into a means of exalting and indulging themselves. The Lord elected them to be "high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honor; and that thou mayest be a holy people unto the Lord thy God, as he hath spoken" (Lev. 26: 19).

Instead of understanding this high vocation, the children of Israel followed in the wake of our first parents and took from the world for themselves what they chose, or esteemed, "good for food," what they regarded as "pleasant to the eyes," what they "desired to make one wise" (Gen. 3: 6), and thus "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," "all that is in the world" (1. John 2: 16), was allowed to degrade from their high estate the people whom God intended as the chief of the nations before him! How sad is the prophet's appeal, "Pass ye unto Calneh (in Assyria), and see, and from thence go ye to Hamath the great (in Syria), and thence go down to Gath of the Philistines; be they better than these kingdoms? or their border than your border?"

Moses, of whom Israel was proud, although they departed from his teachings and from the witness of his life, was indeed a witness against them. In his holy jealousy that God should have his way with his people, and that they should have to do immediately with their God, he had said, "Wherein shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? Is it not in that thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and thy people from all the people that are upon the face of the earth" (Exod. 33: 16). What would it have been for Moses to have seen the declension of his people when they chose a king that they might not be separated, and when they had so far succeeded in doing away the barriers which God had placed between them and the idolatrous people around them, that the prophet absolutely put it to themselves to judge whether in anything they were better than the heathen.

But if our God called his ancient people to be separate, how much more has he in these last days spoken unto us by a Son, and said to us Christians with trumpet voice, Ye "are not of the world even as I am not of the world" (John 17: 14, 16)! May he not, he who is shortly coming again, ask the solemn searching question, as he points to the heathen nations around us, "Are ye better than these kingdoms? Are ye more universally than they? Are ye more self-denying than they?"

What was the specific indictment against his ancient people? "Ye that put far away the evil day and cause the seat of violence to come near." A people that would not face suffering but attempted to evade it, things not going well by reason, but by drawing in of expenses, no lessening of the staff of servants or of the choice of dishes at table, no self-denial in dress, no giving up of needless luxuries, the intoxicant, the cigar, the novel, the absorbing book, the social gathering, the journey of pleasure. And why? The hand of God who is speaking to his would-be children, Ye "are not of the world, even as I," is unheard. "We shall do as we like," was the heathen-like reply, "who is lord over us" (Ps. 12: 12)? "By thus doing, they cause the seat of violence to draw near." A crisis must come, they that sow the wind must reap the whirlwind (Hosea 8: 7). How terribly visible this is in the self-indulgence in drink!

And again, "That lie upon beds of ivory," when a plain, wooden or iron bed would afford equal rest, "that stretch themselves upon their couches" [or "abound with superfluities," margin] "and eat of the lambs out of the flock and the calves out of the midst of the stall,"—seeking the very best and most appetizing food. "That chant to the sound of the viol and invent to themselves instruments of music like David; that drink wine in bowls (not glasses) and anoint themselves with the chief ointments," seeking every device to please and pamper themselves—"but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph." Nothing hardens the heart like self-indulgence; no tyrant rivets on his chains so firmly, no master is so inexorable in his requirements as an indulged self. The drunkard, the debauchee, the pleasure-seeker are slaves.

No heart for the affliction of Joseph! Callous to the claims of the kingdom of God and his people, "the poor of this world," whom God hath chosen to be "rich in faith" (James 2: 5); no heart for the widow and the orphan, whom God has taken under his immediate protection, no eye for the suffering, the sorrow, the distress, to help which it is our privilege to deny ourselves as Christ denied himself.

The terrible part of it is that this does not only apply to those who are outward members of churches, but also to many who really know something of God's pardoning love, but in whom selfish principle is strong, even in their work for God. They will work, if it is in connection with others in their own station in life, but they will not be associated with those whom they think beneath them. They will choose a work which will especially give room to the display of their special talents, but are by no means ready to put their hands to anything, or to accept any position which is needing a worker, and which God puts before them. It is this provision for self, for its importance, for its comfort, for its "own way" (Isa. 53: 6) which eats the life of missionary work abroad, and of the work of God at home.

Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive. (II. Kings 15: 29). Captivity had been declared as the last but one of many judgments which should come upon the children of Israel if they would not hearken to and obey their God. The last and final judgment is upon them now; they are scattered among the nations (Lev. 26: 33).

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

EASE and comfort and wealth had come to Israel in the time of Amos. The long period during which the people had been harassed and worried by the incursions of the Syrians, was over. There were no raids from Damascus. The people could plant and till the ground with the certainty of reaping the harvest. Their king, Jeroboam II., recovered the land and the cities that Benhadad had wrested from his father and grandfather. He had also re-established supremacy over the nations on the east and south-east. Trade had developed and Israel was enjoying more peace and prosperity than she had known since the time of Solomon. The interlude, however, was ominous, like the deep stillness that precedes a storm. The reason why Damascus no longer sent its armed bands into Israel, was that every man was needed on the northern frontier, to defend the country against Assyria. It was a hopeless task and Israel might reasonably have asked herself what her fate would be when, Syria being absorbed, she found Assyria at her doors. Clearly, she would be the next victim. But instead of preparing for the evil day, the people gave themselves up to luxury and pleasure. Nor was this the worst. During the preceding troubles some of the people had lost land and property and had become grievously poor, while others in the safer towns of the interior had grown rich. There was no disposition on the part of the rich to help their needy brethren, but, as is seen in all ages, there was rather a tendency to take advantage of the poor man's necessities. The rich lent him money at usurious rates, practically made a slave of him, and cheated him out of his earnings. There was no longer a remedy for him at law, for the priests who administered justice were open to receive bribes, and took their pleasure with the rich. There was competition, too, in religion. Sanctuaries were scattered all over the land, where sacrifices and offerings could be made, from which the priests derived their income. The priests of one sanctuary would try to attract worshipers from another, and would offer as inducements vile pleasures learned from the Ashtaroth which Jezebel had introduced. What could a poor man turn in such conditions, with justice and religion both indifferent to him? He, too, turned to drink, to forget his misery, and gave himself up to imitating the orgies of his rich neighbors. It was at this time that Amos, a herdsman or shepherd, appeared and denounced society. He came from the desert, where at a later period John the Baptist preached, and where Christ was tempted. Belonging to the Southern kingdom, he visited Samaria, probably to sell the wool of his flock, and saw there scenes which stirred his indignation. Like Elijah and Elisha he uttered his warnings, but realizing that few he could reach by his voice, he put his sermons in writing, and so we get in his book probably the first of all the written prophecies.

THE LUXURIOUS HOME OF AN ORIENTAL MILLIONAIRE.

Woe to them that are at ease. An eminent preacher describes Christ's attitude toward wealth under the figure of horizontal and vertical lines. The common custom is to draw the line separating the poor from the rich as a horizontal line and to speak of the upper and the lower classes. Christ drew the line perpendicularly, separating the bad from the good. He did not divide society according to their possessions. A man might be rich wealth or he might not; the fact made no difference in Christ's estimate of him. There were rich men on both sides of the dividing line and poor men on both. The question was not how much property one had, but whether he was a good or a bad man. Woe does come to men who are at ease, as Amos said, in all times, if they are indifferent to the misery around them. Carlyle draws a vivid picture of society in France at the end of the last century. The nobles squandering money on costly meals, on magnificent feasts, while the great masses of the people were living on very bread, and not enough of that. The nobles who made the laws exempted themselves from taxation, and so increased the burdens of the poor. They regarded them of less account than their dogs, and cared nothing whether they lived or died. But when the people rose in their might there was woe for those who were at ease. They were torn from their luxurious homes and sent by hundreds to the guillotine, and their property was confiscated. It was an awful time never to be forgotten in the history of the world.

They are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph. The chief tribe of the northern kingdom was that of the descendants of Ephraim, the son of Joseph. The prophet speaking of the affliction of Joseph, therefore, reminds them that these needy people, to whose affliction they were indifferent, were their brothers, like themselves descendants of Joseph. This indifference was the head and front of their offending. They did not trouble about the misery of others, so long as their own wants were well supplied. This was the fault of the rich man described by our Lord (I. Tim. 16: 19 25). It does not appear that he wronged Lazarus or any one else. He simply spent his money on himself. He made no effort to relieve the poor at his doors. People often say that surely they can do what they like with their own. God does not take that view of their position. When he makes "inquisition for blood," and it is disclosed that some men died of starvation, there will be searching inquiries directed to the men around him who had bread enough and to spare. It will not do then to say that they did not know of his need; they ought to have known. Yet it is a proverb that "one half the world does not know how the other half lives." An illustration of this ignorance, that has been often quoted, is that of the princess who asked what was the matter with a hungry crowd. Being told that they had no bread, she asked lightly why they did not eat cakes.

SALVATION IN THE CAMPS.

Mr. Moody Tells of the Wonderful Revival Now Progressing in the Army—Five Thousand Men Confess Christ—Bright Testimonies—The Dying Soldier and his Mother.

THOSE of our readers who have been observing the current of spiritual events of late, have been deeply impressed with the evidences of Divine approval that have attended the work of the Christian Commission among our soldiers in the field, both at home and abroad. We take special pleasure, therefore, in printing the following earnest communication on the subject, from one who is everywhere recognized as the head of this great movement for spreading the Gospel in the army:

"EAST NORTHFIELD, Mass., Aug. 2, 1898.

"To the Editor of 'The Christian Herald':

"DEAR SIR:—I believe that when the facts are fully known, it will be seen that one of the most remarkable things in connection with this war is the wonderful revival now in progress in many of the army camps. While I have not been on the ground myself, from the careful reports of conservative men I am sure I am safe in saying that not less than five thousand have made a public confession of their faith in Christ; and the work is going right on with undiminished power. Now think of how much this means: For one thing it means that these men, in coming to the army camps are finding personal salvation. Instead of being dragged down into temptation by the ten thousand temptations that surround them, they are turning squarely away from it and setting their faces toward a righteous life. Here is an example as told by one of the Christian workers:

"I am reading over the lists of the killed down in Cuba. There is a young man that is on my mind constantly. He came up to me at the close of a meeting in Tampa, one of the handsomest young men I ever looked at: a great tall fellow with a blond face, blue eyes, and one of those earnest looking faces: and as he stood there and took me in, he said: 'You'll never know until eternity what God has done here to-night. God has made a man of me to-night.'"

"Many hundred men are ready to testify that they have begun a new life at these army camps.

"It means also that the moral atmosphere in many of the camps has been greatly changed. The men who have not come out clearly as Christians, have been much affected by the intense religious interest. A soldier said to one of our workers at Camp Thomas: 'You don't know what good these services are doing in this camp. Before this work began we heard cursing and saw card-playing everywhere; but now you hardly hear any cursing, and see no card-playing. This work has made a complete transformation in our camp.'

"It means that the heart of many a wife or mother at home has been cheered. One night as one of our workers was leaving his meeting, he saw a downcast looking man leaning against a tree near by and asked him what the matter was.

"'Well,' said the soldier, 'I am not a Christian, and I want to be. What mother said to me when I left home has come back to me to-night. She said: 'My boy, I would be willing to give you up if you were a Christian, and I could feel sure of meeting you in heaven.'

"It means much for the men who lie sick unto death in the hospitals. One of our delegates reports: 'As I came up to the hospital this morning and asked the surgeon if there was anything that I could be allowed to do among the men, he answered me most earnestly, 'Yes! for God's sake go in with this woman who has just arrived and who will find her boy dying—I have not told her.'

"'I passed into the hospital tent following a lady dressed in black who had just alighted from the carriage which had brought her from the station. She had come from Illinois to nurse her sick soldier boy. As we stood by the cot I told her from the doctor that he was unconscious, and would live but a few minutes.

"'After he had breathed his last, I told the mother of my visit to the hospital the previous day, and that I had asked her son if he was a Christian and that with a bright, happy face, he said, most earnestly, 'You bet. I am,' and pointed to the badge of the Epworth League pinned upon his undershirt. I told her of my prayer with him and of the comfort I was sure he had in the presence of his Saviour. The mother turned back the sheet from the form of her son, and as she saw the badge still pinned where the nurse at his request had placed it, she bent over her boy with sobs that moved all our hearts; the doctor and nurses sobbed with her.

"Think of what this work means for the home churches when these newly converted men return to them. I am sure all these things should move the heart of every Christian in this country most profoundly. They point clearly to the army camps as the great opportunity of this generation for reaching young men, and lay upon the Church a heavy responsibility. Many Christians are feeling it and giving to help it on. Yours very truly,

This is the work THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been presenting to its readers from week to week and which the greatest of living evangelists now eloquently advocates in his remarkable letter.

Veteran Christian Workers.

The Christian Commission are fortunate in having among their workers some veterans of the Civil War. Dr. Munhall, who has been preaching at Tampa, was a color-sergeant, and carried the flag of his regiment in more than twenty battles; Dr. Boggs, who is in the work at Camp Thomas, was a Confederate chaplain, and Major Whittle was on General Howard's staff.

The Commission has sent Rev. Dr. Hatcher, of Richmond, to the camp at Jacksonville, and Rev. Charles Herald, of Brooklyn, to Key West. At the latter place it is expected that hundreds of sailors will be reached by the same methods of Gospel work that have been so effective among the soldiers.

Evangelists like Mr. Moody and Major Whittle say it is the greatest work among men that they have ever known. General O. O. Howard is now in Cuba arranging for the work there, and as rapidly as funds are provided, the work will be vigorously pushed along all lines. All contributions will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The contributions during the past week are given below:

New York's Naval Jubilee.

On Saturday, August 20, Rear-Admirals Sampson and Schley, and the officers and men of the leading warships of the Atlantic squadron, were honored by New York with a welcome befitting the naval victors in the recent war with Spain. A multitude of steamers and sailing craft greeted the New York, Brooklyn, Oregon, Texas, Iowa, Indiana, and Massachusetts, as they entered the bay, and it seemed as though the entire population had turned out along the docks and wharves, to cheer the victors and their ships, as they proceeded up the North River. Great preparations had been made by the municipal authorities to give the welcome the eclat of a national jubilee, and hundreds of thousands of visitors poured into the city by trains and steamers to attend the celebration. Flags and bunting were everywhere. Mayor Van Wyck and a large representative Committee, met the squadron down the bay, at Tompkinsville, off Staten Island, and an address of welcome was delivered, eulogizing the naval heroes and presenting them with the freedom of the city. Rear-Admiral Sampson responded briefly, and modestly declared that the fleet had simply done its duty. On board the New York were five members of the Cabinet, Secretaries Alger, Gage, and Wilson, Attorney-General Griggs and Postmaster-General Smith. After a formal reception and speechmaking, salutes were exchanged by the forts and the warships, and amid the deafening noise of steam whistles from the flotilla of tugs and pleasure craft, the great battleships and cruisers steamed up the North River. On arriving at a point opposite Gen. Grant's tomb, at Riverside Park, a salute of honor was fired and the squadron steamed down stream on the return journey. It is estimated that half a million spectators witnessed the ceremony from Riverside Park. During the parade of the vessels up and down the river, the enthusiasm of the multitudes, both afloat and ashore, never slackened, the ovation being probably the most spontaneous and remarkable that has ever been witnessed in New York.

NOTES OF THE LATE WAR.

OUR government will probably order the disbandment of the Cuban Army for the purpose of promoting order in Cuba.

ELEVEN thousand prisoners were captured by our troops at Manila, and much Spanish ordnance and ammunition.

HUNDREDS of our troops arriving home from Cuba and Porto Rico are very ill of dangerous malarial fevers and typhoid is prevalent at several of the home-camps.

Hope for Armenia.

THIS is an age of history-making in the direction of justice, and the righting of ancient wrongs. Russia, whose great power has more than once in recent years been employed beneficently, and which, jointly with ourselves, gave aid and asylum to the unfortunate Armenian refugees, is now said to be contemplating a movement for the repatriation of those exiles who fled from Moosh, Bitlis, Van, and Erzeroum at the time of the massacres, two years ago, and whose possessions were seized by the Kurds, with the open approval of the Sultan's government. Turkey will undoubtedly protest against this, for an act of justice sits not well on the soul of Abdul Hamid, the slayer of the innocent. As the strongest Christian power in the old world, however, and as the power most immediately interested in the just treatment of its involuntary wards, the exiled Christians of Armenia, it is not improbable that Russia may compel repatriation and restitution.

There is in this news a gleam of hope for the Armenians. Their return to their native mountains and valleys, under Russia's powerful auspices, would doubtless involve a continuance of Russian guardianship and protection in their recovered possessions. It might mean a renaissance of the old national life, which was almost crushed out by Turkish oppression, and a freedom in the exercise of their religion, such as they have not known in many centuries.

Our own government has still an unsettled question at issue with the Porte, which might now be pressed with advantage. During the massacres, the American mission buildings at Harpoot, Marash and other cities were damaged and looted—some of them wholly destroyed. Our claims should now be urged vigorously, and our increased national prestige will probably help to convince the Sultan that they ought to be paid, without further delay.

Government Relief for Cuba.

IT will gratify many of our readers, who were actively interested in the work of Cuban relief up to the time of the closing of the ports by the blockade, to learn that the United States Government has itself undertaken the duty of sending supplies to the destitute Cubans, both to the native army and to the civil population of the island. The first ship loaded with 3,000,000 rations has sailed from Tampa for Havana, and the latter city will be made the central point of distribution, from which all the destitute places in the adjoining districts will be relieved. This step is taken in pursuance of the policy outlined by the Administration in an early stage of the Cuban trouble, when President McKinley announced the purpose of the Government to do everything in its power to relieve the suffering people of Cuba. Fortunately for the reconcentrados the war has not been a prolonged one—having ended much sooner than was generally expected.

Meanwhile, the young children of the Lee Orphanage—over 100 of them—are being cared for with regularity. Every week, a remittance of $500 is cabled by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to Director Sotolongo, from the relief fund. Thus, through the generosity of our readers, these little ones have been fed and sheltered and cared for in a time of great peril and distress.

Blossoms and Childhood.

BLOSSOMS that never become fruit are not failures. Children early dead are not failures. Thank God for the lessons of blossom time. What a rich Lord is our Lord that he can afford for so short a time such elaborate wardrobe for the orchards. If they were to have the robes of beauty, these embroideries of all colors, these crowns of arborescense, these draperies spun out of sunshine and shower, for all the year, it would not seem so lavish; but they are only for blossom week. How numerous and deep must be the King's vats from which he dips these colors—the crimson, the pink, the green, the blue, the purple, and all this garniture to scatter after six or seven rising or setting suns. As though the Louvre and Luxembourg of Paris and the picture galleries of Dresden and of Venice and of the Vatican were, after a week of exhibition, thrown into the sea. Not in wastefulness, but because they could be fully replaced and could be restored. And how this expenditure of color and gracefulness for only one week magnifies the resources of the great God. And this God is ours. Blessed be his glorious name. If this God so clothes the grass of the field and the trees for blossom week, will he not take care of us, his children immortal?

Church Festivals.

WITH the warm weather have come many church festivals. There have been gatherings of this sort all around us. Do you think it right to have such convocations? Oh, yes; they break up the formalities of churches, and introduce feelings of good neighborhood, and widen healthy acquaintanceship; and every religious organization ought to have them. The whole tendency in city churches is toward isolation and exclusiveness, and as soon as you have made people shake hands you have opened for them doors of useful opportunity. If all you know of the people who attend the same church is the knowledge which comes from seeing them on the other side of the aisle, or in a pew approximate, you are not doing your duty. I long ago made up my mind that the more good people I knew the better for me. We all know people who are to us a disadvantage. They are worse than that, and the danger is they will draw us down to their level. Our ambition ought to be to form the acquaintance of people better than we are, and the probability is they will lift us to their standard. If we do not know people better than we are it is a sign that we have gone into a ruinous self-righteousness, and the probability is there is no good in us at all. We have the Gospel in song, and the Gospel in sermon, and the Gospel in ordinance; but we want more of the Gospel of handshaking.

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

THE New Testament, apart from the question of its inspiration, is a very remarkable book. Let us first consider that it consists of twenty-seven tracts, written by a diversity of persons, at a diversity of times and places, all of them separate from, and independent of each other. Again, let us remember, that these twenty-seven tracts, abounding with wonderful truths, rich wisdom, exquisite poetry, lofty eloquence, are with one exception given in the simplest vehicles of our language—story-telling and letter-writing.

There are four short stories. The style of each is quiet, simple, unaffected, yet penetrated with an earnest truthfulness that goes straight to the heart. Who wrote them? A petty officer of the Roman Inland Revenue Department. A friend of the very men who denied all knowledge of Christ. A physician of Pagan extraction. A Galilean fisherman. Were these the men human wisdom would have chosen to write the life of him, who though born of a woman, thought it no robbery to make himself the equal of God?

Consider next the language in which this book was written. It was in itself a stumbling block which nothing but Omnipotence choosing the weakest agent, because confident of making weak things mighty, would ever have selected. Indeed, it was hardly a language; it was rather a patois full of barbarisms; Hebrew in spirit, Greek in dress, but a form of Greek so corrupt and debased that it had scarcely any recognition beyond the few thousand square miles where it was the vernacular.

The people selected were apparently equally unpropitious for the dissemination of a new faith. They were a fanatical, poor race; isolated by their religion, and isolated by their geographical situation. They were also disliked, separate, and distinct from the heathen nations of the whole world. The wise Egyptian despised them; the refined Greek despised them; they were at that very time trembling in the grasp of the mighty Roman power, by which they were within a few years destroyed, enslaved, and scattered among all peoples, a weak and contemptible remnant. Surely God's ways are past our finding out! For with all these disadvantages as to writers, language, and race, there has never been a book which has exerted such a wide and potential influence. For centuries it has ruled the civilized world. It has given the law to kings. It has authorized preachers. It has directed churches. It has comforted and counselled millions of men and women who have clasped it to their hearts, lived by its rules and died in its faith; nay, who have in thousands of cases, given their bodies to be burned or destroyed for its sake.

The writers of the four Gospels seem each to have had a special purpose in view. The great end of Matthew was to prove Jesus the promised Messiah, and all prophecy fulfilled in him. Hence the constantly recurring formula "that it might be fulfilled." On the contrary, Mark was written for foreigners. This is evident by the explanations given of Jewish phraseology and customs and by the fuller descriptions of scenes and incidents. Mark also records fewer of the words of Jesus than Matthew, but more of his works; for the pagan world understood a noble life more easily than a noble philosophy. Luke is a more general biography. It looks forward to the influence of the new faith on the Gentile world. Theophilus, to whom it was written, resided probably in Italy; for in Acts, which is simply the second part of Luke, brief explanations and descriptions are appended to places in Judea, but the towns in Italy are named without comment.

The Gospel of John is remarkably different from the other three. The Jesus of Matthew, Mark, and Luke is the Son of Man tempted and tried in all human points, and suffering all humanity suffers. But the Jesus of John is the glorious, mystical being of the transfiguration. It appeals very little to our intellect and very much to our hearts. The Christian who reads John, and is able to draw all the honied sweetness out of his luminous words, must be in relation with the mind of the writer; for the apprehension of this Book depends on the love and light that is in ourselves. Sympathy with John comes not from any theological school; it eludes criticism; it is a dull, dead letter to the formal Christian; but to those who have life within them, it is the very "hidden manna." John's Gospel is the touch-stone of Christian character. There are aged Christians who cannot write their own names who are better commentators on John than Baur or Strauss or any learned doctor of divinity.

It is mainly to the Apostle Paul we o[we] the letters, and oh, how full of a beautif[ul hu]manity they are! With what magn[ificent] and persuasive earnestness he reason[s with] the Corinthians! What surprise and [sor]row is there in Galations! What tender co[n]gratulations to the Philippians! What opule[nt] thought, and exalted sentiments in the [E]phesians! Every letter is a warm, living, f[amiliar] expression of feeling, and though ni[neteen] centuries have passed away since thes[e won]derful letters were written, the worl[d has] never seen since a nobler, tenderer hea[rt or] grander intellect than that of "Paul th[e] oner!" "Paul the aged!" James is just [as] pure. Peter warm and impulsive, and [full] Jewish allusions, as the "apostle of the c[ir]cision" would naturally be. Jude is a [str]ing denunciation against evil and forn[s]. John's epistles take for their key note, 'v[e] as his Gospel takes "life."

The revelations are not yet revealed [as] in their plenitude and power; but we [can] least see in them a pictorial sermon on t[he] old text, "The seed of the woman shall [bruise] the serpent's head."

Now what a Book is this! A man [can] carry it in his vest pocket (THE CHRIS[TIAN] TIAN HERALD is now sending it out [by] thousands in vest-pocket form to our s[oldiers] and sailors), and it is mightier than [all] standing armies of the world. A ch[ild] understand it, and sages find in it a w[ell] they have not yet attained unto. It [has] nineteen centuries in its pages, and it [will] the end of the world, and the prais[es] eternity.

BRIEF NOTES.

At a recent temperance meeting in B[oston] Mass., it was stated that in one day 200,000 [drinks] were sold in the saloons of that city.

Michigan has sixty more newspaper [and] magazines published within its borders th[an] the recent census of Russia credits to that enc[ire] empire with its 129,166,000 inhabitants.

The medical work under the care [of the] American Baptist Missionary Union e[mploys] twenty-nine physicians, with twelve ho[spitals] known distinctively as such.

At the late annual meeting of the C[hurch] Building Society of Berlin, it was reported t[hat] the last ten years forty-two new churches ha[ve been] erected and that nine were now being built.

The Reformed Church in America re[ports] last year 5,039 members on confession of fait[h] returns the whole number, after all reducti[ons] 110,273, showing a gain over last year of 2,212. Sunday School enrollment has advanced 3,0[00] has risen to 123,667.

In the course of a recent sermon Dr. [Joseph] Dixon, speaking of Dewey's victory at M[anila] said if that marvelous deed were recorded [in the] Bible, every infidel in the world would doubt [or] deny it. They would not believe that on[e man] could utterly annihilate the other, and witho[ut the] loss of a single life on the side of the victor.

At a meeting of army chaplains in Sw[itzer]land, held recently, to discuss the best meth[od of] performing their duties, there were ninetee[n Pro]testants and eleven Roman Catholics prese[nt]. A joint committee, consisting of three Prote[stants] and two Catholics, was organized to promo[te the] work. The proceedings throughout were [har]monious.

The Rev. R. G. Hobbs, of Illinois C[onfer]ence, has been elected president of the Met[hodist] Episcopal College in Calcutta, India, and D[r.] Thoburn has requested his transfer. Dr. Hob[bs] is well known, has felt strongly drawn to t[he In]dian field ever since his visit there a year [ago as] THE CHRISTIAN HERALD commissioner in c[harge] of the cargo of the City of Everett.

Professor Mommsen, the eminent Ge[rman] historian, is quoted by the Independent a[s] predicting that eventually the British Empire [will] be divided between Germany, France and R[ussia]. South Africa would be the prize of Ger[many]. Egypt, of France, and India, of Russia. [But] Mommsen has hitherto been known as a hist[orian]. This is believed to be his first appearanc[e as a] prophet.

During the past seventeen years the [Pres]byterian Church in Western Canada has [had] extraordinary progress. In 1881 there wa[s one] presbytery, now there are fourteen. The t[wo] eight missions have increased to 179; the p[reach]ing stations from 116 to 937. Instead of 971 [fam]lies, there are now 13,605, while the numb[er of] communicants has advanced from 1,153 to [6,000] and the contributions from $15,100 to $301.75[0].

Trouble is in store for the monks of R[ussia]. There are 43,000 of them in 742 monasteries [in the] empire. The Government is inquiring what [use] they do. They are supposed to help the [poor] care for the destitute sick and teach the chi[ldren]. The result of the inquiry, so far, is that the [cry] for the sick do not average three to a mon[astery]; no schools exist in connection with any [of the] monasteries, and scarcely any relief is given [to the] destitute.

At the Old Orchard camp meeting [of the] Christian and Missionary Alliance, on Augu[st 19] the collection for foreign missions amount[ed to] $50,000. Rev. A. B. Simpson, who presided [said] that every dollar pledged last year had been [paid]. The money taken up this year would, he sa[id], be spent in sending missionaries to India, son[ie] be devoted to the enlargement of the Chin[a] sion work, a portion will be assigned to th[e] station just opened in Thibet, and some w[ill be] expended in opening mission fields in Cub[a and] the Philippines.

The Secretaries of State.

FOR the third time in eighteen months. President McKinley has had to choose a Secretary of State. His first choice was the venerable John Sherman, who probably had little idea when he resigned his senatorship to accept the office that its duties would be so onerous as proved. War with a European power then a remote possibility, and the statesman doubtless expected that foreign relations would be of their peaceful and uneventful character. When they became increasingly critical Sherman left them chiefly in the hands of his first assistant, Judge William R. Day and finally, when war with Spain was declared, he resigned and Mr. Day became in name, as he had for some months been in fact, Secretary of State. The President had long known Mr. Day, and regarded the quiet, shrewd, studied lawyer, who had never sought office, yet had always been an able and loyal friend of his counsellor. A modest, calm, prudent, clear-sighted man, a prompt, vigorous and patriotic. Mr. Day has justified the President's confidence. He has conducted the affairs of his office with the skill that is generally supposed to be acquired only by life-long training. He has had no diplomatic experience but he brought to his duties a knowledge of international law, sound judgment, and unflinching courage. The foreign offices of Europe know in the plain Ohio lawyer the qualities which always command respect. The fairness, candor and sincerity of a man who knows the facts and was trusted to protect the interest confided to his care. It was known, however, that Mr. Day had accepted the office with reluctance, and only from a stern sense of duty. He has now resigned it, that he may undertake a still more difficult duty, for which he is exceptionally well-qualified. He goes to be president of the commission which goes to Paris to arrange with the Spanish commissioners a treaty of peace. The President has chosen as his successor Colonel John Hay, who is at present ambassador to Great Britain. Col. Hay is sixty years of age, and like Mr. Day, has been a life-long personal friend of the President. He has, however, qualifications besides those of personal friendship for his high office. He has had diplomatic experience in Paris, Vienna, Madrid and London, which will fit him for his responsible duties. It is significant, too, that the news of his withdrawal has called forth expressions of regret from the press and from prominent statesman of England which show that he possesses the qualities that his more exalted office will demand of him. More than ever before, there need that the office be held by a man as the wise king described:

He that handleth a matter wisely shall find good: and whoso trusteth in the Lord, happy is he (Prov. 16: 20).

Seeking an Heiress.

Advertisements are appearing in the New York daily newspapers for the fosterparents of a child. The advertisers say that fourteen years ago, a childless couple visited a house in West Sixteenth street New York, and there received a baby girl, whom they agreed to adopt as their own. The child has now become heiress to a large and valuable estate, and the advertisers are anxious to find her. They promise that if her foster-parents will report to them, she shall remain under their guardianship. All that is desired is to establish her legal rights to the property. It will be a surprise for the child and her foster-parents, if they can be found, to learn that she is an heiress to an estate. This is the reverse of the Christian's condition. His eternal inheritance never comes to him in his own right, but through his adoption into the family of God:

That we might receive the adoption of sons . . . Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son, and if a son, then an heir of God (Gal. 4: 5, 7).

What Patriotism Cost Him.

One of those boys who make one proud of one's country started from New York last week for his home in Michigan. His name is Frank K. Manning, and his age is just nineteen. He was preparing to enter Michigan University when the President issued his first call for volunteers. Young Manning thought his college career might be postponed for a year, so he offered himself for the militia and was accepted. His regiment reached Cuba in time to take part in the engagement before Santiago. Right in front of the Michigan regiment was a field piece concealed in the woods which was doing mischief, and the regiment was ordered to find and capture it. Manning advanced with his comrades, but a shell from the gun exploded among them and he was left on the ground with his foot shattered. Many others were hit, the young man explained to a friend, and some of them dangerously. Surgeons were few, and it was better for him to wait while they looked after those who must have attention or die. When his turn came there was no time to lose and the doctor amputated what was left of the foot. Manning thinks it might have been saved, but as others might have died while the doctors were working over him, he was quite willing for them to take the shortest way. When he joined the army he was a famous short-distance runner, and he had cherished the ambition of making his college team famous in the athletic field. "I shall not be able to run any more," he said, "but I am going to college in the fall, and I shall study while the other fellows do what I used to do. The crutches are unhandy yet, but I shall manage them after a while." If he adheres to his resolution to give his time to study, instead of to running, he may prove a greater and more useful man than he would have been in a sphere in which he would always have been inferior to the horse and the dog. So, as with many other men, an apparent misfortune may turn out to his advantage.

The things which have happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel (Phil. 1: 12).

Costly Names.

A correspondent of a New York journal who has recently returned from Samoa, gives a warning to intending visitors, which may save them some expense. He says that people who go to the island, find that the inhabitants have some difficulty in pronouncing their names. It is quite common for the visitor, especially if a young lady, to accept from a Samoan chief some quaint Samoan name, which like the names bestowed by our Indians is expressive of some peculiarity of appearance or trait of character. The Samoans are shrewd enough to confer a name indicative of admiration, and the bearer is called by it in Samoan society much to her gratification. But she soon discovers that the gift of a name involves obligations. The giver expects sundry kegs of beefs and other tributes, and being thus adopted into Samoan society, there are organizations which the adopted person is bound to support with other gifts. Altogether, the correspondent says, a great deal of money will be saved by letting Samoan acquaintances mispronounce the proper name, rather than confer one, flattering though it be, which calls for so large a tribute. No advantage appears to come from the name. It is not so with the man who takes upon him the name of Christian. That, too, may prove costly, for even in our day, if he is consistent, he may have to suffer loss, but the day is coming in which he who bears the name will inherit all things.

His name shall be on their foreheads . . . and they shall reign forever and ever (Rev. 22: 4, 5).

Cromwell's Bust in Parliament.

The English House of Commons is about to receive an adornment that few persons ever expected to see within its walls. This is a marble bust of Oliver Cromwell, the great Puritan who delivered England from the corrupt rule of the Stuarts. It is not many years since the name of Cromwell was held in horror and detestation for the part he took in sending a king to the scaffold; but historians of late years have placed his life and character in a new light, and justice has been done to the great Protector. A proof of the fact is that Parliament admits his bust to its corridors. It is a singularly faithful representation of the man, showing the wart on his face and the scar on his forehead from the wound received in the battle of Dunbar. It is to be placed at the foot of the grand staircase, where it will be seen by every member entering the House. It is nearly two centuries and a half since Cromwell died, but at last his greatness and his patriotism are recognized, and the good man is vindicated. So in the end the promise is fulfilled:

BUST OF OLIVER CROMWELL.

Commit thy way unto the Lord, and he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light and thy judgment as the noonday (Ps. 37: 5, 6).

Panic-Stricken Islands.

A steamer, recently arrived from Australia, reports an extraordinary visitation in the New Hebrides. The islands have been convulsed with most terrifying phenomena. The first warning came in a south-east gale, which gradually developed into a hurricane. Houses were blown down, and nearly all the lighters on the beach were wrecked by the high surf. Rain fell in torrents. Suddenly the sky darkened. It grew blacker every moment until noon, when it was so dark on the island of Ambrym that people could not see their way about, except when the lightning flashed. Natives huddled together in their huts, and traders and settlers took to cover. The earth began to tremble, slightly at first, but with rapidly increasing pulsations until the timbers of the light frame dwellings creaked, split and parted. The motions were in waves, and then would change to upheavals, as if the earth were being forced upward by steady blows from a terrible force below the surface. Gradually the shocks grew less severe. Volcanic ashes began to fall, and fearful noises were heard from the direction of the volcano of Lopevi, which was believed to be extinct. In about ten hours ashes covered the island to a depth of several inches, and no sooner had they ceased falling than rain again set in. Seven inches fell in twenty-four hours, and for three days it rained at intervals, as if there had been a cloudburst. It was discovered that Lopevi was in eruption, having burst through the crater after hundreds of years of inactivity. The mountain is 5,000 feet high. Burning lava was streaming down its sides when the steamer left the islands. No wonder that in such scenes the people were panic-stricken. They show that in spite of the scoffs of infidels the elements exist in our globe for such a consummation as the Bible declares will end this dispensation, occurring not in one locality only, but throughout the inhabited world:

There were thunders and lightnings and a great earthquake . . . and every island fled away and the mountains were not found (Rev. 16: 18, 20).

Progress in the Black Belt

Home-Making and Child-Saving among the Negroes—Work of the Industrial Missionary Association of Alabama.

READERS of this journal are already familiar with the excellent missionary and industrial work that is being conducted in the region known as the "Black Belt" by the Industrial Missionary Association of Alabama. Many negroes of the poorer class have already been placed in possession of comfortable homes and are being trained in habits of tidiness, thrift, and industry, while their children are gathered into day schools and Sunday Schools. Letters published in these pages from time to time have recorded the progress of the experiment and below we give a communication from Rev. C. N. Pond, an officer of the Association, which will be read with interest. Mr. Pond writes as follows:

MRS. PRISCILLA CATO.

"'We need an apostle of the Gospel of child-saving.' Such was the earnest utterances at a recent conference of persons interested in church work.

PRISCILLA'S WORK-ROOM.

This is but one form of the general thought frequently expressed, that the home is the centre of both formative and reformatory influences.

"The Industrial Missionary Association of Alabama embodies these conclusions in its methods, as it does also the other results of most recent practical charity. Hence it makes much of the home and the family. We present herewith some views from Beloit, Alabama, relating to this part of the work. Priscilla Cato made an early beginning in having a home. This honest, capable colored woman is engaged in the Teachers' Home at Beloit. She has been for some years an important factor there. Her husband, Riley Cato, died two years ago depriving her of the counsels of one whom she had regarded as a father quite as much as a husband. The face of Priscilla indicates her true character as a capable, contented woman and friend. Her first payment toward home purchase was only $1.00. Not long afterward she paid $3.00. 'Now I've paid $4.00,' said she. Subsequent payments have been made until now Mrs. Cato is about ready to have a deed for her land.

"Riley Cato was an early worker in Olivet Church. His voice was well known in prayer and exhortation among that people. He had a special gift in approaching the mercy seat, and his quaint but earnest expressions showed deep feeling and touched the hearts of those who worshiped with him.

"Andrew Wiggins, his wife, five thrifty children, and his farm hand and family, are living in a comfortable house, with eighty acres attached, which Andrew is paying for by instalments. This family came from northern Alabama, expressly to enjoy the opportunities at Beloit. The chance for home getting and for good school instruction they appreciate thoroughly. Andrew is a stanch worker and business man. He manifests also considerable ingenuity. Quite an object of interest at his place is a machine made by himself, for baling hay with his own horse-power. He was not so quick as some to enter into a contract of purchase, realizing the difficulties in the way, but he has promptly met his obligation under that contract. This thriving family illustrates the prominent feature of all the work at Beloit.

"But while making the home and family our unit of effort we pay large attention to common schools, churches and Sunday Schools. One class of seventeen girls (taught by Miss McPheeters), attends Calvary African M. E. Church, which is situated on the lands of the Association. From the days of Mrs. Richards to the present time, our teachers have worked a great deal with that church and Sunday School. Miss McPheeters wrote with much gratification of the conversion of several of her scholars in a revival meeting. In the same school twelve young men form a class to which Miss Calhoun has given earnest thought and attention. So interested is she in that entire colored congregation that, in accordance with a common custom in the South, she has joined the church under "watch care," while still holding her membership in Buffalo. In all the Sunday School classes, the teachers aim constantly to impress the ideals of true home and Christian life for which the Association is striving. With the purification and elevation of the negro home, will come the elevation of the entire race.

ANDREW WIGGINS, HIS FAMILY AND HELPERS.

"There is observed a very marked improvement among the people. Since the scholars in these classes as well as in the public schools come from far and near, the leaven is widely diffused. And speaking in the same vein with a remark by a missionary from China, we may say that we could hardly wish more happiness to our workers at Beloit than to see as much progress within the next seven years as the last seven years have witnessed.

KIND WORDS FOR MONT-LAWN.

Our Happy Children and their Helpers — Extracts from Letters — Prayers that the Home may be a Permanent Shelter.

IF there is anywhere an unhappy one who doubts God and humanity, we would like that one to read the letters that come to this office about our Children's Home, and we would have him or her pay a visit to the Home, and see how happy our children are. Take a seat on the grassy lawn, and little lads and lassies will flock around you, hang on your neck, kiss you, call you "teacher," and proudly direct attention to their good apparel, babbling: "See my new apron—and my new dress—and shoes." Or "my new trousers—and my blouse—and my coat." "Where did you get them?" you ask. "Off teacher," they answer promptly, and as if teacher were a tree growing caps, jackets, and such things. "Where did 'teacher' get them?" Then comes an avalanche of bewildering stories of kind friends, some far away, who never saw them, but who give money to send them to the Home, and give clothes, too—all for Jesus' sake.

We have published some of the letters, we wish we could publish them all, with the whole of the third and fourth chapter of I. John for text. Young People's Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues, Circles of King's Daughters, little "Sunbeams," "Helping Hands," "Rosebuds," and other blessed bands of child-workers have toiled and sacrificed for Mont-Lawn; and we are sure the Master will reward them for doing so well their part in bringing other little children unto him.

A Sunday School class of little girls ($6). Wishing to do something for Jesus; $4 they raised by an apron sale, to which Emma Keys added the entire contents of her little bank ($2).

Infant classes of Grove Church ($4). After much planning decided to give it to send some little one to Mont-Lawn.

Mrs. H. G. G., ($4.75), from the Juvenile Department, Baptist Sunday School, who hope it will give some poor child a happy time at Mont-Lawn.—Teacher. ($3.) It gives me extreme pleasure to write you again, for you may know by this time my S. S. class of "Little Workers" are still working. They are nine little girls all under twelve.—Mrs. J. P. H. ($1.) Freddy Heath, aged ten, earned this by committing the Ten Commandments to memory. He wishes it used to help some little waif to an outing at Mont-Lawn.

Parents write:

H. L. W. ($6). From my little girl of seven years who is much interested.—W. L. J. ($3). In the name of my little blue-eyed, golden-haired baby, who is in heaven.—J. M. D. ($3). In memory of our two little girls who have been called to the Children's Home above. —R. V. ($1). From my little daughter of four who is much interested.—G. W. B. ($6). To send two of the neediest boys you can find for the sake of our happy, healthy little boys.

Other givers say:

F. W. ($2). From my aged mother.—A Scotchwoman ($10). "For the wee bairns to breathe fresh air."—I. C. B. ($6). Wife and I passed through the streets of the East-side last night, and saw the need for such work as you are doing at Mont-Lawn. —S. J. ($9). Praying some generous person may yet endow the Home, so it may be a permanent shelter for homeless children, we shall add our annual mite as long as possible.

Extracts could be continued indefinitely, showing how little children work and deny themselves to help other little children; how invalids ease their beds of pain by sending waifs to play on the hillsides and gather wild flowers; how happy parents and young men and maidens and busy people in the midst of their blessings and cares, remember the children of the poor.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

HAPPY HOMES.

Influence on after Life—Sending the Boy or Girl off to School—When the Preparation Should Begin.

Could thy life, a pleasure boat,
Ever by the green banks float,
I would ne'er of danger dream.
Yet I will not ask to know,
How the tide of years shall flow;
Smooth I'll pray, and yet if rough,
So God's with thee, 'tis enough.

WITH September, the time comes in many homes for sending the boy or girl off to school or college, and parental hearts are full of anxiety. To such we say, be of good cheer. God, the All-Father, goes with your boy or girl. Select the school wisely; use prayers and good counsel, and trust God for the rest. Besides, our boys and girls need their own experience; we cannot live it for them any more than we can learn their lessons for them; being thrown upon oneself among strangers has been the making of many a grand character. You who have little ones about your knees prepare for this time long, long before it comes. Make your piety such a gracious, cheerful, beautiful thing that your child will go forth from home with such a hunger and thirst for righteousness that there will be no room in his heart for baser appetites and passions. Be one time he can toddle, let baby be your companion and helper. Make every task of home-life a means of grace and joy for him; in song and story and little acts of service, teach him that his place in the home is to be helpful, to make it sweeter and happier.

In your picture, baby has left his toys to watch mamma arrange her flowers. She has an opportunity to let him help her, to help him feel when the flowers are in the room that he has contributed to the beauty of the home; she has an opportunity to teach him how the flowers are made out of the sod and rain and sunshine; of how he is one of God's flowers, and must always strive to breathe out the fragrance of pure thoughts and loving deeds. Perhaps she may take him with her to the hospital, or the poor home, where he may give a flower to a sick child, to an aged man or woman, or some neglected one. At any rate, you can make just this little moment with your baby and the flowers one so sweet and helpful and dear that in after years will turn from more dangerous toys to these things, just for the memory of it. If you are so poor that you have not vases and vases, your opportunity is the greater. Let baby help you sweep or dust, pick up scraps, even if his help is troublesome, and makes more work for you. By-and-by, as he improves, he will be a real help, and when he has a home of his own the lesson will stay by him, and will be a better and happier husband and father for taking an active part in the housemaking, besides that of the mere lounging, which tends to harden and drive him away from home. It is the little things which make up life—the little sweet times when you are baby's companions which build his character and determine his future, the little happy hours when you are training him into habits of thoughtfulness and service which will make his own home happy.

New England Village Life.

A lady who has been spending the summer in New England villages, writes:

"I am surprised to find how much cultivation and wide-awake interest in the progress of the world affairs exists in these country villages. There is nearly always a book club, circulating libraries of periodicals, and often a good library. Literary societies, branches of the Epworth League, and college girls who have come home from all parts of New England, returning with advanced ideas and lofty aspirations, have brought new life into the village homes here. I discover that their sympathy with progressive movements or reforms is still greater than their appreciation of literature. They will listen by the hour to accounts of city sweat shops, college settlement work, and the like, with an avidity flattering to the speaker accustomed to polite apathy in her own circles. It seems not unlikely that in the coming generation great help toward wider work for women in the fields of philanthropy may be drawn from farmer's wives and daughters who, relieved through modern contrivances of many of their old forms of labor, have time to study and think with minds not yet jaded by the multitude of problems that confront city inhabitants.

A True Hero.

A little girl, running in front of her mother, stopped on the tracks of a Williamsburg trolley car, which was rushing towards her. Her mother, too far away to reach her, shrieked in helpless horror. A man near by catching sight of the baby, jumped to save her; he caught her up, and threw her on the fender, but was himself knocked down and dragged twenty feet; when picked up was unconscious, clothes torn, body bruised, face bleeding from cuts, and carried to the hospital. The mother, when she found her child unhurt, had carried it off, crying and scolding. When the man opened his eyes in the hospital, he asked: "Where is that kid?" He was only a German workingman, but a hero all the same.

Rights of Childhood.

If a child's first right is to its mother, its next is that it may be a child, says a student of child-culture. A great philosopher and teacher complained that nothing was so misunderstood as childhood; that everything is done later to teach a man already neglected and spoiled in his early years. He says: "Nature requires children to be children before they are men. If we undertake to pervert this plan, we shall produce forward fruits, having neither ripeness nor taste, and certain soon to decay. We shall have young professors and old children." And again: "When he leaves my hands I acknowledge that he will be neither soldier, priest, nor magistrate; he will be first of all, a man, all that a man ought to be, and though fortune change, he will be prepared for every condition."

American Influence in the Kaiser's Home.

It is said that the Countess Waldersee, an American woman, has great influence in the German Emperor's household. She was born in New York City in 1840, and her father, Mr. David Lea, was a grocer. After her father's death, her mother moved to Stuttgart, where Mary married the Count de Noer; and after his death, Count von Waldersee. She was instrumental in making the match between William and her grand-niece by marriage, the Princess Augusta Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein.

HAPPY HOURS AND GOOD COMPANY.

It is said that "Aunt Mary" is almost always with the Empress, while her husband is in high favor with the Emperor, and that her profound piety has had an effect upon the imperial household. The Countess founded the Young Men's Christian Association in Germany, has had several churches built and endowed, secured the appropriation bill for the grand new Berlin Cathedral, and she abolished Sunday work in shops.

An Interesting Letter.

The following letter from Germany, written in a scholarly hand, and evidently the production of a gentleman of culture, is comforting evidence to little folks struggling with French and German that difficulties are not all on our side of the water:

I being for subscription to your high journal, please you send a his sample copy to the following address for to see. Very respectfully, HANS VON ——.

USE ME.

"THOUGH I be nothing," yet, my Lord, to me
Grant the especial joy of work for thee;
It may be in some corner little known,
It may be in some distant land, alone;
But whereso'er Thou sendest me, O Lord,
Thy grace afford.

"Though I be nothing," yet, my Saviour dear,
Let me be used Thy weary ones to cheer,
Whether by voice or pen, by touch or smile,
Whether by joyous life or "fiery trial";
Only I ask that I may emptied be,
Then filled with Thee.

"Though I be nothing," yet, my Lord, I bring Myself to Thee—an humble offering.
Riches I cannot boast, but all I have I give;
So take me, use me, Lord; for Thee I'll live
Till, 'mid the glories of eternity,
I gaze on Thee!

Good Work for the Tenements.

A PRACTICAL work for prevention of suffering and disease among the dwellers of the crowded tenement districts is being carried on by The People's University Extension Society of Greater New York. Realizing that the vast majority of the tenement population must remain and work in the city throughout the hot season, the Society is giving courses of plain practical talks by expert physicians on the prevention of hot weather diseases, care of children, food, drink, cooking, clothing, cleanliness, emergencies, etc. The advice is adapted to the actual conditions of life in the tenements by physicians who are familiar with hospital, dispensary and tenement work, and is given in Italian, German, French and Bohemian, as well as in the English language. A simple, practical health guide in different languages, carefully prepared by several experienced physicians, will be supplied gratuitously for home use and permanent reference. As a large part of the suffering and disease is known to be due to ignorance, the value of such practical efforts require no argument.

The courses are given in co-operation with missions, social settlements, churches, clubs, and other societies, and will be as widely carried on in crowded tenement portions of New York and Brooklyn as funds sent in for the expenses will permit. The expenses are provided for by voluntary subscription.

The "Silver Lamp."

"One of Goethe's tales," says a thoughtful writer, "is of a rude fisherman's hut which was changed to silver by the setting in it of a little silver lamp. The logs of which the hut was built, its floors, its doors, its roof, its furniture — all were changed to silver by this magic lamp. The story illustrates what takes place in the home when Christ comes into it. Everything after that is different. The outward conditions may be the same, but they shine now with a new beauty."

A Plea for "Animal Sunday."

"Did you ever look into the faces of the horses you see on the street and note their different expressions?" asks Ella Wheeler Wilcox. "They vary as much as do the faces of human beings. Well-groomed, well cared for carriage horses have an alert, proud, spirited expression. A horse which is driven with a short check carries a strained, restless, impatient look in his eye. The absolute hopelessness, the full despair in the faces of overworked, badly-treated horses, is enough to touch the heart of a sympathetic observer. Cats are the most sensitive, nervous, cleanly animals in the world. They are, too, intensely affectionate and devoted to people they love as well as to places; although of course there are cats who are born ingrates and tramps, just as there are men of this sort. When a cat which has had a good home is left to run in the streets and alleys, or is dropped in some field or strange dooryard, its mental sufferings are beyond description. Yet scores of thoughtless people go on their outings every spring, leaving their cats unprovided for. Every being possesses the divine spark, and when we learn to think of horses, dogs and cats as creatures of him who notes each sparrow's fall, the world will be the better. There ought to be a Sunday set apart called the 'Animal Sunday.' Ministers ought to talk to their congregations about the duty we owe animals."

CHAPTER II.

Entertained at Dinner—A Spoonless and Knifeless Repast—A Kurdish Woman's Experience—Avenging a Brother's Death—A Girl Given as Blood-money—Polygamic Slavery and its Misery—Telling the Story of Jesus to the Inmates of the Harem.

A GIRL entered in response to the call of the princess, and the latter went on talking: "This spring, as we were leaving the city for here, I heard of this dog (woman) being frightened to death. Some people said that the cause of her being so white is that she has a diamond in her lungs, and they had bought her for two hundred tomans. They were going to kill her and take out that precious stone, and she ran away from the men and came and threw herself at my feet, and I was bound, in my honor, to protect her. So I brought her out here and no one dares to touch her as long as she is under this roof."

The poor woman was a Circassian albino. The Mohammedan could only explain her fairness by saying that "she must have a diamond in her lung." Any one with blue eyes and fair hair, they call Iooros (Russian).

I felt that night as if sleeping in a flower-garden, with odors of the perfumes in the room, and of flowers from the garden. In one of the bird-rooms (aviaries are features of harem life) there was so much singing and screeching that I stuck my fingers in my ears in order to go to sleep. My heart was heavy with thoughts of the imprisoned women, and I went to sleep praying that God would break the chains of these poor creatures, the conditions of whose lives, unsustained as they are by religious hope or teaching, force them into all sorts of deception. As I slept, I dreamed that I was back in America, "the land of the free," strolling through Central Park, as in happy days past, and seeing women and girls walking and riding, openly and joyously wherever they would. I felt that the birds in the Park were becoming very noisy, and strangely familiar, and suddenly I awoke to find myself again in the Persian palace, with a dozen sparrows hopping about on my bed.

From the roof of a mosque, came the voice of the mollah, calling the faithful to prayer. Instead of praying, the Aghboorchak came in and said:

"The princess wants your presence at dinner with the ladies down stairs."

On my entrance, they all rose, but not because I was considered of higher rank than themselves; it is the custom of the country to rise when a guest enters. At first I was not a little startled at what I saw. The hostess had gowned herself in a pink silk European wrapper that much became her. She wore a hat of white straw covered with red roses, and over the hat a white handkerchief of knotted silk. One guest was dressed in dervish male attire, which was white; on her crown was a cone-shaped hat, made of some dark and striped material, and her long, reddish-black hair was braided into a dozen braids, as thick as my thumb, which reached four inches below her knees. Two ladies were dressed in Kurdish style; a few of them had on plain, but neat and simple, Christian clothes. On my right side was a Kurdish lady in male attire; on my left was the lady dressed like a dervish. The latter began talking to me by saying, with a laugh:

"I am the envy of most of the women who know me. From childhood I have worn this costume, when I wanted to." She further explained, "I am of royal blood and the only child of my parents. My father dying very young, and leaving great wealth, my mother feared that my relatives would kidnap me for the sake of my wealth, and therefore dressed me like a boy. When I was twelve years of age, one of our old servants told some of my relatives about it. A kinsman imprisoned me, wanted to marry me to his son (who already had several wives), and threatened my mother. She appealed to the governor, who, being powerful, subdued our enemies, divorced his wife and married me. My kismat (portion) has been black, I have had no children. Since marriage, my life has been free, and I have done as I pleased in everything."

One of the ladies said, quite low: "Her husband is an opium eater. Of course he does not know, or care to know, where his wife is going or what kind of garments she wears, or if she goes out veiled or unveiled."

"I value my free life," declared the dervish, "I travel a great deal. My maid, like myself in dervish costume, goes ahead and engages rooms. No one suspects us."

Then the hostess said to the dervish, "Will you favor us with one of Hasart Yosef's songs?" The dervish, staff in hand, went and stood in the door, just where real dervishes stand, and said, "Bismilla" (in God's name), and sang a dervish song.

When the lady finished singing, they all said, with one voice, "Manshalla! Manshalla!" so that if there happened to be present a person with evil eye, it could not hurt her.

My Kurdish neighbor whose strange costume included a sword, lifted the weapon in both her hands, and raising it to her lips, then to her forehead, said, "With this I have avenged the murder of my only brother."

"You do not look as if you would like to kill any one," I said.

"If I had not killed a man," she said, "I would have been guilty of not avenging my brother's blood. He had no male relatives to avenge him. I will tell you how it all happened," raising her eyes to heaven and exclaiming: "I wish the sun had never risen on that day! About twelve years ago, in my mountainous home, in Asheraty (independent portions of Kurdistan), my brother and myself, one day, wanted to go hunting. Anything that came in our way would be our kismat. Of course you know we Mohammedans, before undertaking anything, ask our Mollah (priests), to look into the Koran and see if it would be well for us to start on that business, or not. On that particular day, my brother opened the Koran and his finger rested on the place where it says, 'Allah is with his faithful.'"

INTERIOR OF AN ORIENTAL HOME.

"We rode our horses in company with ten of our attendants, and when we had gone a little distance, one of the men sneezed three times. I begged my brother to defer our hunt. He, laughing at me, said: 'I see you are not as courageous as I thought you were: you are afraid, and, as an excuse, are saying, three times is a bad omen.' Unsheathing his sword he shook it in the air, and said, 'Who dare to come near us? Do you see my sword?'

"So we went our way. Six miles from home we met a loaded caravan on its way to Ajam (Persia), from Constantinople, and we proceeded to take it. If the muleteers had not resisted, no one would have been killed. We were compelled to be severe with them. My brother shot one of them dead. Just as we were turning the head of the caravan towards home, a hen he hostess called for Sazandas (women musicians), who played on one-sided drums, with their fingers; two women sang, following the music. The songs were love-songs, some of them by Rustam and Sheeren, many thousands of years old.

As the musicians sang and played, the group listened with closed eyes.

They asked for a story and I told them about "Issa" (Jesus), the birth in the manger, the song of the angels as the shepherds heard it, the crucifixion and the resurrection. They listened eagerly, and tears gathered in many eyes, and some said: "We want to hear more about Issa. He is better than our prophet."

When refreshments are served no one should accept until sure that every one higher in rank than oneself has been helped. Even then, you should offer the dish, with a "koory takalief" (slight offer or invitation), to others present.

When the time came for parting, each maid brought her mistress' out-door costume, that had been neatly folded away in a square piece of silk made for the purpose. First, there is the yarim jorab, (half-stocking), made of dark-colored silk. Then there are the tightly-fitting shoes which come up as high as the instep. The second piece (about two-and-a-half yards wide) of the same silk as the stockings, is gathered at the instep and reaches again to the waist, where it is sowed to a band. The second out-door garment is a large piece of dark blue silk, or linen material, thrown over the head and reaching to within four inches of the ground. The third, is the white linen veil, about half a yard wide and about a yard long, two corners of which are caught together with jewels, just over the forehead and drop down over the face. There is a piece just over the eyes, of net-like needle-work, which enables the wearer to see and to recognize others, though no one can recognize her. Even a husband may see his wife on the street and not know her.

We all said, "Khoda Hafeig," (The Lord's Peace) and "Mosharaf," (Your highness is welcome), and then, "Farewell!"

In the evening, while at meal in my room, the hostess entered and extended to me her open hand, holding a handsome ruby finger-ring. I drew back.

"The Kurdish lady," said the hostess, "gave me this ring to give to you."

I said, "I cannot accept such a costly gift from a stranger."

"Well," the hostess said, "I will leave it here, and will tell her that you accepted it. She will see you to-morrow, when we expect to go to a nearby shrine. It is just as good as going to Carbella. We would like you to enjoy yourself with us."

Early next morning, while yet asleep, I heard some one singing, and opening my eyes saw a ragged beggar with a rough stick in his hand, standing near me. I was frightened and offended. The beggar suddenly laughed out and said: "Don't you know me?"

The "Ivory" is a favorite shaving soap because it makes a profuse rich lather, which softens the beard to be removed and leaves the skin unharmed.

It costs about one-fifth as much as the so called shaving soaps and many who have used it for this purpose for years, will not have any other.

The vegetable oils of which Ivory Soap is made, fit it for many special uses for which other soaps are unsafe or unsatisfactory.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Our "Boys in Blue" and the Dangers they Encounter—A Christian Soldier's Testimony—Army Temptations—Nursing on the Field—A Useful Recipe.

THERE is no use to-day in writing about anything else, for all our hearts are with our dear soldier boys in the field. The first thing in the morning and the last thing at night we women at home pray for and think of those brave fellows who are enduring so much for the sake of the country and the dear old flag. As I write there seems a good prospect that before long peace will return and our army, after awhile, be dissolved, and again the men who have handled guns and swords will go back to the office, the factory and the plow. God bless them to-day and keep them strong and brave. Especially are we distressed just now for the men who are sick and in hospitals. Outbreaks of fever where there are great numbers of men encamped; where the water supply is scanty or vile, and the conditions unfavorable to the maintenance of health, are to be expected. When to the ordinary danger of this we add the strain of fierce heat in a tropical climate, the lack of variety in food, and the many hardships incidental to a soldier's life, the wonder grows not that so many should be ill, but that so large a number of the men can stand up and be well in the unfavorable circumstances they encounter. It speaks splendidly for their past record.

I HEARD a very touching story the other day. It was related to a Northfield audience by Major Whittle who had just then returned from Tampa. He said that on a cot in a hospital there lay a dying boy. His mother had just come from a distant State to see him, but he was unconscious and passed away a few minutes after she arrived at his bedside. She turned down the sheet from her dead boy and on the breast of his shirt there was the badge of the Christian Association of which he had been a member. They told her that when he was very ill he had asked for this badge and it had been removed from his coat and pinned on the shirt, and there day by day the wasted hand sought and held it as if it were a comfort. The day before he died some of the Christian workers who were ministering to the sick and dying, were talking with a man lying on a cot near this boy, and as the man did not respond readily to what they urged, this lad spoke, saying, "Don't give him up. Tell him about Christ." Then the question was asked: "Are you a Christian?" And the answer came steadily and clear from the pallid lips, "You bet I am." I can hardly tell you how this simple, boyish testimony moved and thrilled me. I am glad to know that in the ranks and in the camps hundreds of men, strong to fight the foe, have surrendered themselves without reserve to serve the rest of their lives, whether long or short, under the banner of Jesus Christ.

ONE of the foes our men in the army have to fight is the temptation to drink. This is all the greater because of the scarcity in many cases of good cold water. Oh! how they long for a deep drink from the well at home on the farm; how they remember the lowering of the bucket into the dark, cool depths, and the drawing it up dripping and cold, and then taking a long, deep drink—all they want. If only they knew it, poor lads, it is far better to suffer the pangs of thirst than to form the habit of resorting to an intoxicant, because a man who learns one is so poor a crutch is sure to have it break before long. Most of the crew and of the shipwreck which come to men's lives may be attributed directly or indirectly to the habit of a resort to stimulants, and it behooves us all to do what we can to form a right public opinion on this matter. The saloon is the sworn enemy of all that is good in our national life. We are glad to know that drinking has been discouraged in the army and that profanity is not regarded as a necessary accompaniment of success.

ANOTHER thing we have to be proud of as women is that there have been shown energy, prudence, common sense and heroism by our people who have been working at home, and by the women who have gone to the front as nurses. In the beginning of the war it was said that women nurses would not be needed. The opportunity to refute this came the other day at Siboney, when the men were glad enough to have the assistance of Miss Jennings, and indeed one would fancy that by this time in the world's history men might see that when it comes to a question of nursing or of household economics, you cannot very well count the women out. I hope that we all, in our family prayers and in our closet, remember definitely our "boys in blue." Somebody's son is there, dear mother, even if he is not yours; somebody's husband, somebody's sweetheart, somebody's brother, and as I believe more and more that the whole round world is bound by golden chains of prayer around the feet of God, I want everybody to feel that if she can do nothing else for the country, she can pray, and her prayer will reach the throne of God, and it will be answered.

She may never see the answer; but if she prays for any blessing to come upon any one, even though it be a stranger, her prayer will not return unto her void. Let us pray not only for the physical well-being of our officers and men for victory over all our foes and speedy peace, but let us ask that to every man on our ships and in our land forces it may be given to see the Saviour who died for him and to have life in him from henceforth the indwelling Christ. That is a large thing to ask, but when we go to God we have a right to ask, not for a pittance, but for a bountiful supply.

I HAVE lately received a number of excellent recipes for salt rising bread, one of which I insert: Over night, take one teacup of milk and heat to boiling. Stir in a large tablespoonful of cornmeal and set in a warm place till morning. Then pour in boiling water till lukewarm; add one teaspoonful of sugar and a pinch of salt. Stir in flour till it makes a thick batter, and set in a warm place to rise. When very light, take two quarts of flour, sift, add your salt rising, one tablespoonful of lard, teaspoonful of salt, tablespoonful of sugar, teacup of milk and warm water mixed sufficient to make the dough stiff enough to mould into loaves. Knead well; set to rise in a warm place; when light, bake in a moderate oven till done.

CORFU, N. Y., Nov. 22, 1897.

Dear Sir: My trouble was nervous dyspepsia. I was a great sufferer and life was indeed a burden. I have employed some of the best physicians from Boston to Buffalo, but I kept running down all the time, being reduced in weight from 190 to 150 pounds. I could only sleep occasionally and could not eat solid food—death would have been welcomed. I was about to resign my pastorate and give up the fight when I commenced using the Electropoise. SELF-DENIAL.

Paul Doctrine of Divine Help in the Conflic of the Two Natures. I. Cor. 9: 24-27 Gal. 5: 16: 24.

In whatsoever way we may account for the fact, there can be no question about the existence of two natures in man. One of them, which Paul calls "the flesh," is in opposition to the other, which he calls "the spirit." It appears that the days in which he wrote, as in our own, the struggle between these natures was going on. The people in Corinth and Galatia had found that the flesh resisted the rule of the spirit, and would not submit to it without a conflict. Every man who tries to live a good, clean life, will make the same discovery. The flesh claims for indulgence and demands that appetites be gratified. If the man yields to them, he sinks to the level of the brute: if he determines to live for something higher than physical pleasure, he must expect struggle. Paul sympathized with converts who had made this discovery, and encouraged them to make the fight He did more—he told them how it might be won. The illustration he used must have been very impressive to his correspondents. He reminded them of the races and athletic contests. The young Greek might lead an easy life, spending his days in pleasure and his nights in revelry; or he might be ambitious to gain distinction, to win the laurel crown and have his name proclaimed throughout Greece. If he chose the latter course he would have to go into training, must deny himself in food and in drink, and must shun the forms of indulgence, in order to bring himself into the best physical condition. Was it worth while to do this? Hundreds of young Greeks believed it was. From their example Paul drew his lesson. They counted themselves repaid for running a crown that would wither; and this struggle to which Paul incites Christian converts, the prize was a crown that would be eternal. The same course must be followed to-day. There must be self-denial. The mastery of the spirit over the flesh must be exercised and maintained. But how was this to be done? How many who read these words had already made the attempt and failed! How many to this day have tried and are still failing! But is failure inevitable? Must the poor drunkard or libertine give up hope, because all his resolutions are broken and the flesh overcome the spirit? Paul says, no: there is power placed at the disposal of the hard-defeated struggler which will give complete victory. Christ stands ready to help all who desire his help and earnestly seek it. In his strength success is assured.

LONGING.

DOWN deep within my anxious heart,
There throbs a life akin with God,
That longs to share a nobler part
Than in this fading, earthly clod.
It longs to lose this mortal frame,
And leap beyond these walls of clay,
To soar across the heavenly plains,
And homage to its Maker pay.

Though, while a pris'ner here below
To mortal scenes, and mortal life;
I still may onward, upward go
Till vict'ry crowns this mortal strife.
Then like a bird escaped its cage,
That soars on high in joyful songs;
Shall I my heavenly powers engage
In praise, to whom all praise belongs.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

J. C. F., Walnut, Ill. I have heard it argued that war with Spain was declared in consequence of the Maine disaster. Is this the case?

War was not declared on account of the Maine. It was clearly set forth in the President's declaration that the loss of our battleship was only an incident, the real cause being the misgovernment and oppression of the people of Cuba, the continued state of war in the island, and the evident intention to exterminate the Cubans by starvation.

A. I. L., Grantville, N. C. 1. Are we, as Christians, bound to keep the Ten Commandments? 2. Does a Christian in regeneration receive forgiveness for his future sins as well as those that are past?

1. The Christian is not under the law but under grace. That however does not free him from obligation. More is expected of him in the way of righteousness than if he were under the law. You lay down rules for your child and make him obey, but when he grows to manhood he is free from your rules. Do you not expect that he will behave without rules? That was your object in training him, to produce in him a disposition which would keep him right when he became his own master. Now, which of the Commandments do you as a Christian, free from law, feel that you are at liberty to break? You would keep them out of love for God, whether you were bound or not. 2. The object of regeneration is to set you free from the power of sin. Sin is much worse in a regenerated man than one who is not regenerated. Should he sin he must go to God sorrowing, and ask for pardon through Christ (see 1. John 2:1).

C. B., Howe, Neb. Do you think a regular system of graduation in our Sunday Schools would be a good thing?

For one of the objects of Sunday School teaching a system of graduation is helpful. It is important to have the child thoroughly grounded in the facts and events of Bible history and to make him familiar with the character and conduct of the persons who figure in the sacred narrative. All this he should learn and have clearly in mind, and this may be tested by an examination which, if he passes it, will give him rank as a graduate. But there is another object in Sunday School teaching. The child should learn how to apply the principles of Bible teaching to his everyday life. When he leaves the school to go into business life it will not be of so much importance that he can recite in their order the succession of Israelitish kings, as that he [illegible] of the evil of sin, the beauty of righteousness, and the certainty that if he relies on God will help him to overcome. I remember who has aimed chiefly at the [illegible] may be fewer of his boys graduated, but he may have done a more useful work.

M. S. A., [illegible], Ky. Is it wrong for one who professes Christ to attend novels? I am [illegible] and feel an hour [illegible] to my business, but have time to read.

There are many excellent novels [illegible] other [illegible] and still many [illegible] and [illegible] and cannot peruse or absorb anything that calls for the slightest mental effort. This applies to the vast array of publications which have no other aim than to excite the imagination and stir the emotions. If one will read novels, let them be only the best—standards of their class, by authors who write with a high purpose, and convey a wholesome as well as an interesting lesson.

W. M. M., Raton, N. Mex. Would it not please God better if Christians, instead of paying money to insurance societies, were to give it to the churches, so that they might build hospitals, asylums, and take care of the poor?

Some of the churches and religious societies do take up one branch of the insurance business—that of annuities. We have heard of instances in which a person paying a lump sum, is promised a certain amount annually as long as he lives. We do not think, however, that life-insurance is displeasing to God. The principle of it is mutual help. It has been found that of every thousand persons of mixed ages, a certain almost unvarying proportion die every year. If everyone in the thousand contributes a certain sum to a fund, he is assured that the survivors will pay from the fund a stipulated amount to his representatives. Many a widow, who would have found it difficult to get admission to an asylum, has been provided for in this way. It often happens that a young man with wife and children and a small income has no other way of fulfilling the Apostle's injunction (1. Timothy 5: 8), to provide for those of his own house.

H. M. S., Biloxi, Miss. 1. Where is the harm in drinking liquor? 2. Is there any passage in the Bible where we are forbidden to use liquor?

1. It has already been so conclusively demonstrated by the most eminent scientists of the day that liquor (outside of its possible [illegible] as a medicine) is not only wholly unnecessary but harmful, that we are surprised that such a question should be asked. The most recent experiment was that made by Commander Kitchener of the British Army in Egypt, who supplied strong liquors to one [illegible], malt liquor to a second, and nothing stronger than water to a third. The last greatly eclipsed the others in efficiency of endurance, proving that alcohol does not give strength but merely a temporary stimulation. Pathologists and [illegible] know that more crimes and [illegible] of the body and brain are traceable to alcohol than to all other causes combined. 2. There are so many passages cautioning against indulgence in drink that the Bible may be said to be full of them. See Eph. 5:8, Luke 21:34, Gal. 5:21, Isa. 28:8 and 5:11, Hosea 4:11, Prov. 21:17, 23:21, and 23:29, 30, 1. Cor. 6:10, Matt. 24:49–51, and many others.

Inquirer, Northampton, Mass. Where is "Mars' Head," mentioned by Dr. Talmage in his sermon on Sectarianism in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of July 27th, 1898?

It is situated off the coast of Nova Scotia.

R. V., New Brunswick, N. J. Will you kindly inform me why eggs are associated so prominently with Easter? Why more so at that especial date than any other?

The use of eggs at that season was originally symbolical of the revivification of nature—the new life in the spring. Christians, however, have considered it as emblematic of the resurrection and a future life. When the Persians celebrate the solar year (in March) they present each other with colored eggs.

S. M. C., Arcadia, O. 1. Will the unconverted live in the millennium and have an opportunity of accepting Christ? 2. Will the dead in Christ rise from their graves at the beginning of the millennium? 3. Does Christ's command to the rich young man (Matt. 19:21) to sell all he had and give to the poor indicate that it is wrong for the Christian to save his money to provide for old age or sickness?

1. The Scriptures do not give clear or definite accounts of the conditions of life in the millennium, but we infer that it will be a time of extraordinary conversion and that great multitudes will be born again in a day. (See Micah 4:2; Isa. 2:2–4). 2. See Rev. 20:4, 5. We doubt, however, whether there will be a resurrection of the dead body. The apostle appears to teach (1 Cor. 15:35–52) that a new spiritual body will be given to them in place of the one that has turned to dust. 3. No, it was a special command to that particular young man. He thought himself about perfect and Christ, with divine insight, placed his finger unerringly on the one weak point of his character, showing him there was in his property something he could not give up, even to save his soul.

E. D. Wright, Nashville, Tenn. In answering recently the question what Dr. Talmage's views on baptism were, you evaded the question and simply stated what his custom was. Please give us his views, especially in reference to the "one baptism" mentioned in Eph. 4:5.

We thought our correspondent would have no difficulty in inferring Dr. Talmage's views from his practice. When a minister is willing to administer the rite in any mode that the candidate believes to be Scriptural, it is safe to conclude that he deems either method Scriptural. The "one baptism" mentioned by the Apostle, is, he believes, the baptism in the name of Christ. As you are aware (see 1. Cor 1:12-15) a dispute had arisen in the early church about baptism which was causing trouble. In settling it he said nothing that is recorded about the mode, but dwelt on the union it typified in Christ. In the "Didache," which is believed to have been written about the year 100 A. D., and purports to be the "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," chapter VII is devoted to baptism. The person administering the rite is there told that if it is not practicable to baptize with living (that is running) water, he may use still water; if he cannot use cold water, he may use warm, and that the rite may be performed by pouring water on the head of the candidate. This appears to indicate that at that time, baptism was performed in different ways, and that the "one baptism" enjoined by Paul was the one act of confession of Christ, not one uniform mode.

A reader sends us the following puzzle which is both Scriptural and secular, and the solution of which is found in the Bible. In verse as it stands, refers to a country which has been in the minds of many of our readers in recent years:

> A land that's caused much talk of late.
> And many there met dreadful fate;
> 'Twas there two parricides once fled,
> Whose sword had left their father dead.

H. A. S., Sterling, Ohio. 1. What progress has been made in raising the Spanish ships sunk at Santiago? 2. The Sixth Commandment reads, "Thou shalt not kill." Does God not consider it as sinful to kill a man in war as to kill him by murder?

1. Wreckers with diving apparatus are now at work, endeavoring to raise the hulks of the Colon and Maria Teresa, and have some hopes of doing so. 2. There are degrees of sin as in everything else. It would be obviously unjust to condemn one engaged in war not of his own seeking, should he slay an opponent, equally with one who deliberately and without excuse seeks to destroy life. While all war is wrong, the distinction may be drawn between death on the field of battle and death by the attack of an assassin. War is an evil and wrong in itself. Yet many noble Christians, such as Havelock, Chinese Gordon and Hedley Vicars have engaged in it. While human society is as organized as it is at present wars will continue to intervene, even Christians who may be called upon to defend their homes and their religion.

SAN SEBASTIAN, THE MOST FAMOUS OF SPAIN'S WATERING-PLACES.

San Sebastian is the summer resort of Spanish royalty, and is most delightfully situated. Madrid's aristocracy flock thither every year for sea-bathing, and the front of the bay presents the appearance of a small city of tents and bath-houses. Commercially, it is insignificant. Its population is less than 25,000.

E. L., Annabel, Mo. I have heard it asserted that it would have been impossible for Christ to have come down from the cross, however he might have wished to. Is that true?

Christ did many things that were considered impossible, as when he healed the blind, stilled the storm and raised the dead. His remark to Peter (Matt. 26:53) that his Father would give him twelve legions of angels if he asked for deliverance, showed that he believed he could be delivered if he wished. The only reason why he could not come down from the cross was that love of the human race held him there. As the mother says she cannot leave her child, who is sick of diphtheria, or typhoid, though she runs the risk of contracting the disease. There is no physical reason why she could not leave him, but her love makes it impossible.

The President's Flag. In response to a number of inquiries asking what is the President's flag, and when it is used, we answer that according to the Army Regulations, March 28, 1898, the Presidential banner is of scarlet silk or bunting, with a five-pointed gold star in each of the four corners, in the center a large fifth star; within this fifth star a spread eagle, star forming a blue field, upon which is embroidered the American eagle with wings outstretched. On the scarlet field around the large star are thirty-four gold stars, one for each State in the Union. The flag is floated over a military or naval station during a Presidential visit.

SUFFERING IN THE CAMPS.

Why Heroes of the War come Home to Die—Charges of Gross Neglect of the Sick to be Investigated—Relief Work at all the Camps—The Christian Commission.

TROOPS BACK FROM SANTIAGO CAMPING AT MONTAUK POINT, N. Y.

WHEN our troops came home from Cuba, it was generally believed that the sufferings and hardships they had endured were ended; the disclosures of the last two weeks, in relation to the unsanitary condition of the home camps and the inadequacy of the arrangements for the care of the sick, have come with the shock of a painful surprise to our people generally. Sickness prevails to an alarming extent in the military camps, not only among the troops who have returned from Cuba, but among those who remained at home. Malarial fever, typhoid and dysentery have carried off many scores of victims. At Camp Wikoff, Long Island, the hospitals are over-crowded, and many deaths are said to have occurred owing to the insufficiency of the medical arrangements and the lack of hospital room. Serious charges have been made in connection with the army commissary service, and, it is alleged, that the troops who have returned from Santiago were huddled together like cattle on the transports and that many of the sick were neglected and died on the voyage, arriving at the camp emaciated and dying from sheer debility. An official investigation has been commenced to fix the responsibility for this cruel neglect. Charges have also been made that the proper authorities failed to supply Camp Thomas and Chickamauga Park with the necessary blankets and mosquito bars, and that the food was poor and insufficient in quantity; that at Camp Wikoff the supplies ordered for the sick were countermanded to such that aggravated sickness and increased mortality resulted and that the hospital accommodations were wholly inadequate at several of the camps. The site chosen for the camp at Tampa was unwholesome being on made land entirely unsuited for the purpose. A Board of Visiting Officers to Camp Alger found evidences of gross neglect and mismanagement in the hospitals. Meanwhile, wholly apart from the official charges, a large number of complaints have been made to the military authorities at Washington and to the governors of States, by relatives of soldiers who have died in consequence of the shocking conditions at the different camps, and as the result of neglect and starvation on the way home. Many of these complaints are of a kind beyond description and reveal a condition of affairs which it is difficult to believe. It is understood, when the responsibility is fixed as the result of the proposed investigation, that the government will deal severely with all through whose incompetency or mismanagement the troops have been sufferers. The charges have stirred up intense feeling everywhere, and nothing short of a thorough and sweeping inquiry and the meting out of full justice to the offenders will satisfy the popular indignation.

When the first disclosures of the soldiers' sufferings were made public, the hearts of sympathetic people were deeply touched and food and delicacies for the sick and wounded began to pour into the camps from a host of kindly donors. At Camp Wikoff, wagon-loads of nourishing food and tempting delicacies were received from many sources, and no effort was spared to make the men comfortable and to hasten their convalescence. Many of the regulars and volunteers who were little better than skeletons on their arrival, are now receiving strengthening food in abundance. Milk, ice, fresh vegetables, eggs and choice meats are now supplied in quantities, through the kind efforts of the Womens' National War Relief Association, many of whose officers and members have been at the camp almost daily visiting the sick in tents and hospitals and ministering to their needs. This association is a most effective agency in relief work. Its President is Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant, and its Vice-Presidents are the wives of the Governors of the States of the Union, and such prominent ladies as Mrs. Fitzhugh Lee, Mrs. John A. Logan, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, and others. Miss Helen Gould, Mrs. Russell Sage, Mrs. Daniel Lamont, Mrs. Seth Low, Mrs. Frederick D. Grant, Mrs. Daniel Butterfield, Mrs. S. V. White, Mrs. H. K. Browne, Mrs. Charles H. Brush, and others equally representative, constitute the Board of Directors and Executive Committee. This organization, which had its origin in a quiet little talk among some ladies gathered in Mrs. Brush's rooms, has its present field of largest activity at Montauk Point, where a cottage serves as its distributing point, where, with Mrs. Walworth in command, necessaries and delicacies are sent out to the sick. Miss Gould, Mrs. Sage, and other members of the association make frequent visits to the camp, going through, seeing and talking to the sick soldiers, and finding out their needs. Miss Gould has supplemented her personal service and previous large gifts by the recent magnificent donation of $25,000, which is now being expended for the benefit of the sick. Her generosity will doubtless be blessed in the saving of many precious lives.

Our artist has pictured, on the first page of this issue, a scene at Camp Wikoff, where Mrs. Walworth and Miss Gould are shown on their rounds among the sick soldiers. Their coming is hailed with pleasure by the convalescent and never fails to bring a hopeful smile to the wan faces of the brave lads who have suffered so much. The fever-stricken, too, are cheered by the visits of these "ministering angels" who never pass the tent of an invalid soldier without leaving some token of their interest in his welfare.

Many of the troops are going home on extended furloughs and some regiments have already been mustered out of service, although there are hundreds of soldiers still too weak to undertake the journey to their homes.

The Gospel work goes on in the various camps and on board the transports without interruption and with increasing good results. Our War Testaments are everywhere welcomed. Mr. C. F. Barrett has general charge of the Young Men's Christian Association work with the troops at Santiago and on board the transport Comanche off shore at Daiquiri, and at General Shafter's headquarters. The workers are completely worn out, and have had the hardest experience of their lives.

RETURNED SOLDIERS AT CAMP WIKOFF RESTING AFTER THE VOYAGE HOME—A CAMP KITCHEN.

At the meetings, a mile and a-half outside Santiago, tents were crowded all day long. At all the home camps the work of the Christian Commission is going forward with undiminished zeal, and hundreds are being added to the thousands already saved.

Evangelist Munhall, who recently returned from a visit to the camp at Tampa, sends us this interesting report:

The first night after my arrival, Mr. Mahan drove with me to the camp of the "Rough Riders." It was very dark. They were encamped upon flat, sandy ground among the saw palmettos. Right in the edge of their camp, about one hundred yards apart, were two canteens where intoxicants in large quantities were being dealt out. Many of the men were under the influence of the drink. We stopped our vehicle midway between the canteens, and lighted two large gasoline lamps. I shouted at the top of my voice: "See here! We have not been upon our meeting-house, but we are going to have meeting; so come this way!" And a lot of them came. Mr. Mahan distributed some song-books. I said: "We have no rocking-chairs to offer you, but as some of you have doubtless more than once sat upon cacti in Arizona, saw palmetto will make a good comfortable seat for you; so please crowd up this way and sit down." Most of them did so. Mr. Mahan started a hymn.

I wish the Sunday morning congregations in all so-called fashionable churches could have heard the singing. To see these rugged men seated thus amidst the dense semi-tropical vegetation, their faces a study for a first-class artist—some strongly marked by sin, and all kindly, intelligent and intensely interesting, lighted by the glow of our lamps, and standing en-relievo against the darkness of the jungle, and then hear them sing! It was worth going a thousand miles to attend such a meeting. I noticed particularly one man. He did not sing. I nudged him and said, "Why don't you sing?" "I can't," was the reply. I said, "I don't believe you." "You don't." "No," I said, "I don't. You can sing well enough, if you would just let yourself out." "Well," he said, "this book has no notes, and I don't know the song: if you will sing something I know, I'll help you." So when we had finished, I said, "There are some of you who did not know that song; and, as it had not the music, you could not sing it. Now, is there any song you can sing? Just name it, and we'll try it. Come now, what say you?" My man called out so that all heard him, "Sing 'Rock of Ages.'" Of course we sang it. He sang every word right through, though I think he did not strike one note correctly; but he sang! Before he got through the second verse, the tears were rolling down his sun-browned cheeks. His face was flushed with drink and bruised from blows, but the tears made it beautiful. When the song was ended, I said to him, "Did not I tell you you could sing!" He replied, "Of course I can sing that hymn, 'cause my old mother taught it to me when I was a little fellow." After singing several more hymns, I told them some of my experiences as a soldier in the other war, and was thus better able to command their closest attention while I gave them "The Gospel of the grace of God."

Standing next to the man above was referred to another, the study of whose face greatly interested me as the service proceeded. At its close, as I shook him by the hand, I asked, "Where are you from?" (As I have been in almost every nook and corner of our country, and know some one in nearly every city of the land, when I want to get acquainted with a man, I usually ask him that question, for I am almost certain to know some one he knows). He replied, "From K——." I named several persons, friends of mine, residing in K——. They proved to be his friends, also. I told him I had often preached in K——, and lectured twice at the university located there. "Why," said he, "I am an alumnus of that university. We were well acquainted at once. He opened his heart to me. He had wandered from the old home religious teachings and example and gone to the far west into a wild life. He found Satan a hard master. He wanted to become a Christian and live as such. I gave him instructions such as I thought he needed and prayed with him. I trust he laid hold on Christ.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

OUR OWN TIMES.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Acts 13: 36, ... { David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep.

THAT is a text which has for a long time been running through my mind. Sermons have a time to be born as well as a time to die; a cradle as well as a grave. David, cowboy and stone-slinger, and fighter, and dramatist, and blank-verse writer, and prophet, did his best for the people of his time, and then went and laid down on the southern hill of Jerusalem in that sound slumber which nothing but an archangelic blast can startle. "David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep." It was his own generation that he had served; that is, the people living at the time he lived. And have you ever thought that our responsibilities are chiefly with the people now walking abreast of us? There are about four generations to a century now, but in olden time, life was longer, and there was, perhaps, only one generation to a century. Taking these facts into the calculation, I make a rough guess, and say that there have been at least one hundred and eighty generations of the human family. With reference to them we have no responsibility. We cannot teach them, we cannot correct their mistakes, we cannot soothe their sorrows, we cannot heal their wounds. Their sepulchres are deaf and dumb to anything we might say to them. I admit that I am in sympathy with the child whose father had suddenly died, and who in her little evening prayer wanted to continue to pray for her father, although he had gone into heaven, and no more needed her prayers, and looking up into her mother's face, said: "O, mother, I cannot leave him all out. Let me say, thank God that I had a good father once, so I can keep him in my prayers."

But the one hundred and eighty generations have passed off. Passed up. Passed down. Gone forever. Then there are generations to come after our earthly existence has ceased. We shall not see them; we shall not hear any of their voices; we will take no part in their convocations, their elections, their revolutions, their catastrophes, their triumphs. We will in no wise affect the 180 generations gone or the 180 generations to come, except as from the galleries of heaven the former generations look down and rejoice at our victories, or as we may, by our behavior, start influences, good or bad, that shall roll on through the advancing ages. But our business is, like David, to serve our own generation, the people now living, those whose lungs now breathe, and whose hearts now beat. And mark you, it is not a silent procession, but moving. It is a "forced march" at twenty-four miles a day, each hour being a mile. Going with that celerity, it has got to be a quick service on our part, or no service at all. We not only cannot teach the 180 generations past, and will not see the 180 generations to come, but this generation now on the stage will soon be off, and we ourselves will be off with them. The fact is, that you and I will have to start very soon for our work, or it will be ironical and sarcastic for any one after our exit to say of us, as it was said of David, "After he had served his own generation by the will of God, he fell on sleep."

Well, now, let us look around earnestly, prayerfully, in a common sense way, and see what we can do for our own generation. First of all, let us see to it that, as far as we can, they have enough to eat. The human body is so constituted that three times a day the body needs food as much as a lamp needs oil, as much as a locomotive needs fuel. To meet this want God has girdled the earth with apple orchards, orange groves, wheat fields, and oceans full of fish, and prairies full of cattle. And notwithstanding this, I will undertake to say that the vast majority of the human family are now suffering either for lack of food or the right kind of food. Our civilization is all askew, and God only can set it right. Many of the greatest estates of to-day have been built out of the blood and bones of unrequited toil. In olden times, for the building of forts and towers, the inhabitants of Ispahan had to contribute 70,000 skulls, and Bagdad 90,000 human skulls, and that number of people were compelled to furnish the skulls. But these two contributions added together made only 160,000 skulls, while into the tower of the world's wealth and pomp have been wrought the skeletons of uncounted numbers of the half-fed populations of the earth — millions of skulls. Don't sit down at your table with five or six courses of abundant supply and think nothing of that family in the next street who would take any one of those five courses between soup and almond nuts and feel they were in heaven. The lack of the right kind of food is the cause of much of the drunkenness. After drinking what many of our grocers call coffee, sweetened with what many call sugar, and eating what many of our butchers call meat, and chewing what many of our bakers call bread, many of the laboring class feel so miserable they are tempted to put into their nasty pipes what the tobacconist calls tobacco, or go into the drinking saloons for what the rum sellers call beer. Good coffee would do much in driving out bad rum.

How can we serve our generation with enough to eat? By sitting down in embroidered slippers and lounging back in an arm-chair, our mouth puckered up around a Havana of the best brand, and through clouds of luxuriant smoke reading about political economy and the philosophy of strikes? No, no! By finding out who in this city has been living on gristle, and sending them a tenderloin beefsteak. Seek out some family, who through sickness or conjunction of misfortunes have not enough to eat, and do for them what Christ did for the hungry multitudes of Asia Minor, multiplying the loaves and the fishes. Let us quit the surfeiting of ourselves until we cannot choke down another crumb of cake, and begin the supply of others' necessities. So far from helping appease the world's hunger are those whom Isaiah describes as grinding the faces of the poor. You have seen a farmer or a mechanic put a scythe or an axe on a grindstone, while some one was turning it round and round and the man holding the axe bore on it harder and harder, while the water dropped from the grindstone and the edge of the axe from being round and dull, got keener and keener. So I have seen men who were put against the grindstone of hardship, and while one turned the crank, another would press the unfortunate harder down and harder down until he was ground away thinner and thinner—his comforts thinner, his prospects thinner, and his face thinner. And Isaiah shrieks out: "What mean ye that ye grind the faces of the poor?"

It is an awful thing to be hungry. It is an easy thing for us to be in good humor with all the world when we have no lack. But let hunger take full possession of us, and we would all turn into barbarians and cannibals and fiends. Suppose that some of the energy we are expending in useless and unavailing talk about the bread question should be expended in merciful alleviations. I have read that the battlefield on which more troops met than on any other in the world's history was the battlefield of Leipsic—160,000 men under Napoleon, 250,000 men under Schwarzenberg. No, no! The greatest and most terrific battle is now being fought all the world over. It is the battle for bread. The ground tone of the finest passage in one of the great musical masterpieces, the artist says, was suggested to him by the cry of the hungry populace of Vienna as the king rode through and they shouted, "Bread! Give us bread!" And all through the great harmonies of musical academy and cathedral I hear the pathos, the ground tone, the tragedy, of uncounted multitudes, who, with streaming eyes and wan cheeks and broken hearts, in behalf of themselves and their families, are pleading for bread.

Let us take another look around to see how we may serve our generation. Let us see, as far as possible, that they have enough to wear. God looks upon the human race, and knows just how many inhabitants the world has. The statistics of the world's population are carefully taken in civilized lands, and every few years officers of government go through the land and count how many people there are in the United States or England, and great accuracy is reached. But when people tell us how many inhabitants there are in Asia or Africa, at best it must be a wild guess. Yet God knows the exact number of people on our planet, and he has made enough apparel for each. A wardrobe for all nations, adapted to all climes, and not a string or a button or a pin or a hook or an eye wanting.

But, alas! where are the good clothes for three-fourths of the human race? The other one-fourth have appropriated them. The fact is, there needs to be and will be, a redistribution. Not by anarchistic violence. If outlawry had its way, it would rend and tear and diminish, until, instead of three-fourths of the world not properly attired, four-fourths would be in rags. I will let you know how the redistribution will take place. By generosity on the part of those who have a surplus, and increased industry on the part of those suffering from deficit.

God has done his part toward the dressing of the human race. He grows a surplus of wool on the sheep's back, and flocks roam the mountains and valleys with a burden of warmth intended for transference to human comfort, when the shuttles of the factories, reaching all the way from Chattahoochee to the Merrimac, shall have spun and woven it. In white letters of snowy fleece God has been writing for a thousand years, his wish that there might be warmth for all nations. While others are discussing the effect of high or low tariff, or no tariff at all, on wool, you and I had better see if in our wardrobes we have nothing that we can spare for the suffering, or pick out some poor lad of the street and take him down to a clothing store and fit him out for the season. Gospel of shoes! Gospel of hats! Gospel of clothes for the naked!

Again, let us look around and see how we may serve our generation. What short-sighted mortals we would be if we were anxious to clothe and feed only the most insignificant part of a man, namely, his body, while we put forth no effort to clothe and feed and save his soul. Time is a little piece broken off a great eternity. What are we doing for the souls of this present generation? Let me say it is a generation worth saving. Most magnificent men and women are in it. We make a great ado about the improvements in navigation, and in locomotion, and in art and machinery. We remark what wonders of telegraph and telephone and the stethoscope. What improvement is electric light over a tallow candle! But all these improvements are insignificant compared with the improvement in the human race. In olden times, once in a while, a great and good man or woman would come up, and the world has made a great fuss about it ever since; but now they are so numerous, we scarcely speak about them. We put a halo about the people of the past, but I think if the times demanded them, it would be found we have now living in this year 1898 fifty Martin Luthers, fifty George Washingtons, fifty Lady Huntingtons, fifty Elizabeth Frys. During our civil war more splendid warriors in North and South were developed in four years than the whole world developed in the previous twenty years. I challenge the 4,000 years before Christ and also the eighteen centuries after Christ to show me the equal of charity on a large scale of George Peabody. This generation of men and women is more worth saving than any one of the 180 generations that have passed off. Where shall we begin? With ourselves. That is the pillar from which we must start. Prescott, the blind historian, tells us how Pizarro saved his army for the right when they were about deserting him. With his sword he made a long mark on the ground. He said: "My men, on the north side are desertion and death; on the south side is victory; on the north side Panama and pove... on the south side Peru with all its ri... smed to be personally talking with Christ, as friend with friend, saying: h, how delightful it is! I knew you uld be with me when the time came, a I knew it would be sweet, but I did n know it would be as sweet as it is." Je fact was, he had served his genera-th in the Gospel ministry, and by the w of God he fell asleep. When in Af-ri. Majwara, the servant, looked into t tent of David Livingstone, and found ht on his knees, he stepped back, not whing to disturb him in prayer, and s e time after went in and found him in he same posture, and stepped back a in: but, after awhile, went in and t ched him, and, lo! the great traveler h finished his last journey, and he had d in the grandest posture a man ever t s—on his knees. In the museum of Cenwich, England, there is a fragment o book that was found in the Arctic r ons, amid the relics of Sir John Frank-li who had perished amid the snow and ic and the leaf of that piece of a book w turned down at the words, "When t passest through the waters I will be w thee." Having served his genera-t by the will of God he fell on sleep.

"hy will you keep us all so nervous t ing about that which is only a dormi-t and a pillowed slumber, canopied by a els' wings? Sleep! Transporting s p! And what a glorious awakening! Y and I have sometimes been thor-o hly bewildered after a long and fa-t ing journey: we have stopped at a fi d's house for the night, and after h rs of complete unconsciousness we h e opened our eyes, and before we could f collect our faculties, have said: "here am I; whose house is t and whose are these gard-e ?" And, then, it has flashed u n us in glad reality.

nd I should not wonder if, a r we have served our gener-a n, and by the will of God, h e fallen on sleep, the deep s p, the restful sleep, we should a ken in blissful bewilderment, a for a little while say: "Where a I? What palace is this? Wy, this looks like heaven! It s t is. Why, there is a build-i grander than all the castles o earth heaved into a mountain o splendor—that must be the p ce of Jesus. And look there, a nose walks lined with foliage n e beautiful than anything I e saw before, and see those w are walking down those a es of verdure. From what I h e heard of them, those two a in arm must be Moses and J hua, him of Mount Sinai and h of the halting sun over Geon.

But I must not look any long-er t those gardens of beauty, but e mine this building in which I h e just awakened. I look out o ne window this way and I l out that way and up and d n, and I find it is a mansion o immense size in which I am stop-pi . All its windows of agate and its c nnades of porphyry and alabaster W . I wonder if this is not the 'House o many Mansions,' of which I used to rel? It is; it is. There must be many o my kindred and friends in this very m sion. Hark! Whose are those voices? Wose are those bounding feet? I open t door and see, and lo! these are coming t ugh all the corridors and up and down a the stairs, our long-absent kindred. Wy, there is father, there is mother, t e are the children. All well again. A young again. All of us together again. Al as we embrace each other with the c 'Never more to part: never more to p ,' the arches, the alcoves, the hall-w s, echo and re-echo the words, 'Never m e to part, never more to part!' Then o glorified friends say: 'Come out with u and see heaven.' And, some of them b nding ahead of us and some of them sl ping beside us, we start down the iv y stairway. And we meet, coming up, o of the kings of ancient Israel, some-w t small of stature, but having a coun-te nce radiant with a thousand victories. Al as all are making obeisance to this gr t one of heaven, I cry out, 'Who is h ' and the answer comes: 'This is the greatest of all the kings: it is David, who, after he had served his generation by the w of God, fell on sleep.'"

OUR CHILDREN'S LETTERS.

A Very Joyful Guest—Kisses by Mail—Our Little Orphan Cuban Guests at the Mont-Lawn Home.

As many members of our family circle have been instrumental in the good work done at Mont-Lawn, we feel that they will be interested in reading the following letter (sample of many), from a little girl at Mont-Lawn to her "chum" in New York, because it shows how much good they are bringing into little lives that are often very sad ones:

DEAR FRIEND:—I am very glad to tell you I enjoy myself very much indeed. That is because the teachers are real sunbeams, so good to the children that they ought not no how to be sick. I think I feel much better here than in any place I ever was. It is so pleasant, I hope I was always able to stay here, because I enjoy myself very much indeed. The teachers are got true hearts, they take such good care of the children, like real mothers. We might as well say they are our mothers while we are here. We are just like free, we go out every day, either walking or picking flowers or either riding out. I close my letter with great delight and rejoicing. From your loving friend, LENA.

Here is what is called a "breakfast letter" at Mont-Lawn. House-mother and "teachers" get letters from little guests who have gone back to town, and these are often read aloud, while the "teachers," after serving the children, are eating their own breakfast. The "teachers" sing grace, too, like the children:

DEAR TEACHER: — I thank you very much for taking care of sister and I. You must come to see us some day, for I am positive that all of us will be glad to see you. I hope you are well. I want to know if Miss Collins and all the teachers are well and strong. I told my loving parents all about my nice time, and how we march into tent and what pretty songs we sing in chapel about little children and Jesus. I send my love to all. The baby is very sick. Your loving boy, HARRY.

Another chubby hand scrawls just this eloquent epistle:

Sebteen kisses for everyboddy. (Seventeen cross-marks after).

The author is about as long as your arm, and the most lovable, manly little fellow imaginable. His older brother wrote the letter at his dictation, and he made the marks. During his third meal at the Home, a visitor bent over him and interrupted his very busy dining with the question: "What is your name?" He paused long enough to answer: "James Michael Mulvaney and James Carter." "How in the world," asked the astonished inquirer, "do you have so much name?" "My first papa was Mr. James Michael Mulvaney and de papa I'se got now is Mr. James Carter," answered the loyal little man, as true to his stepfather as to his dead papa. Visiting his own home, one could but wonder how in its narrow, malodorous confines, loyalty and sweetness could flourish.

Among our guests at Mont-Lawn, were five little Cubans from Mrs. Selden's Training School for Spanish-Speaking Children, a good work with which our readers are familiar. These little fellows are natives of Havana, and are the children or charges of refugees, who fled in great distress and destitution from the island during its days of darkest trouble. They have every reason to love the stars and stripes, and to believe in the Christianity of the Protestant charities which have sheltered them.

Seeking Souls on the Highway

The Union Highway Mission of Philadelphia and its Evangelistic Work—Bringing in the Wanderers.

WHILE many are discussing "How to reach the masses," the Union Highway Mission, of Philadelphia, is in a simple way helping to solve the problem of how to reach all classes with the Gospel. At the Tabernacle, on Oxford street above Ridge avenue, meetings are held three evenings in the week, and all day on the Sabbath. The meeting-room is large and commodious, and is frequently taxed to its utmost capacity in order to accommodate those who come in enjoy the evangelistic gatherings. The salvation of souls is the watchword of all services, and God honors the work by constantly giving the workers souls for their hire.

The Highway Mission Wagon leaves the Tabernacle every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings, for different parts of the city, sometimes going into the aristocratic sections and at other times in the slum districts, but the workers are always sure of a large audience, whether they stop among the lower, middle or upper classes. The fine appearance of the wagon, the electric lights, and the spirited singing attract and hold the people. At the close of the services on the wagon, an invitation is usually given for those who want to be prayed with to come closer to the side of the vehicle, and it is no uncommon sight to see seekers kneeling in the street, with the workers asking God to pardon their sins.

Another important work of the Mission is among fallen girls, and to enable them to make their efforts successful, the "Haven of Rest" Rescue Mission has been opened at 1537 North Twenty-second street, and it has already proved a blessing to many who have sought shelter under its roof. One inmate, who was converted at the Home, afterwards conducted a religious meeting in the ward, and among the same class of girls from which she had been taken, thus showing to those poor unfortunates that Jesus can save even the outcast.

Miss Ida M. Potts is the Matron of the Home, and her refined manner, and consistent Christian character are a great influence for good. She felt that the Lord called her to this special field of labor, and she left her parents' home to live among those for whom so many have nothing but unkind words and looks of disdain.

In addition to its all-round work at home, the organization has also an interest in the foreign field, and has a missionary in China. While the members were earnestly praying that God would direct them to the right one to send to China, Miss Alice L. Landis spent a Sabbath at the Tabernacle. She felt called to the work, and after making the matter a subject of further prayer, the Missionary Committee chose her, and she is now stationed at Maceo, South China.

The pastor of the Mission, Rev. Frederick Reel, is an earnest, energetic preacher. He holds a responsible position in the Treasurer's office at the Reading Terminal, and preaches the Gospel "without money and without price." The entire work is supported by voluntary contributions; and no fairs, festivals, entertainments or begging is allowed.

Captivity of the Ten Tribes.

S. S. Lesson for Sept. 18. II. Kings 17 : 9-18.
Golden Text, I. Chron. 28 : 9.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE kingdom of Israel, consisting of the ten tribes separated from Judah, had continued two hundred and fifty years, from the beginning of the reign of "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin." But not one of Jeroboam's successors had the testimony that he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord; one and all followed the example of Jeroboam, and the state religion of the country was the worship of the golden calves: the pure worship of the true God was the exception. Idolatry in Judah was spoken of as walking "in the way of the Kings of Israel" (II. Kings 8: 18), and things had now come to such a pass that it was only a question of time before the judgment of God should be executed upon his rebellious people. His patience and forbearance are wonderfully manifest in his dealings with Ahab and Jeroboam, and in the blessed ministry of Elijah and Elisha to these and other Kings of Israel. But in vain did God look for fruit on the vine of Israel; it brought forth only wild grapes.

In Lev. 26 and Deut. 28, the judgments which should befall Israel if the people would not hearken to the voice of their God are enumerated; sickness, drought, famine, war, the plague of wild beasts, all had from time to time been visited upon them. But the great and final punishment was that they should be scattered, their sanctuaries brought into desolation, and their enemies should dwell in their land. God was about to visit upon rebellious Israel this supreme mark of his displeasure. Hoshea had come to the throne, not by right; he made a conspiracy against Pekah, the son of Remaliah, who had himself obtained the crown by similar means. Already in the time of Pekah Tiglath-pileser, King of Assyria, who had come up against Israel and had taken "Ijon, Abelbeth Maachah, Janoah, Kedesh and Hazor and Gilead and Galilee, and all the land of Naphtali, and carried them captive to Assyria" (II. Kings 15: 29), and yet the people did not humble themselves before God.

The country was already dismembered, the northern part emptied of its inhabitants, and possessed by the enemy. Would the remainder of the people hearken? Nine years Hoshea reigned, before Shalmaneser, King of Assyria, came up against and conquered him. Then he became tributary. Step by step the glory of Israel was fading; Ichabod was written, nay graven, upon the people who should have been "the glory of nations." Hoshea, instead of breaking down in deep humiliation before God, acknowledging his sins and the sins of his people, attempted, by conspiracy with Egypt against Assyria, to help himself. He only made matters worse. "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord" (Jer. 17: 5). The result was that the King of Assyria came up against him to overcome the obstinate resistance of Samaria which stood a three years' siege. The king became a state prisoner in Assyria, and his people were carried away captive.

Why was God's wrath thus kindled against the people? "For so it was that the children of Israel had sinned against the Lord their God, which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt from under the hand of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, and had feared other gods." The first commandment, known to every man, woman and child in Israel was: "Thou shalt have none other gods before me" (Exod. 20: 3). However prevalent the custom of idolatry was in Israel, the very fact of their possessing the land of Canaan at all, turned to the power and love of the holy God whom they had rejected: they knew that they had sinned against him. Custom, fashion, the example of other people, is no excuse whatever for sin. Each one must give account of himself to God. The people of Israel "walked in the statutes of the heathen, whom the Lord cast out before the children of Israel," going directly counter to the known will of God.

They did secretly the things which were not right, against the Lord their God; they built them high places in all their cities, i. e., places dedicated to the worship of idols, and set them up images and groves in every high hill and under every green tree. And there they burnt incense in all the high places as did the heathen whom the Lord carried away before them. Yes, their sin was great. But was it greater than the sin of so-called Christians in these days? They wanted to make their religion a means of gaining credit with the nations. The idolatrous rites of the heathen were connected with all that could please the senses and minister to the pleasure of the worshippers: pageantry, feasting, music, dancing, beautiful architecture, etc., which spoke of man; all ministered to the lusts of the flesh. The worship of the God of Israel was a ministry to him, but it was antiquated and peculiar. Idolatry ministered to man; it was the fashion everywhere in all the nations; to practise idolatry was to stand well with man.

"Yet the Lord testified against Israel and against Judah by all the prophets and by all the seers, saying: Turn ye from your evil ways . . . . Notwithstanding they would not hear, but hardened their necks like to the necks of their fathers, that did not believe in the Lord their God" (II. Kings 17: 7-9)! Isaiah had been prophesying in Judah and was yet living; Joel had borne his testimony and passed away from the scene. Micah and Hosea were still prophesying. The latter was becoming an old man, for fifty years he had borne witness against the idolatry of Israel, but at last, after his powerful, touching call to backsliding Israel to return, and God would heal her backsliding, he had to pass away from this earth leaving the ten tribes captive, and knowing that the same fate was awaiting "treacherous Judah."

O, how touching are some of God's appeals by this prophet! "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge; because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee." "Israel slideth back as a backsliding heifer." "Ephraim is joined to idols; let him alone." "The pride of Israel doth testify to his face; therefore shall Israel and Ephraim fall in their iniquity; Judah also shall fall with them. They shall go with their flocks and with their herds to seek the Lord; but they shall not find him; he hath withdrawn himself from them" (Hos. 4: 6). Again and again hope revives in the prophet's heart. "Come and let us return unto the Lord," he says (6: 1), but evidently there was no response from the people, for, later on he declares for his God: "When I would have healed Israel, then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, and the wickedness of Samaria; for they commit falsehood, and the thief cometh in, and the troop of robbers spoileth without. And they consider not in their hearts that I remember all their wickedness, now their own doings have beset them about; they are before my face."

They consider not that I remember. Ignoring God, counting God out of every circumstance, this is the crowning sin. The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom. "No God," is the language of the fool (Ps. 111: 10; 53: 1). "They consider not that I remember." How few there are who really believe that God keeps an unerring account of everything that transpires in every one's life and that "God shall bring every work into judgment, and every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil" (Eccl. 12: 14).

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE period of national prosperity and social corruption described in the lesson of last week, was of short duration. It ended with the death of Jeroboam II., who was apparently the greatest of the kings who had ruled Israel since its separation from Judah. Revolution and civil strife ensued. There were two parties in the state. One party advocated conciliating Assyria, which involved the payment of tribute; and the other favored an alliance with Egypt, whose king was urging Israel to resist Assyria and promising assistance. Three kings appear to have ascended the throne within a year of Jeroboam's death. His son, a depraved drunkard, was murdered at a public orgy. Shallum, his murderer, succeeded, but within a month was slain by Menahem, one of Jeroboam's generals. He belonged to the Assyrian party and pauperized the people to raise the annual tribute to be paid to Assyria's king. His son, Pekahiah, succeeded him, but the people, groaning under the burden of the tribute to Assyria, revolted, and Pekah, their leader, put Pekahiah to death. Relying on the assistance of Egypt, Pekah refused to pay further tribute to Assyria, and allying himself with Syria and other kingdoms which were smarting under Assyrian oppression, bade defiance to his powerful enemy. Tiglath-pileser, the king of Assyria, made short work of the coalition against him. He swooped down on their combined forces and routed them. Pekah was slain, and was succeeded by Hoshea, a leader of the pro-Assyrian party, whom Tiglath-pileser placed on the throne as his vassal. The accompanying picture is a photograph of an Assyrian bas-relief, which Tiglath-pileser ordered to be made as a record of his victory. It bears an inscription stating that he made Hoshea king. Hoshea was the last of Israel's kings, and the only one to whom the historian gives a word of praise. FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

The Cross-Roads Store and How One Brave Girl's Patriotism Saved it and Made a Household Happy.

I THINK you will like this week to hear a true story which has taken place lately, and which shows how people may help one another. All stories which are worth listening to, must have in them a kernel of truth.

We were sitting on a moonlit veranda, one night this summer, a pleasant circle of acquaintances. Among the group were the Schoolmarm and the Minister's wife, the Doctor, Aunt Betsy May, and several other of the neighbors.

"I suppose you know," said the Doctor, "that the little store at the cross-roads has been closed for the last week. After Jack and Harry went to the war the old gentleman had hard work to look after the little place and see to the store, too. His wife did the best she could to help him, but she is all crippled up with rheumatism most of the time, and for the last few days she has been down with chills. There isn't a soul to do a thing for her except her husband, and so as he could not be in two places at once there was nothing to do but to close the store and stay at home and take care of his wife."

"It's a very poor store, anyhow," observed the little schoolmarm. "The stock is all run out and the shelves are just as dusty and the ceiling as cobwebby as possible. I don't see how they can expect to make a living out of such a store as that."

"Well," said the Minister's wife, "for my part, I consider it very thoughtless in these boys to rush off to the war as they did. Their father needed them. For some young men it was a duty to go, but not for boys whose parents were so old and feeble as on whom so much depended. I blame the boys very much."

"Dear Mrs. Homily," said Aunt Betsy gently, "if everybody had stopped to count the cost and waited until it was quite convenient, I wonder how many volunteers there would have been. It was just so in our Civil War. I have a husband and three sons lying in the cemetery who all gave their lives then for the country, and I have always honored their memory and felt that I could not have had one of them back, though I have had a long lonely spell of waiting since the good Lord took them away. I do not think we should blame young men who enlist when the country calls them."

"I remember," said the doctor, "when the cross-roads store was kept up very nicely and people came to it from miles around. It was the best store this side of Milltown ten years ago, and I must say I feel very sorry to see how it has gone to pieces. There hasn't been any money, you see, to buy new goods, and the old goods have not been taken proper care of, and since the railroad came through, most of us neglect the little home shops and go to town several times a year and patronize the big establishments."

Sitting on the lowest step of the veranda was a bright-faced, stylish-looking girl from the city. Her name was Katherine Caswell. She was a cousin of Mrs. Homily, and was spending the summer with her. Some of the young people admired her very much, but others thought her a little proud and distant, though she had taken part all summer in the church services and had been a great help in the choir, where her beautiful voice and admirable method had wrought decided improvement in the village singing. This young lady now spoke rather modestly, but her proposition was like a small bomb shell thrown into the midst of our quiet group. She said: "If those dear old people will let me, and it will not be thought presumptous on my part, I will go up there and keep store at the cross-roads for a month, and either settle up the business for them or see whether it can be put on a basis on which it will be worth while for them to go on. I am quite sure I can do this, for my father says I have a good business head, and I have had some experience in keeping his books. I am quite sure that with a little help I can run that store at the cross-roads till the old lady is well again."

For a few minutes there was absolute silence after Miss Caswell's little speech. Then the doctor said:

"My dear young lady, you are a perfect jewel. If you undertake the thing I feel certain that you will carry it out; but it means hard work and plenty of it for the next month or two."

"'No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God,'" quoted Katherine reverently. "While you have all been talking

BENTEN DORI, A LEADING STREET IN YOKOHAMA.

I have been planning," she said, "and I feel very sure that I shall not be undertaking too much. Perhaps this is a little errand for the King which he wishes his daughter to undertake. At all events, if the owner of the cross-roads store will let me, I will step into the breach and open that store on Monday morning next, and do business there, too."

"Well," said Aunt Betsy, "if Katherine has made up her mind, here am I to help her. I am not yet past my usefulness. I can do as good a day's work as anybody, and I shall take a hand in this thing. Perhaps I know more about practical housecleaning than Katherine does."

"I am sure you do, dear Aunt Betsy," answered Katherine, "and you and I, to quote Job Storker, the expressman, who is a great friend of mine, will make a pretty good team when we're started."

The upshot of the matter was that while Ephraim Smith was taking care of his wife and fretting over the loss of the few dollars every week which came through the intermittent trade of the cross-roads, the Lord was preparing a way to bring him out of his troubles. The truth is dear friends, if we could only believe it, that those who tarry the Lord's leisure are always brought to safe conclusion whatever the difficulty in which they are. Poor Mrs. Smith alternately racked with pain and moaning in a chill or burning in a fever, counting the hours until her boys should get home, thought herself about as badly off as anybody could possibly be. Her old husband pottering clumsily about, did the best he could for her, but the outlook would have been very dismal had they not been surrounded by kind old friends and neighbors.

When Aunt Betsy asked him for the key of the store and told him that she and a young friend would take charge of it, he offered no objection though privately he did not expect very much from their undertaking; but Katherine Caswell went into the matter in good earnest. That cross-roads store was much too dirty to be cleaned by Aunt Betsy and herself, and as Katherine had money enough of her own to do as she pleased, she speedily sent for help and had every nook and corner of the place whitewashed, scrubbed, dusted, and put in spick and span order. The poverty of the stock so appealed to her that she felt a tug at her heart, but Aunt Betsy vetoed her desire to go to Milltown and purchase a few more things to make a better showing.

"Not yet," said Aunt Betsy, "we'll try what we can do in settling up things as they are here."

Somehow it traveled about, as news does travel in the countryside, that a pretty girl from town was keeping the cross-roads store, and sure enough in a little while business became very brisk. Summer boarders from several miles about took the cross-roads store in their way, stopped in and bought indiscriminately whatever could be given them in exchange for their money; some of the farmers' wives discovered that they were in need of calico and muslin and brought eggs and butter in return for them, and before long Katherine found herself carrying on quite a brisk business. At the end of the month, when Mr. Smith came back, it was to a very different sort of store from the one he had left, and, overruling Aunt Betsy, Katherine now insisted on stocking the little place with various goods which are always in demand in a country store. She said: "You must let me do this; I am doing it for my country," for by this time it had transpired that Jack was coming home with only one arm. He would never be able to do hard work. The store at the cross-roads would be just the place for him all the rest of his life. The tide had so turned in that direction that the one-armed soldier would not find it hard to keep up the business which a brave girl had saved for him, and as for Harry it will be very strange if with Katherine's influence, there is not discovered for him some place in town where he can work with as much energy in the pursuits of peace as he fought at Santiago.

Christian Problems in Japan.

Causes of the Present Decadence of Religion and the Way to Revival.

BY REV. SATORI KATO

GREAT as have been the political changes in Japan during the last thirty years, they have been surpassed by the religious vicissitudes. During the first half of that period Christianity made rapid strides, but I grieve to say, that the last half has shown a steady decadence. This I think is in part due to the corruption of old-established heathen religions and their strong hold on the people, and in part to the rivalry of Christian denominations.

It is important to remember that Japan differs from some other mission fields in the fact that a profession of Christianity there does not involve social ostracism or persecution. A Christian may become Chief Justice or Speaker of the House of Commons, or hold any other high office. Perhaps if the penalties of becoming a Christian had been severe, there might have been more consistency of life and a firmer and more decided stand for the cause of Christ. One serious drawback in Japan, has been the fact that native Christians, in many cases, have become cold and indifferent to religious duty. That happens in Christian lands, too, but the effect is more detrimental in a newly Christianized country like Japan.

It is a fact that at the present time the moral condition of Japan is in some respects worse than it was thirty years ago. Education is compulsory, it is true, and the Gospel is preached, but laws have been enacted on the pattern of foreign nations which have proved detrimental. Our divorce laws proclaimed last year are especially odious. They give privileges to the husband which are denied to the wife, and their effect is to encourage immorality. These laws might never have been enacted if Christians had made a firm and united stand against them, and had been uniformly careful to set a good example in their own lives.

I am not sure that the Christian Church is wholly free from blame in this matter of ethical retrogression. The various denominations, laboring earnestly and devotedly in Japan, have sometimes given more attention to doctrinal orthodoxy than to practical morality. They have impressed on the Japanese, in many instances, the points of difference between the sects, and have failed to impress upon them the necessity of purity of life and righteousness of conduct. I have watched the results of such preaching and have seen reason to deplore them. I believe that if the missionaries in Japan would unite on some such basis as the Christian Endeavor platform, or the nine articles of the Evangelical Alliance, and then proceed to preach Christ the Saviour from sin: Christ the light of the world; the Bible as the Word of God; and the fundamental truths of Christianity, leaving aside for the time the minor matters on which Christians differ, this united effort would, by the blessing of God, do more in one year to bring Japan to Christ than has been done in thirty years under present methods.

Another means of recovering lost ground is the encouragement of native preachers. Much good may be accomplished by native Christian workers who are familiar from infancy with our social peculiarities. The difficulty in enlisting such native workers is the practical one of support. Self-sacrifice is required of the type of the Apostle Paul, who labored with his hands that he might not be chargeable to any man. It is difficult to find such men who can and will earn their own livelihood in secular callings, while they preach the Gospel. But I am persuaded the more I study the problem of the conversion of my country that the solution lies in the work of native trained Christians of that spirit.

Wound Up.

IT may take until October before the signatures of the Commission shall have settled the last item of controversy between the United States and Spain, but the war is over never to return. Spain is tired. Cuba is tired. Porto Rico is tired. The Philippine Islands are tired. The United States are tired. We could have kept on until $500,000,000 were expended, and 100,000 men had been dashed out of this life, but all merciful people the world over are glad that the whole affair is wound up. What has been gained? First of all, Spain has been advantaged. Though she has lost her colonies, she has had her pride humbled and has learned there are other nations beside herself. Her reign of cruelties has ended. By severest process she has learned to behave herself better. The great masses of her people will not hereafter trust to the teachings of her public men. Gradually they will come to demand their rights.

Another advantage will be the opening of more doors of commercial opportunity than have swung on their hinges in a half century. Capital will find new room for illimitable enterprises and labor will hear the call of uncounted looms, and wheels, and levers. The opportunities of making a comfortable and honest living will be multiplied beyond all arithmetical statement.

More than all, Christianity will begin a grander march than it has ever yet undertaken. The wide reaches of barbarism and heathenism made the idea of the world's redemption a matter of pure faith. Now we walk not only by faith, but also by sight. We can see how the earth is to be girdled with civilization, which is another name for Christianity. This has been as much a "holy war" as anything John Bunyan depicted. The missionaries at Hong Kong heard the guns at Manila. Christian captains to command our battleships. Christian gunners to unlimber our batteries. Christian sailors to climb the rat-lines. Christian President and Cabinet Council at Washington to announce the principles on which the war should start, and advance, and stop. We ought to have our eyes set apart, between now and next Thanksgiving Day, when all the church bells should ring, and all the flag-staffs float our national colors, and all our people on land and sea join in a jubilate such as never before has been heard since the "morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy."

Our Opportunity in the Pacific.

WE hold that the Philippine Islands should not be surrendered immediately or entirely to Spain. They have come to us from the God of Battles. We were not seeking them. They surprised us. And the people there need us, as much as do the Cubans and the Porto Ricans. We should not desert them. When, in 1861–65, we stood for the unity of this nation, we were not fighting for the millions of bondmen here. But that is what God meant. Willing or unwilling, we had to take them as a result of victory, as a way to victory. It was a part of the role the God of Nations had determined for us. Lincoln liberating the slaves became as much a part of the programme, as Grant's fighting the battles of the Wilderness. True, it is not necessarily our duty to right all the wrongs of the earth. But the wrongs of Spain, her tyranny and oppression, these we arrayed ourselves against, so far as they were incidental to Cuba Free. And the first step toward Cuba Free was the battle of Manila. We dare not purchase the freedom of Cuba by deserting the Philippines. If God is in this conflict as a Leader, we must improve our opportunities.

Captain Philip of the "Texas."

THERE are some men who gain notoriety by being irreverent and profane. It is their stock in trade. No anecdote about them is complete without an oath. But we have had generals and admirals whose heroic deeds need no such embellishment, but speak for themselves. And when Captain Philip, of the Texas, restrained his sailor-lads from cheering in presence of the conquered Spaniards, who were dying in the flames, the bare statement of the detail is enough. The bravest are the tenderest. All the world's great commanders regard the havoc with men's lives which they are compelled to work as sad and deplorable. We like to commend these reverent military and naval commanders, especially to young people. Rudeness and coarseness are not needful to great military deeds.

Captain Philip was brought up in Kinderhook, N. Y., and in that State many of his relatives reside. His church-membership is with the Winthrop Congregational Church, Charlestown District, Boston. This is the kind of man whom the boys and young men may safely follow; the kind that make our navy the pride of every American.

Vermont's Hand in this Spanish-American War.

VERMONT is a little State, but her people dwell among the hills. See her agency in this war. It was the unimpassioned utterances of Senator Proctor, of Vermont, as to the suffering and tyranny of Spain in Cuba, the result of what he had seen with his own eyes; it was the impassioned utterance of Senator Thurston, also a native of Vermont, though now a senator from Nebraska, that turned the search-light of truth upon the actual situation in that misgoverned island: it was the work of Commodore Dewey in Manila that startled the nation and the world, as to the valorous achievements of our navy; it was the commanding military genius of General Shafter before Santiago, which showed that our army was not one whit behind our navy: and now it is the quiet counsels of Vermont in the person of ex Senator Edmunds, with whom President McKinley and Secretary of State Day hold frequent conferences, that are sure to assist us in the consummation of a wise and judicious peace. Surely, with honors coming to her through the Senate, through the navy and army, and through the Department of State, she may well thank God for her opportunities, and that she had such sons to improve them.

OUR PROSPECTIVE PREMIER

WHEN John Hay was selected by President McKinley as Ambassador to Great Britain to follow such men as Charles Francis Adams, James Russell Lowell, Edward Phelps and Thos. F. Bayard, some surprise was expressed. After having given Mr. Hay due credit for abilities of a high order, personal and literary, it was not thought that his public service or fame deserved so exalted a position. It was known that for years he had wielded a talented pen, but it was not known that the Ambassador possessed the superb qualities that were to make him the ideal diplomatist and statesman that he has proven himself to be. The honor he has reflected on his own country and the favor he has received in London justify Lincoln's faith in him when little more than a mere boy, and McKinley's confidence in him, a man of sixty, and the wisdom of the President in selecting him to be Secretary of State.

The marriage of Mr. Hay to the daughter of Amassa Stone, the Ohio millionaire, and the round million the father-in-law left him did not check his industry nor deter him from enormous literary labor. He earned $50,000 for the monumental life of Lincoln, which he and Nicolay wrote.

We will look at the man through some of his literary work. His home on the Mississippi River among the natives naturally suggested his "Pike County" ballads. In his "Little Breeches," the care of the heavenly over the earthly is expressed in dialect verses. The father of little Gabe says:

> I believe in God and the angels
> Ever since one night last spring.

"Jim Bludso," the pilot of the Prairie Belle, who saved the passengers, but lost his life closes with the following stanza:

> He wern't no saint—but at judgment
> I'd run my chance with Jim,
> 'Longside of some pious gentlemen
> That wouldn't shake hands with him.
> He seen his duty, a dead sure thing—
> And went for it thar and then;
> And Christ a'int agoing to be too hard
> On a man that died for men.

An old poem, The Surrender of Spain, can be read with renewed interest at the present time, and especially the following:

> Land of unconquered Pelayo! Land of the Cid Campeador
> Sea-girded mother of men, Spain, name of glory and power;
> Cradle of world-grasping Emperors, grave of the reckless invaders,
> How art thou fallen, my Spain, how art thou sunk at this hour.
> Once again does Hispania bow to the yoke of the stranger.

In his Castilian Days he gives a series of essays on themes suggested by his residence in Madrid. His want of faith in the Spanish monarchy and his splendid Americanism are breathed from the preface and closing article of the book. In the preface he says: "There are those who think the Spaniards are not fit for freedom. I believe that no people are fit for anything else."

The book closes with an article on "The Necessity of the Republic," from which we quote, "No decision will bring immediate peace or prosperity to a country so long and systematically misruled. But the only logical solution and the one which offers most possibilities of safety and permanency is the Republic."

Mr. Hay's address at the unveiling of the statue of Sir Walter Scott in Westminster Abbey about a year ago, justifies his right to a place at the Court of St. James and in the front rank of American men of letters. The following is one of its paragraphs: "But probably the morality of Scott appeals more strongly to the many than even his enormous mental powers. His ideals are lofty and pure; his heroes are brave and strong, not exempt from human infirmities, but always devoted to ends more or less noble. His heroines are beautiful and true. They walk in womanly dignity through his pages, whether garbed as peasants or princes, with honest brows uplifted, with eyes gentle but fearless, pure in heart, delicate in speech. Valor, purity, loyalty—these are the essential and undying elements of the charm with which this great magician has soothed and lulled the weariness of the world through three tormented generations."

The President fully understood himself when he appointed Mr. Hay to bring about a better relation between England and America. On his way to London to assume the responsibilities of his office, the Ambassador was met at Southampton by a delegation, and the Mayor made an address of welcome, and President Harper, of the Chamber of Commerce, expressed the hope that Colonel Hay's mission would draw still closer the fra[illegible]rai bonds between the two English-speakin[illegible]na- tions. Colonel Hay replied that he had [illegible]me to work for the interests of his own co[illegible]ry and that it was the profound conviction [illegible]h President and people of the United [illegible]tes that those interests could best be serv[illegible]by the promotion of the most cordial rel[illegible]ons between England and America. The [illegible]oes of the Mayor and the desires of the A[illegible]as- sador have been realized in a year of ten[illegible]est attachment between the two nations.

Delicacy and intensity of religious [illegible]ti- ment are contained in Mr. Hay's [illegible] Tabor:

> We see the Christ stand out between
> The ancient law and faith serene,
> Spirit and letter; but above
> Spirit and letter both was Love.

Faith in the future life and in the [illegible]- ment, as well as intense earthly affectio[illegible]re expressed in his poem, In Church:

> If ever I stand by the jasper sea,
> Whose bright waves flash in their awful p[illegible]s,
> The mingled strain of my thanks shall be
> That you have lived and that Christ has d[illegible]

Dea Reveals a Secret.

A oman died in New York last week identity was disclosed by her death. ied of heart trouble induced by ip and privation, yet she was a untess in her own right and a niece Queen Regent of Spain. An Aus Baron, who came to New York on ss a few weeks ago, told her story er to prevent her burial in Potter's He said that in walking along way, a day or two after he landed, w a familiar face. He could not nize it at first, but being sure that he had seen it somewhere before, he ad dressed the lady, and when she spoke he knew her at once as the long-lost daughter of noble parents in Austria. She was evidently in extreme poverty, and, after some conversation, she admitted the fact. Finally, she confessed that she had eloped with a fascinating lover, whose suit her parents had rejected. He brought her to New York, where after gaining possession of her money and jewels, he deserted her and left her penniless. She had lived since by pawning her clothing, but had often been in want. The Baron gave her temporary help, and as she was evidently sick, sent a doctor to visit her. He was making arrangements to send her back to her own land, when a crisis came in her disease and she died suddenly. The doctors said that her death was directly due to the mental suffering and physical privation she had endured.

The published story of the killing of a snake has served a useful purpose in a

MRS. CURZON (NEE LEITER).

Cincinnati home. Some weeks ago a farmer near that city succeeded in killing a large black snake, which has shown itself at intervals around his premises for several years past. Many efforts have been made to find the creature and kill it, but only recently was the feat accomplished. One of the local journals told the story of the farmer's search and ultimate success. It was read in the home of an Indiana subscriber, where a lady was visiting at the time. Her name was the same as that of the farmer. She theretore wrote him, asking for more details. A correspondence ensued, from which they learned that the lady was the farmer's aunt, whom he had not seen in forty years. The discovery was welcome, because it supplies in the person of the farmer the long missing link in a chain of heirship, the absence of which had prevented the holders of a valuable estate from disposing of it to advantage. They can now give a clear title to the lands, which will easily find purchasers. When the farmer killed the snake, he was doubtless glad to be rid of the creature, but he probably had no idea of the good results which would follow. It is so sometimes in families which are separated by quarreis and evil passions. If that kind of snake were killed, it would be well for them, and reunion might follow

Czar a Peacemaker

Probably no state paper in many years has so surprised the whole world, as that issued last week by Count Muravieff by order of the Emperor of Russia. It was addressed to the diplomats of all foreign governments at the Russian Court, and was a formal proposal of a conference to promote disarmament. After pointing out the miseries and privations involved in all lands by the cost of maintaining enormous armies and building huge warvessels, the Czar calls attention to the fact that the "beneficent results of desired pacification" have not been achieved by these costly preparations for war. While all civilized nations profess a desire for peace, each nation has felt it a duty to compete with its neighbors in military and naval efficiency, so that the burden has become intolerable. The Czar, therefore, proposes the assembling of a conference which will occupy itself with this grave concern. He says: "This conference will be, by the help of God, a happy presage for the century which is about to open. It would converge into one powerful focus the efforts of all States sincerely seeking to make the great conception of universal peace triumph over the elements of trouble and discord, and it would, at the same time, cement their agreement by a corporate consecration of the principles of equity and right whereon rest the security of States and the welfare of peoples." It is understood that the support of Germany was assured before the message was issued and it may be assumed that France, which usually follows Russia, will also concur.

THE CZAR OF RUSSIA.

England, Austria, and Italy are little likely to oppose the Czar's suggestion. Grave difficulties, of course, are apparent on the face of it, which it will be hard to overcome, but the significance of the proposal, and especially of the source from which it emanates, cannot be exaggerated. It will give the young Emperor a fame greater and better than that of a mighty conqueror, and even if his desire is but partially fulfilled, millions will have reason to bless his name. Christians in every land will pray that such a conference will have the blessing of God, and that all who take part in it will have wisdom and grace to solve the problem, and so at last the time shall come when the nations Shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more (Isa. 2: 4).

A Useless Disguise.

The existence of a Chinese gambling den in Mott street, New York, has been for several weeks past a source of worry to the police of that district. It has been so carefully sentried that no policeman has been able to enter it. The Chinamen have some system of signalling so effective that the approach of a policeman, even in plain clothes, was signalled in time to prevent detection. One of the detectives, however, resolved to penetrate. He carefully studied the Chinese dress, and having secured a suit of their clothing, and a wig with a queue, he stained his face and believed himself capable of passing the sentries. In order to test the completeness of his disguise he entered the station-house, where his own comrades did not know him, and afterwards spoke to the patrolman on one of the Chinese streets, who took him for a Chinaman. Satisfied of his Chinese appearance he proceeded to Mott Street. About one block away from the gambling-house a laugh behind him caused him to look around. There, following him and imitating his gait were about twenty Chinamen walking in file and by their gestures showing their amusement at the disguise, which to them was quite transparent. The detective, chagrined at being himself detected, turned back and abandoned his attempt. He had forgotten that something more than Chinese dress was needed to deceive Chinamen. A similar mistake is sometimes made by men who, without a change of nature, profess to be Christians.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

WE GET WHAT WE GIVE.

MOLLY gives frowns, and Molly gives shrugs;
Never gives smiles, and never gives hugs;
Yet Molly complains the world is so cold,
So selfish and hard, so ready to scold.
She never has learned in this life we live,
That all the world over we get what we give.

Bessie gives love, and ever a smile;
Never gives taunts, and never shows guile;
And Bessie declares the world is all light,
That goodness in time will right up the right.
She long since has learned in this life we live
That all the world over we get what we give.

"The world is so dreary," says Molly to pa;
"The world is all gladness," says Bessie to ma;
"I would," says sad Molly, "I'd never been born;"
"How sweet 'tis to live," says Bessie each morn.
The maxim is certain in this life we live,
That all the world over we get what we give. ADDIE LLOYD WRIGHT.

WILHELMINA'S WHITE PIGEONS.

Six Thousand Winged Heralds of the Girl Queen's Installation—Her Marriage—Dutch Jealousy.

ONE of the prettiest features of the installation of Wilhelmina as Queen of the Netherlands was the releasing of 6,000 carrier-pigeons to bear to every part of the Low Countries the message of joy to the Dutch people that their beloved young queen had really come into her own—had taken her oath of fealty to them and received through their representative their own pledge of loyalty and devotion. In quaint little towns, where wind-mills turned and where lazy-looking sail-boats drifted up and down canals, Dutch peasants watched for the white-winged messenger, whose coming would announce the enthronement of the young girl Holland loves. The Dutch people feel that they have "had a hand in her raising," so to speak. In her childhood, she was allowed a rare privilege for royal children—to play with other children in the streets. Once, when she was about ten years old, she was enjoying a sleigh ride with her mother, the Queen Regent, and came upon a large group of children playing snow-ball. Wilhelmina asked permission to join in the sport and the royal sleigh stood still for half an hour, "while the future sovereign of the Netherlands was boisterously hitting and being hit by somebody knows who." Her teachers were charged by her mother to treat her as they would any other little girl. Her mother's intention was to make Wilhelmina, in character, a sweet, thoughtful, well-educated Dutchwoman. Her attitude of mind regarding her marriage is peculiar. They want, and they do not want her to marry. They are jealous of every suitor who seeks her favor. Besides, notably, of their opinion is quite good enough for the young Queen.

A Bird Story.

The following story will doubtless interest our readers when we ten them of the unique little eight page paper from which it is taken. The Open Door is edited printed and published at Harleyville, N. J. by a bed-ridden man, an almost helpless cripple since 1888, with such assistance as his wife can give him. He sets the type and she does the press-work.

Some time ago I became the owner of a very beautiful red-bird, which I named "Wildie," as he was not so tame as my pet canaries. He was very fond of hemp seed, which I used to buy, but now it comes up in my yard every year, inviting and receiving bird visitors. One spring day I concluded that "Wildie" should have his liberty. But this pet was so attached to me that he wasn't eager to leave, and hovered around near the house for some time, a bright thing of beauty amid the green shrubbery. After a few days he was missing. Summer and fall passed by, and cold winter came with winds and snows, when one day I heard a tapping on the transom of a door that had been made as part of the entrance to the porch where he had found his freedom. It is impossible to express my surprise and joy at seeing "Wildie" again, and I hastened to give him food. Since then, in cold weather, he comes tap-tap upon the glass, for he knows that if he asks he will receive. What a lesson of trust!

A Daughter's Monument.

The best equipped dispensary in the Borough of Brooklyn will be one that is being erected by a wealthy merchant as a monument to his daughter. It is to take the place of the cramped quarters in which a worthy and ever-increasing work has been done for the last twenty years, on the corner of Myrtle and Lewis Avenues, known as the Bushwick and East Brooklyn Dispensary. Its last report shows that within twelve months, 6,000 patients, representing eighteen nationalities, were treated there, and that since its opening, 96,000 have registered. The institution will bear the name of the daughter to whose memory it is a tribute, and will be called the Laura Frances Batterman Dispensary. We notice this, because many troubled hearts would find relief from grief for their dear ones if their love (which never finds true comfort in gleaming shafts or costly mausoleums) sought outlet in doing good to humanity in their dear one's name. It may be that you can only utter gentle words, and perform little kindnesses in the dear one's name, but it will lighten your sorrow.

THE ENDLESS THREAD.

"MAMMA, mamma, what do you make?"
"I dee for Baby's gown."
Mamma and Bessie are happy today.
And the sun is shining down.
Bessie blooms and bookets sing,
And every bird is but on happy wing.
And God is good to everything.

"Mamma, mamma, what do you make?"
"For baby a woollen gown."
The leaves are falling, the trees are bare,
And the naked earth is brown.
But apples are gathered and pumpkins stored.
And "ready for winter's" the happy word;
Forever good to us is the Lord.

"Mamma mamma, what do you make?"
"A coat so warm and brown."
The sky is gray, the earth is white,
And the snow is falling down.
But the cricket chirps near the brelight red,
And mamma works with an endless thread.
"God loves always," Mamma said.

"...u must ask the service soon then, ...I return to the city very shortly."

Looking up to heaven and striking her ...e with her hand, she said:

"...r disease is my 'goony' (her husband's other wife). For fifteen years I ...ve been living in the haramkhana of this ...ent sahib. His first wife is of royal ...ce and he, fearing her, dare not speak ...o. I do not see a soul except the ...up of three or four maids, and they are not like watchers than anything else. I have sent my maid to ask my husband to divorce me—even making him a gift of my contract money, if he would only release me. He is a dog, that is what he is! You see I am young—if I were ten years old I would kill myself—but you know life is sweet and I am young! For years I have waited and thought perhaps one of us might die and be released; but even Allah hates us, and does not wish to have anything to do with us.

"I have been told," she continued, "that Frangi nakim (European doctors) have kinds of medicines that if you rub one on a person's clothes, that person ...ies and none knows the cause."

"I do not quite understand you," I said.

"Then let me tell you the truth, and ...ything that lies is God's enemy. One of us—my sahib, my old 'goony' (husband's old wife), or myself—must die. If I die, no more than one will die: I must kill both him and her, and then myself; if you give some drug, only one will go—my 'goony.' You see you are giving life to two persons (husband and herself). Anyway, she is old, and making my life miserable."

"A doctor must always make others live and make others well. To kill is a murderer's trade, and mine is not such. I am a Christian physician."

"Then, if you do not give me that zahar (poison) to use on that person, you are not killing the one that I am begging you to. But you are killing me, in refusing to give that drug. I must kill myself, and you will not relieve me."

"I hope that God will open a way for you, before you take such a step."

I heard a few months later that this lady cooked a dish which was made of a dead person's flesh. She sent the dish by a maid to her "goony," and the latter, fearing it contained poison, did not touch it. In a while her husband came and inquired: "Who sent this dish?" His wife said, "My 'goony'" (his second wife). Then he said, "Bring the dish and I will eat. You must not think my wife is so bad that she will poison you!" In three hours he was dead.

In the afternoon, after having dinner, we entered the shrine, the ladies bearing their offerings of candles, money and brooms, and begging the saint "to give them the desires of their hearts." Others prayed the saint to take revenge on their sahibs for bringing other wives over them; some promised a "carpet if the saint gave them a son in a year."

As we were coming out, every one pulled off pieces of rags from their clothes, and pushed them between the crevices of the bark of the trees that grew near the shrine, and which were considered holy, so that the worthy saint would not forget them. We retraced our way in the afternoon, carrying small bundles of dry fuel in our ropes, until we reached the village, when we threw them away, and separated from each other.

I had been in the house four days, and had seen no children or old people, when one day, Azan, a maid, came and said:

"The governor's grandmother wishes to see you down stairs."

Going down, I found a well-kept woman of ninety-five years sitting on a small carpet, which was spread over the carpets and rugs of the room. She was dressed in shabby clothes, and around stood half a dozen maids, in attendance. Her daughter-in-law stood about three yards off; it was etiquette for her to stand until permission to sit was given by her mother-in-law. I was told that sometimes the elder woman forgets to tell daughters-in-law to sit down; and so they are obliged to stand up, with folded arms, for hours. Excessive washing in cold water, five or six times a day, had almost crippled the old woman's hands.

She said: "You Christians do not lie; we do. I trust no one. You see, these maids all lie; I tell them so in their black faces.

"You are so lovable," she continued, "you have such a sweet face. By my head! You are quite young. It is a great sin for you to remain unmarried. Come and become a Mohammedan. All the world is going to become Moslem in a little while. How much better for you to accept our Paykhambar (prophet) and kalamashadat (creed) now."

"Will your excellency allow me to say a few works in regard to my own creed?"

"Yes, yes. I do like to hear about Issa Paykhambar (Prophet Jesus). Our blessed prophet speaks of Issa as his forerunner."

"I am glad that you do believe in Issa, and I think you would like to hear his Moshda (Gospel) and also about his life; and how he came down into the world and was born in a manger and grew up like any of us. He made himself poor for our sakes; he suffered everything and he made himself acquainted with our condition. He did not have a sword like Mahomet; he was poor; his power was his great love for us all. Your prophet conquered the world by shedding the blood of hundreds of thousands of people. But Jesus Christ, whom we believe to be perfect man and God, shed his own blessed blood and conquered the world's hearts. It is in his Gospels, where it teaches us that we should not lie, kill or hurt any one."

"Wallah doghry deyroan! (By Allah! you are speaking the truth). There is much evil among us. Have you seen these kopak iooshaghy mollahs? (dog's-children, priests). When one wants to be divorced, one goes to them. Any time that the priests see one that is beautiful or rich, they marry her. By your head! Aomar iooshaghy (Kurd's sons) are a hundred times worse. Kahba teipesy (immoral nation)! A woman that goes to be divorced may marry one of the priest's servants; then again return to her own sahib, or marry any one else. Hakim Bashy (doctor), sometimes I am lost in thoughts! God forbid that I should say anything against Koran or Paykhambar; but he did not do anything for women. To pray five times a day, and go to all shrines, to spend all we have, and after all this, in Bahishid (heaven) we are going to be maids for houri and parry (heavenly wives) who our husbands will marry and own in Janat (next life). Wallah! Men must pay more visits and money to our holy places than we women can!"

She left, and her maids took up the beautiful little carpet. Her daughter-in-law knew that I was at sea. I could not understand the meaning of the little carpet being brought, spread over the carpet and again removed. On leaving the room, she looked at me, smiled and said:

"It is very strange that a mother should consider her own son's rooms unclean. She is the most sopher woman in the kingdom. She lives alone in an apartment with fifteen male and female servants. In her kitchen from five to ten tomans are spent every day, and many poor are fed. But her own food is cooked in her own room by her own hand. In winter, she has a monkal (a round clay or metal vessel, four or five inches deep), containing live coals. The maids bring the meat, pots, water, etc., and with her own hands she washes the food, then puts it in the pots. During the summer, she has a mud stove made and cooks on it just the same. She washes the dishes herself (religiously—she considers no one clean). Her clothes, after they are washed, are washed again seven times in cold water and left to dry. Her maid, when taking them in, must not breathe on them, and must wear some large sheets, so that her own clothes will not come in contact with those of her mistress.

"For paying formal visits, she has a particular room where she keeps certain garments that she always wears when going out—she never enters her own apartment dressed in the same garments that she wore when coming in contact with others. On returning home, she enters this room (in which she changed her clothes to go out), her maids bring her own "clean" clothes, she puts them on and repairs to her own apartment."

Her daughter-in-law continued, with a little disgust: "Do you know that when she goes to imanszada and mosques, she does the same thing. She has the maids carry that same rug along and spread it over the carpet of our holy places. Sitting in the middle of the rug, she makes the maids make a circle around her so that no man's breath shall come near and defile her. I was sorry lately for a new maid, who had been brought from the village. Not knowing her mistress's habit, she passed before her and thus made her too unclean to pray, so she had to go through certain washings again. A few times this happened, and the old lady had the woman put into a large khasha (bag), and commanded the servants to give her a good thrashing. No doubt that maid learned a good lesson which she could not forget, even if she wanted to."

The lady of the palace, seeing a little lace on my dress, asked where I had bought it. On being told that I had made it myself, she said, sighing:

"Allah bala yol (Allah cut short such a way—meaning the Mohammedan Way). We women must not use our hands because work is lowering; we must not use our eyes and look at people, because men might see our eyes and faces, and that is sin. We must not use our tongues and speak above a whisper, because men may hear our voices. We must not use our feet, because walking and going about more than a certain amount, is considered immoral. A man may look on any strange woman; he may beat his wife, or wives, and divorce them; he may marry and divorce as often as he pleases. He may curse, revile, and quarrel as much as he pleases. If business, or government, calls him away from his home, he can marry, if he likes. Do you know hakim khanim, sometimes I doubt my sahib when he has been called by the government, to go to other states, that he must have been married there; he says he has not, but I doubt him. Happy is the woman who trusts her husband!"

While we were thus talking a maid came and said:

"Shahzad Khanim, your Agh sakal (white beard) says that your excellency's brother is in dwankhana (judgment room) and sends you his excellency's dova salam (pray and peace)."

Then the lady said: "Tell my Agh sakal to tell my dear brother that I am praying for his jony (soul) and give him my salam dova."

Then she said, "I have not seen my brother for three years, and he has just returned from Teheran."

I said, "Will he not pay you a visit here?"

Looking at me with astonishment, she answered, "Our laws (religious) do not permit a brother, or father, or any male relatives to enter any haramkhana, except his own. When I go to visit my father's house, I could not see my brother and father there, nor unveil my face before them."

"By the way,"—as if she had something that she wanted to speak of that was not of much importance, "I have a little child of two years, who is with her taya (nursing woman, who acts sometimes as a nursery governess and is often sent, with her nursling, as a part of her marriage portions, and is more like a mother and adviser than a servant). She has some kind of skin disease. She is coming in now; can you help her?"

The taya and her little charge entered. A pretty baby it was; the taya said, "beautiful as the moon!" It was covered with silk and gold thread, pearls and rubies.

The mother never spoke, laughed or even smiled in the face of the child; indeed, she even looked severe. The child also did not recognize her mother, and knows no father or relatives, and stays with her nurse always, day and night, weeks and months. This is the way that all children of the well-to-do are brought up and trained. And the very first words that a child is taught to say are to revile someone—her nurse, her father, her mother or herself. I prescribed for the little one, and the next day departed, promising to visit the palace again. I carried away with me a pleasing recollection of Persian hospitality and a keen and sorrowful realization of the hapless condition of Mohammedan women without the Gospel.

[THE END.]

Armenia's Orphans.

From the Rev. H. N. Barnum, of Harpoot, we have received the following letter, acknowledging receipt of the share of the Armenian Fund balance allotted to that station:

HARPOOT, Turkey, July 9.

I have just received yours of June 9th with the enclosed check of $150 for orphans. What a splendid service THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers are rendering to suffering humanity in all parts of the world! Soon after the massacres we received liberal sums from you for relief, and now comes the promise of $600 a year, for three years, for the support of orphans. We are pressed with work all the time, but we shall take pleasure in reporting to you from time to time.

This care for orphans is, of course, not of our seeking. Our hands were already full with our ordinary missionary work, but the Lord laid it upon us so distinctly that we could not decline it, and he has given to us the distinct proofs of his favor. We could not have borne the strain but for his help, and he is cooperating with us so clearly in the improvement of the children that no other part of our work gives us so great joy as this. I do not doubt that the sending of this money gives your readers great pleasure, but it cannot be so great as ours who see the fruit. These are the Lord's children whom he has committed to us, and he cares for them. Taken as a whole no part of the country suffered so severely at the time of the massacres as this.

H. N. BARNUM.

Help for Barbadoes Mission.

IT is said that there are more people in Barbadoes to the square mile than in any other country except China. A great portion of the population belongs to a race but lately civilized, and the opportunity for missionary work is consequently large. Many of our readers have shown a warm personal interest in the Seaman's Anchor Mission and Tropical Training School, established by Antoinette Esterbrooks, and lately described in these pages, and a number have sent contributions in aid of the work. Among those who have done so are Harry W. Fell, Trenton, N. J.; Friend, Newark, N. J.; A Widow, Webb City, Mo., Juliet Wilbur, L. I.; A Friend, Schenectady, N. Y.; "One who wants to do some good in the world." Superintendent Esterbrooks makes grateful acknowledgment of these gifts for the work of the mission.

When the island of Barbadoes was first discovered it was overrun by wild pigs, and the species is even yet very plentiful. Our illustration shows a native woman with a pair of these family pets, which are not unlike the "razor-backs," known to some of our own States.

The Lord Spread a Table.

A well-known American evangelist, Mr. Charlie H. Gootee, has written and printed in pamphlet form an interesting account of a visit to the late Mr. George Muller, of Bristol, England, a short time before Mr. Muller died. Mr. Gootee was fortunate enough to have an interview with Mr. Muller. He asked the aged philanthropist if his faith were tried now, as in the early days of his work.

"Just as much," he said, "my faith is always tried."

"Then you are pressed at times? I mean that you get in a hard place?"

"Never pressed," he said.

"But you speak, in your early experiences, of sometimes having food enough for breakfast and not knowing where dinner would come from."

"Ah," he said, "that could not occur now, under the present state of things; having about 2,000 children, I buy everything by wholesale. That occurred when we rented, in the early days of the work."

"I suppose you know Satan still lives," said Mr. Gootee.

"Yes," said the venerable Christian. "Satan has opposed this work from the beginning, and when I began to build and prepare for the building of House No. 4 he circulated the report that I had thirty thousand pounds when I was without money, but I have never denied any report or any lies that he has started, by denying them through the newspaper; only telling my dear Heavenly Father about them, and my Heavenly Father tramples them."

Mr. Muller traveled several times around the world and preached the Gospel in forty-two countries. In all his journeys and before his many congregations he never made known his need himself, or allowed any of his helpers to do so, and through the exercising faith in God were always fully supplied.

"I trusted God for everything," he exclaimed. "For forty years I have been known all over the world, and when I was in your country, the United States, I spoke to fifteen thousand people in the morning and five thousand people in the evening in Dr. Talmage's church."

"How did you begin work among the missions and orphans?"

"Little by little," he answered. "I waited for God to send the money, and then I went ahead and built."

The faith work established by Mr. Muller stands as a living miracle—a fact which cannot be explained away or reasoned out of existence by the most gifted unbeliever. Two thousand boys and girls are fed day by day, the entire work costing between four hundred and five hundred dollars each day, help being asked from none but God.

PEACE AT LAST.

NOW the war-drum throbs no longer,
And the battle-flags are furled;
We exclaim in tones of rapture,
"We're at peace with all the world!"
Peace at last, in all our borders,
Peace in all our wide domain;
On the land and on the waters—
Peace at last with haughty Spain.

Homeward soon the son and brother,
Home the lover and the man.
Friends will gladly hail their coming—
Some, alas! will wait in vain.
Pitying angels hover o'er them,
Kiss away their falling tears,
Cheer the homes, so sad and lonely,
Cheer their hearts through coming years.

God of nations, we would praise thee!
Freedom's battle fought and won!
Broken every chain and fetter!
Free the father and the son!
May the isles so fair and fruitful,
Where the stars and stripes shall wave,
Be transformed, redeemed, uplifted—
Never calling man a slave.

Blessed peace! We hail its coming,
Bringing blessings in its train,
Blessings for the isles of ocean,
Blessings yet, we trust, for Spain.
May the Gospel's light and glory,
Bid its sin and strife to cease,
'Till that land of ancient story,
Welcomes in the Prince of Peace.

OUR TWO PUBLICATIONS BALANCE OF THE YEAR

FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

We will mail THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, beginning with the next issue (October number), to January 1, 1899, also THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, every week, from the time subscription is received to January 1, 1899, for Twenty-five Cents, for the purpose of introducing our weekly with our well-known monthly.

The regular subscription price to THE SATURDAY EVENING POST is $2.50 per year. It was founded in 1728, and published by Benjamin Franklin up to 1765, and has been regularly published for 170 years—the oldest paper in the United States. Everybody knows THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, with its 800,000 subscription list. The POST will be just as high a grade of literature and illustration, but entirely distinctive in treatment and in kind.

The best writers of the world contribute to both of our publications, and the illustrations are from the best-known artists.

NOW IS THE BEST TIME.

Rev. J. W. Blosser, M.D., the noted Catarrh Specialist, says that this is the best time of the year to treat Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, etc. If you are a sufferer from any of these diseases during the winter months, you will find by beginning the proper treatment now that it will ward off those bad attacks and get the disease under control so that a cure can be effected. Dr. Blosser's life-long study of these diseases has enabled him to discover a remedy which has resulted in the permanent cure of thousands of cases. He will mail a three-days' trial treatment free, together with testimonials, to any sufferer who will apply to Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 11, 12, 13 Grant Building, Atlanta, Ga. Your letter will receive immediate attention if you mention this paper.

The Millennial Dispensation.

Christ's Personal Reign on Earth—Its Duration and Characteristics.

BY REV. DR. F. J. HAMILTON.*

THERE is only one passage in Scripture from which the title "Millennium" has been derived. This passage is Revelation 20: 1–10. In the preceding chapter we read about the reunion between our Saviour and his ransomed saints.

Following upon this there come the promises of our Lord's descent to earth in terrible majesty and power, and accompanied by the armies of heaven; and the capture and final condemnation of the beast and the false prophet. And immediately succeeding that comes the great millennial utterance, according to which the period of unique blessing for the earth is ushered in by the binding of Satan, that he may not any longer deceive the nations; the period of his incarceration being a thousand years. The risen saints reign along with Christ, and the term of their reign with him on earth is co-extensive with the time of the devil's imprisonment. These saints are comprehended in two classes: (1) the "martyrs" who sealed their testimony with their blood; and (2) all the "faithful ones," who in the days of their flesh held fast by the truth as it is in Jesus. These only have part in the first resurrection, and upon them the second death has no power.

That the millennium will succeed and not precede the coming of Christ may be concluded from those portions of Scripture (e. g., St. Matthew 24: 36–39) which speak of the condition which the world will present at the time of that sublime event, and imply that the state of trial from the wiles of Satan and the contradiction of sinners will continue for the believers until then; also from the fact that apostasy with Antichrist as its leader is to exist down to the manifestation of the Lord in his glory, who will consume him by the breath of his mouth and destroy him by the brightness of his appearing (II. Thess. 2: 8.); and still further from the consistent appeal which is made to believing Christians to be ready and watching for "that blessed hope."

As regards the condition of the earth generally, and of its inhabitants, it will be, as we may well suppose, one of fertility, peace and happiness. Although the liability to sin and death will still remain, yet the principal author of our present miseries will be under restraint, and there will be the known and manifest presence of Christ and his saints, and the governing laws, both in themselves and their administration, will be just and perfect, while over all the nations will float the same banner of everlasting love. "Righteousness," says Isaiah, "shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together, and a little child shall lead them."

But although the general predictions for the inhabitants of this world are sufficiently glorious, those which apply to Israel exceed in glory (Ezekiel 37; Zechariah 14; Romans 11), and a host of other prophecies may be brought forward to show that though blindness in part has happened unto Israel, yet they shall be once more established in their land, with Jerusalem as the centre of the revived theocracy; and such will be their zeal for the truth that the Word of God will go forth from them, like living waters, to cross the earth; such their sanctity, that on the bells of the horses and upon the common household vessels will be inscribed "Holiness unto the Lord;" and such their glory that they will have Jesus for their King, and his apostles for their ministers of justice.

But we are hurried over and over again in the Word to the conclusion that Christ shall come to reign and all the saints with him. "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever." Now when is that to be? Not the time intervening between his ascension and his second coming, not in the everlasting ages succeeding the last judgment, but in the millennial dispensation.

OON I shall bid farewell to earth,
With all its vanity and care, d I shall pass across the stream
To be with Jesus there.

cn I shall leave this dismal shore,
This shore of tears and sinful woe,
d to that brighter home above
My ransomed soul shall go.

on I shall sing with joyful strain
The songs the angels sing on high,
d I shall see that land of light,
Where none can ever die.

on I shall gaze upon the face
Of Christ, my Lord, who reigns above, d I shall be through endless years
Lost in my Saviour's love.

ach me to wait, and grant that I May do some work, O Lord, for thee, d with my sheaves at last may I
Be welcomed home to thee.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Inquirer, Hedgeville, W. Va. Who is the author of "Cleanliness is next to godliness?"

This phrase, quoted by Wesley, is apparently of very ancient origin. A Hebrew lecturer has said: "This well-known English phrase had been taught by the rabbis of the Talmud many centuries ago, both as a religious principle and sanitary law." Among many ancient peoples of high civilization, the Egyptians, for instance, "health," says Plutarch, "was no less respected than devotion."

Inquirer, Sault Ste Marie, Mich. Did not the ancient Egyptians offer prayers for the dead, as do the Catholics of to-day?

After burial of the deceased, offerings in his or her name were made to Osiris, and prayers and liturgies were repeated on a greater or less scale, and as long as the friends and relatives had money to pay. Intercession for the dead has been and still is, a feature of many religions. Prayers for the dead are heard every Sunday in Jewish temples of worship.

J. E. M., Portsmouth, R. I. I have read in a Chicago journal that it is believed that King Menelik, of Abyssinia, who claims to be a descendant of King Solomon has the Ark of the Covenant preserved at his capital. Can it be true?

There is no ground for thinking so that we know of. If Nebuchadnezzar did not get it at the destruction of Jerusalem, it was probably hidden by the priests in some cavern within the walls of the city. There would be no opportunity of conveying it outside, especially as far as Abyssinia. If the men who had the secret of its hiding place were all killed, as is possible, it may still be buried, and may eventually be found in or near Jerusalem. Being covered within and without with gold, it was practically indestructible.

Mrs. Catherine S., Hudson, Mich. Was Queen Emma's father English, and her ancestors of royal descent?

Her father was an Englishman, Dr. Rooke, a ship's doctor, who left the service of the Hudson Bay Fur Company for that of Kamehameha II.; her mother was an Englishwoman. Emma married Kamehameha III.

J. W. O. 1. The University of —— offers instructions by mail, stating that a student can study at home and then complete the course by two years' residence. What would you think of such a course? 2. What is the correct pronunciation of Cervera; also of Carnegie, the great steel manufacturer of Pittsburg?

1. Except in rare cases, where the student possesses an unusual power of application and persistent concentration, such studies conducted at home can hardly prove successful. In touch with tutor and class, one will accomplish much more in a given time. A clergyman's education should be thorough, not only in the theological course, but in Latin, Greek, history, natural science and other branches which will add to his equipment. 2. Sar-vay-rah and Kar-ne-gee.

From a reader of this journal, Mr. W. K. Thomas, Middletown, O., we have the following, entitled, "A Peace Offering," the writer being Minnie Gage Boyd, of Indianapolis, Ind. It is particularly appropriate at the present time:

It has been definitely manifested that the great powers of the Government are extended not only over our own nation but also over those of other nations, giving us victories, favorable in all ways, bestowing unanimous strength upon our executive powers, our royal [illegible] upon [illegible] our hearts to [illegible] for his mercy and love. The great visits which President [illegible] and [illegible] above us, over the council of other nations, with the [illegible] of the Supreme God, [illegible]. We [illegible] than Royal Government to [illegible] engaged our hearts [illegible] to [illegible] we are [illegible] [illegible] to extend thy favor, and [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] creatures. We want to be [illegible] of a Father's Savior [illegible] [illegible] our sin. We believe [illegible] [illegible] power to show [illegible] that [illegible] which comes from a knowledge of thee, a heart where Christ [illegible] believe [illegible] [illegible] us to teach them the [illegible] [illegible] development, that they may appreciate thy divinity, and dream of the glories beyond, and conduct their earthly lives with their souls fixed on thee. In the glorious result of this conflict, we divine a converging consciousness of religion: when all nations and all peoples shall arrive at the higher Christianity; when the "one-ness" of belief will be spread throughout the length and breadth of thy land. We are in greater need of thy protecting hand at this moment than during the fiercest battle; for we now have ourselves to govern; we are full of human weaknesses, and we fear that a self-satisfaction, arrogance and a selfish pride may creep into our hearts; and we realize what an enormous detriment that would be in the plan for universal good. What a future of golden promise is before our nation! We feel that we are in the shadow of thy protecting wing; we realize that these phenomenal victories are thine, and we, thy God-fearing people, will bless that day when all the world, in all its vastness, and in one triumphant voice will sing, "Peace on earth, good will toward man."

J. C. B., Aurora, Ill. 1. What is known of the early life of the author of the Epistle of James? 2. Why was the Apostle Paul beheaded instead of being crucified like Christ and Peter?

1. Nothing authoritative. He was probably brought up with Jesus and the other children in the Nazareth home. It is believed that he did not become a follower of Christ until after the resurrection. Christ seems to have appeared specially to him, and as Paul mentions the fact (1. Cor. 15:7) we may presume it was generally known, though it is not related in any of the Gospels. James was a strict Jew before becoming a Christian, and was highly esteemed among the Jews for his piety. It looks as though he never quite shook off his Jewish ideas (Gal. 2:12) and his epistle shows that he could not cordially endorse Paul's way of stating the Gospel. 2. He availed himself of his privilege as a Roman citizen which protected him from the ignominious and lingering death of crucifixion.

S. M. W., Montrose, Pa. What is the meaning of Paul's remarks (II Cor. 5:3) about being clothed or unclothed?

It is part of the idea, which runs through his epistles, of the real man being the soul, and merely the tenant of the body. Thus he regarded death as the dropping off of the body which left the soul free. In the next verse he speaks of being burdened by the body; but he did not expect, or wish to be a disembodied spirit, "unclothed" as he says. He expects to be covered by another "house which is from heaven." That is the spiritual body which he mentions in 1. Cor. 15:35 f.

M. H., Escondido, Tex. 1. There is no church of the kind in which I was brought up, near to our present home. Do you think I would be justified in joining a church of another kind and having my children baptized in it? They have never been baptized, and it makes me uncomfortable. 2. There is no Sunday School, but there are enough children near us to organize one, but no one seems competent to teach. What should we do?

1. We believe you would be quite justified, but it would be well to state frankly your religious beliefs, so that the members of the church may understand your position and not expect from you, if they receive you, services which you cannot consistently render. As all the churches you name baptize in the name of Christ, you will have no objection to the children being baptized in that name, and the rite will not pledge their adhesion to that church if when they grow up they see reason to change. Almost any church connection is better than none at all. 2. Write to the American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia. Their missionary will be glad to help you if it is possible. Till then, get the children together. Some one is sure to be sufficiently competent to read a chapter out of the Gospels to them. Perhaps there is some one who can sing, and then the children can learn a hymn or two. Thus the way will be prepared for the Sunday School missionary.

Schoolgirl, Greendale, Ky. What Scotch author is referred to as the "Peasant Poetess"?

Janet Hamilton. She did not understand how to write, and dictated her verses to her friends and children, who were better educated. At the age of fifty she acquired a crude penmanship of her own.

Subscriber, Edmund, Wis. How am I to understand the petition in the Lord's Prayer: "Lead us not into temptation"? It seems to be in conflict with James 1:13, which says, "God does not tempt man."

The word "lead" scarcely conveys the meaning of the word Christ used. Alford's rendering, though not quite accurate, is nearer to it. He translates it, "Abandon us not in temptation." The idea is a desire that God would have us always in his keeping and save us from falling under the power of sin. This is in accord with the passage you quote from James.

THE NEW EAST RIVER BRIDGE BETWEEN NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN.

Work has already been commenced upon the new bridge which is to be the second great span across the East River. The tower foundations and anchorages will soon be completed, and the work of construction will be pushed with all possible speed. Mr. L. L. Buck is chief engineer and has general charge of the work. The Engineering News gives these as the dimensions of the new structure:

	Feet.		Feet.
Length between terminals	7,200	Height of centre of cables at top of towers above mean high water	335
Width	118	Width of carriage ways, each	18
Minimum height at pier-head lines	117	Width of two foot-walks, each	12
Minimum height at centre of span	135	Width of four trolley-car tracks	10
Height of masonry on tower foundations above mean high water	20	Width of two elevated railway tracks	12

Distance apart of stiffening trusses, 72 feet.

GOSPEL LIGHT BEHIND BARS.

Chaplain Sanderson of the Albany Penitentiary Writes of Soul-Saving Among Criminals—Some Wonderful Conversions.

ONE of the oldest and largest prisons in the United States is the Albany County Penitentiary. It was erected in 1846, and now receives prisoners from Albany and surrounding counties.

CHAPLAIN G. SANDERSON.

In 1861 this prison was selected by the Federal authorities as one of several for the confinement of prisoners convicted in Federal courts of crimes committed against the laws of the general government. From the beginning its population has steadily increased, until it has frequently numbered as many as twelve hundred inmates at a time.

Perhaps no other field of Christian effort presents as many discouraging features as the one cultivated by the prison chaplain. A large majority of the men and women to whom he presents the Gospel have come from homes where the Bible is practically unknown; where children are allowed to grow up in ignorance of their duty to God and their fellow-men; and where example has as well as teaching has been bad. Crime is the logical sequence of this kind of home-training; hence our prisons are largely filled with the graduates from such homes. After they come to prison, perhaps for the first time in their lives, they listen to the "old, old story," but it is new to them, and so wonderful — "too good to be true," as one prisoner expressed it — that the chaplain is often compelled to adopt primary methods to bring his teaching within the mental capacity of the majority of his hearers.

Often, too, prison environment is not always conducive to the stimulating or building up of Christian character. Even after a prisoner has shown a disposition to break away from his sinful life, there are many things which act as preventives. All this is discouraging to the chaplain. Yet, notwithstanding these drawbacks, a faithful chaplain will find ways and means to hold his converts after the Spirit of God has touched their consciences. It is marvelous how the Holy Spirit will take one of these men, whose life has been passed in sin, and change it into a life of peace and joy and daily worship. During my long service in prison work I have been witness to many such scenes: in fact, have been a part of them. I remember one prisoner whose thoughts had been stirred to better things, and who one day, one Sunday, while sitting in the chapel listening to the preached Word, made a quiet but full surrender to God and started in the Christian way. Previous to that he had been a very unruly prisoner, giving the keepers much trouble, but that was all changed when Christ came into his heart to dwell there. He fell sick, and although suffering from a painful disease his great desire was to lift Christ upon those who came in contact with him. As his last moments drew near he expressed a wish to have the chaplain come and pray with him. While the messenger was on his way to me, the dying man, even in his last moments desiring to do work for the Master, called the hospital steward to him and said: "God wants you to be his child: won't you promise a dying man that you will pray to him, and ask for his forgiveness?" and with the request upon his lips his life ebbed away.

One Sunday, while conducting the chapel services, I noticed sitting in the congregation a young lad in tears. When services were over I sought him out. He said that his life had been a wild one: he had left home without his parent's consent, had committed crime in a distant city, and after arrest and conviction, was sentenced to our prison for a term of one year. Sin produces a sort of moral insanity. It requires the work of the quickening Spirit of God to bring the wrong-doer back to reason.

This was the case of the young man before me. He had come to himself. Reason had returned to its throne. He said that while sitting in the chapel his heart was filled with unutterable longing for a better life than the one he had been living. He was reaching out and up after God. At his request I prayed for him, and then he prayed for himself. Oh, how he did pray for pardon! And it came: for he arose from his knees a redeemed man.

Another instance of God's wonderful power to save was witnessed in the redemption of a prisoner whom I shall call John Mack. When I first beheld him it was on a Sunday morning, and he was writhing, in a fit of delirium tremens, on the floor of his cell. His contortions and demoniac screeching were awful to witness and hear. He was a young man, only thirty, but his dissolute habits had changed his appearance to that of a man of sixty. The next day, after he came to himself, I had an interview with him, when he told me that he had married at an early age; his wife proved untrue to him. He had taken to drink to drown his sorrows, had drank to excess—in fact was scarcely sober, except when confined in jail, which lately had been about two-thirds of his time. Again and again he had made efforts to break away from his awful habit, but his strength was unequal to the task, and he had given up in despair. I asked him if he had ever tried Christ as a cure. He admitted that he had once made a profession of Christianity, but he knew that his conversion was was not genuine. But his experience of the two last days had made a deep impression upon him. For the first time in his sinful career he realized the awfulness of his true condition, and was anxious to escape. I urged Christ upon him as his only hope and salvation, and had the blessed privilege of seeing him become a saved man.

Like other workers, in the Master's service, the prison chaplain often sees the bread cast upon the waters come back after many days. One day I was introduced to the pastor of a church in the interior of the State, and during the conversation that ensued I was incidentally referred to as the chaplain of the Albany Penitentiary. The stranger again grasped my hand, and shaking it vigorously, said: "Chaplain, I am doubly glad to meet you, for I have longed to thank you for a service which you did to the people up my way." Upon being urged to explain, he said: "We have a man in our village who was a notorious chicken thief: he was so adroit about his depredations, however, that it was difficult to prove anything against him, although we were all morally certain of his criminal acts. But one night he was caught red handed, and after trial and conviction was sentenced to your penitentiary. He served his time and returned home, and once more his neighbors mounted guard over their henneries. But Frank announced that he had become a Christian; on the first opportunity presented he attended church, and applied for membership: and he is a thoroughly saved man, too, as his changed life shows.

One of the many sad features connected with the office of prison chaplain is the large number of letters received from heart-broken mothers enquiring after their wayward boys. The mother-love does not wane nor grow cold because the erring boy has been sent to prison, but rather is it intensified because of that fact. Naturally the mother looks upon the chaplain as an ally in her efforts to reclaim her boy, and so the letters come in great numbers. It was a sad letter that went from me to a Tennessee mother, lately, for it conveyed the intelligence that only two days before, I had stood over the dead body of her dear but erring one, and with Christian rites had consigned it to mother earth. She had heard nothing of his whereabouts for over a year.

A feature of prison-life that is always filled with interest to the prisoners is the chapel service held every Sunday morning. At 8.30 o'clock the prisoners are formed in line in the large main corridor, and marshaled in single file to our beautiful chapel. A large choir of twenty-four colored men, all prisoners, render selections while the other prisoners are being seated, and as these latter enter the chapel they also take up the refrain, and the effect is thrilling. Everybody sings, and the hundreds of voices thus blending in harmonious strains serve to arouse the enthusiasm of all present. The formal worship is simple, but effective.

After the services, when the men are again locked in their little four by seven cells, the chaplain meets them face to face, and here is where the latter's most effective work is done. He deals now with the individual, showing his great sympathy for the prisoner, but condemning his sin. Under his sympathetic touch hearts are opened to him: crimes, remorse, desires and ambitions are all laid bare, and his opportunities for effective work for the Master are thus almost limitless. By advice, admonition, exhortation and prayer, he directs the erring one to Christ as his Saviour and Mediator, and seeks to win him from the path of sin. I know of hundreds of men who have been thus won from wrong-doing to a knowledge of the saving grace of Jesus Christ.

Worship at Ocean Grove.

A Great Gathering at the Annual Camp-Meeting—Crowds at all the Services.

THE Ocean Grove Camp-meeting of 1898 was probably the largest assemblage ever held in that historic spiritual resort. The first meeting on these grounds, nearly thirty years ago, was attended by only twenty people, and in that small beginning a great combination of religious effort had its inception, increasing in importance with every passing year.

Among the principal services held at the Grove each summer are those of The Womans' Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey; The National Temperance Society and Publication House; The Sunday School Assembly and the Summer School of Theology. The latter is the youngest of all the organized efforts, and was inaugurated four or five years ago. Among those who lectured before the school this season were the Rev. Dr. Gunsaulus, Dr. George Elliott, Dr. Gregory, Dr. Frank Bristol, of the Metropolitan Methodist Church of Washington (President McKinley's church), Congressman I. P. Doliver, of Iowa, and Dr. Powers of Washington.

During the ten days of the Camp-meeting there are probably not less than fifty thousand people on the grounds. They come from all parts of the country and from foreign lands, and include members of all denominations. This year the Camp-meeting began on Friday, August 19th. Bishop Fitzgerald led the service. On Saturday morning Evangelist L. W. Munhall preached the opening sermon of the Camp-meeting, and then the entire machinery of the Camp was in running order. From early morn until night the voice of prayer, praise and exhortation resounded from tabernacle, temple, auditorium and tent. Each morning a consecration meeting was held at the tabernacle, led by Rev. Dr. Ballard, Vice-President of the Association, and the Rev. H. M. Brown. An hour later Family Devotions were held in the Auditorium. At nine o'clock, three meetings were in progress at once. The Young People's Meeting in the temple, led by Evangelist Charles H. Yatman, the Holiness Meeting in the tabernacle, and the Helping Hand Meeting in Thornley chapel, the last especially for the unconverted. There were three public services in the auditorium daily. At half-past one o'clock each afternoon, Miss Lizzie Smith held an evangelistic service in the tabernacle as she has for twenty-five successive Camp-meetings.

At the Children's Meeting, at half past four, many little ones expressed a desire to enlist under the banner of the Cross. They were given very careful instruction by their leader, Mrs. Grace Weiser Davis. At half past six o'clock in the evening a beautiful Torch-light Service was held in the temple, led by Evangelist Yatman, consisting largely of experience and song.

The greatest day of the Camp was Sunday, August 28. Over ten thousand people gathered in and about the auditorium for the morning service. The platform and galleries were crowded, and many unable to obtain seats listened at the open doors and windows. The Camp-meeting Love Feast, preceding the sermon, was conducted by Bishop Fitzgerald. The discourse of the morning was preached by Bishop D. A. Goodsell, who has preached in nearly every State in the Union, and during the term of his Episcopal office, in nearly every quarter of the globe as well.

At the beach-meeting at six o'clock, the crowds extended far beyond the reach of the speakers' voices. At the close of the beach service the Rev. Dr. W. P. George, of Kansas City, delivered the sermon in the auditorium.

Among the other well-known workers who shared in the Camp-meeting labors, were Rev. Dr. Thomas Hanlon, President of Pennington Seminary; Rev. L. H. Baker, Dr. S. P. Cadman, Rev. William Denman; Dr. George E. Reed, President of Dickinson College; Dr. Wilding, Dr. Hunsberger, Rev. G. H. Neals, Rev. H. M. Brown, and Rev. C. H. McBride. The Camp-meeting closed at noon, Aug. 30th.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

THE ART OF FRIENDSHIP.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Proverbs 18: 24, ...

A man that hath friends must show himself friendly.

ABOUT the sacred and Divine art of making and keeping friends I speak — a subject on which I never heard of anyone preaching—and yet God thought it of enough importance to put it in the middle of the Bible, these writings of Solomon, bounded on one side by the popular Psalms of David, and on the other by the writings of Isaiah, the greatest of the prophets. It seems all a matter of haphazard how many friends we have, or whether we have any friends at all, but there is nothing accidental about it. There is a law which governs the accretion and dispersion of friendships. They did not "just happen so" any more than the tides just happen to rise or fall, or the sun just happens to rise or set. It is a science, an art, a God-given regulation.

Tell me how friendly you are to others, and I will tell you how friendly others are to you. I do not say you will not have enemies: indeed, the best way to get ardent friends is to have ardent enemies, if you get their enmity in doing the right thing. Good men and women will always have enemies, because their goodness is a perpetual rebuke to evil; but this antagonism of foes will make more intense the love of your adherents. Your friends will gather closer around you because of the attacks of your assailants. The more your enemies abuse you the better your coadjutors will think of you.

The best friends we have ever had appeared at some juncture when we were especially bombarded. There have been times in my life when unjust assault multiplied my friends, as near as I could calculate, about fifty a minute. You are bound to some people by many cords that neither time nor eternity can break, and I will warrant that many of those cords were twisted by hands malevolent. Human nature was shipwrecked about fifty-nine centuries ago, the captain of that craft, one Adam, and his first mate running the famous cargo aground on a snag in the river Hiddekel; but there was at least one good trait of human nature that waded safely ashore from that shipwreck, and that is the disposition to take the part of those unfairly dealt with. When it is thoroughly demonstrated that some one is being persecuted, although at the start slanderous tongues were busy enough, defenders finally gather around as thick as honey bees on a trellis of bruised honeysuckle.

If, when set upon by the furies, you can have grace enough to keep your mouth shut, and preserve your equipoise, and let others fight your battles, you will find yourself after awhile with a whole cordon of allies. Had not the world given to Christ on his arrival at Palestine a very cold shoulder, there would not have been one-half as many angels chanting glory out of the hymn-books of the sky, bound in black lids of midnight. Had it not been for the heavy and jagged and tortuous Cross, Christ would not have been the admired and loved of more people than any being who ever touched foot on either the eastern or western hemisphere. Instead, therefore, of giving up in despair because you have enemies, rejoice in the fact that they rally for you the most helpful and enthusiastic admirers. In other words, there is no virulence that can hinder my text from coming true: "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly."

It is my ambition to project especially upon the young a thought which may benignly shape their destiny for the here and the hereafter. Before you show yourself friendly you must be friendly. I do not recommend a dramatized geniality. There is such a thing as pretending to be en rapport with others, when we are their dire destructants, and talk against them, and wish them calamity. Judas covered up his treachery by a resounding kiss, and caresses may be demoniacal. Better the mythological Cerberus, the three-headed dog of hell, barking at us, than the wolf in sheep's clothing, its brindled hide covered up by deceptive wool, and its deathful howl cadenced into an innocent bleating. Disraeli writes of Lord Manfred, who, after committing many outrages upon the people, seemed suddenly to become friendly, and invited them to a banquet. After most of the courses of food had been served he blew a horn, which was in those times a signal for the servants to bring on the dessert, but in this case it was the signal for assassins to enter and slay the guests. His pretended friendliness was a cruel fraud; and there are now people whose smile is a falsehood.

Before you begin to show yourself friendly you must be friendly. Get your heart right with God and man, and this grace will become easy. You may by your own resolution get your nature into a semblance of this virtue, but the grace of God can sublimely lift you into it. Sailing on the river Thames two vessels ran aground. The owners of one got one hundred horses, and pulled on the grounded ship, and pulled it to pieces. The owners of the other grounded vessel waited till the tides came in, and easily floated the ship out of all trouble. So we may pull and haul at our grounded human nature, and try to get it into better condition: but there is nothing like the oceanic tides of God's uplifting grace. If, when under the flash of the Holy Ghost, we see our own foibles and defects and depravities, we will be very lenient, and very easy with others. We will look into their characters for things commendatory, and not damnatory. If you would rub your own eye a little more vigorously you would find a mote in it, the extraction of which would keep you so busy you would not have much time to shoulder your broadaxe, and go forth to split up the beam in your neighbor's eye. In a Christian spirit keep on exploring the characters of those you meet, and I am sure you will find something in them fit for a foundation of friendliness.

You invite me to come to your country-seat and spend a few days. Thank you! I arrive about noon of a beautiful summer day. What do you do? As soon as I arrive you take me out under the shadow of the great elms. You take me down to the artificial lake, the spotted trout floating in and out among the white pillars of the pond-lilies. You take me to the stalls and kennels where you keep your fine stock, and here are the Durham cattle and the Gordon setters; and the high-stepping steeds, by pawing and neighing, the only language they can speak, asking for harness or saddle, and a short turn down the road. Then we go back to the house, and you get me in the right light, and show me the Kensetts and the Bierstadts on the wall, and take me into the music-room and show me the bird-cages, the canaries in the bay window answering the robins in the tree-tops. Thank you! I never enjoyed myself more in the same length of time. Now, why do we not do so with the characters of others, and show the bloom and the music and the bright fountains? No. We say, "Come along, and let me show you that man's character. Here is a green-scummed frog-pond, and there's a filthy cellar, and I guess under that hedge there must be a black snake. Come, and let us for an hour or two regale ourselves with the nuisances."

Oh, my friends, better cover up the faults and extol the virtues; and this habit once established of universal friendliness will become as easy as it is for a syringa to flood the air with sweetness, as easy as it will be further on in the season for a quail to whistle up from the grass. When we hear something bad about somebody whom we always supposed to be good, take out your lead-pencil, and say, "Let me see! Before I accept that baleful story against that man's character, I will take off from it twenty-five per cent. for the habit of exaggeration which belongs to the man who first told the story; then I will take off twenty-five per cent. for the additions which the spirit of gossip in every community has put upon the original story; then I will take off twenty-five per cent. from the fact that the man may have been put into circumstances of overpowering temptation. So I have taken off seventy-five per cent. But I have not heard his side of the story at all, and for that reason I take off the remaining twenty-five per cent. Excuse me, sir, I don't believe a word of it."

But here comes in a defective maxim, so often quoted: "Where there is so much smoke there must be some fire." Look at all the smoke for years around Jenner, the introducer of vaccination; and the smoke around Columbus, the discoverer; and the smoke around Martin Luther, and Savonarola, and Galilee, and Paul, and John, and tell me where was the fire! That is one of the satanic arts to make smoke without fire. Slander, like the world, may be made out of nothing. If the Christian, fair-minded, common-sensical spirit in regard to others predominated in the world we should have the millennium in about six weeks, for would not that be lamb and lion, cow and leopard lying down together? Nothing but the grace of God can ever put us into such a habit of mind and heart as that. The tendency is in the opposite direction. This is the way the world talks: I put my name on the back of a man's note, and I had to pay it, and I will never again put my name on the back of any man's note. I gave a beggar ten cents, and five minutes after I saw him entering a liquor store to spend it. I will never again give a cent to a beggar. I helped that young man start in business, and lo, after a while, he came and opened a store almost next door to me, and stole my customers. I will never again help a young man to start in business. I trusted in what my neighbor promised to do, and he broke his word, and the Psalmist was right before he corrected himself, for "all men are liars." So men become suspicious and saturnine and selfish, and at every additional wrong done them they put another layer on the wall of their exclusiveness, and another bolt to the door that shuts them out from sympathy with the world.

Now, supposing that you have, by a Divine regeneration, got right toward God and humanity, and you start out to practice my text. "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly." Fulfil this by all forms of appropriate salutation. Have you noticed that the head is so poised that the easiest thing on earth is to give a nod of recognition? To swing the head from side to side, as when it is wagged in derision, is unnatural and unpleasant: to throw it back, invites vertigo; but to drop the chin in greeting is accompanied with so little exertion that all day long, and every day, you might practice it without the least semblance of fatigue. So, also, the structure of the hand indicates hand-shaking; the knuckles not made so that the fingers can turn out, but so made that the fingers can turn in, as in clasping hands; and the thumb divided from and set aloof from the fingers, so that while the fingers take your neighbor's hand on one side, the thumb takes it on the other, and, pressed together, all the faculties of the hand give emphasis to the salutation. Five sermons in every healthy hand urge us to hand-shaking.

Besides this, every day when you start out, load yourself up with kind thoughts, kind words, kind expressions, and kind greetings. When a man or woman does well, tell him so, tell her so. If you meet some one who is improved in health, and it is demonstrated in girth and color, say: "How well you look!" But if, on the other hand, under the wear and tear of life he appears pale and exhausted, do not introduce sanitary subjects, or say anything at all about physical condition. In the case of improved health, you have by your words given another impulse towards the robust and the jocund; while in the case of the failing health you have arrested the decline by your silence, by which he concludes: "If I were really so badly off he would have said something about it." We are all, especially those of a nervous temperament, susceptible to kind words and discouraging words. Form a conspiracy against us, and let ten men meet us at certain points on our way over to business, and let each one say, "How sick you look!" though we should start out well, after meeting the first one hearing his depressing salute, we would begin to examine our symptoms. After meeting the second gloomy accosting we would conclude we did not feel quite as well as usual. After meeting the third our sensations would be dreadful, and after meeting the fourth, unless we suspected a conspiracy, we would go home and go to bed, and the other six pessimists would be a useless surplus of discouragement.

My dear sir, my dear madam, what do you mean by going about this world disheartenments? Is not the supply of gloom and trouble and misfortune enough to meet the demand without your running a factory of pins and spikes? Why should you plant black and blue in the world when God so seldom plants them? Plenty of scarlet colors, plenty of yellow, plenty of green, plenty of pink, but very seldom a plant black or blue. I never saw a black flower, and there's only here and there a bluebell or a violet; but the blue is for the most part reserved for the sky, and we have to look up to see it, and when we look up, no color can do us harm. Why not plant along the path of others the brightnesses instead of the glooms?

Do not prophesy misfortune. If you must be a prophet at all, be an Ezekiel and not a Jeremiah. In ancient times the prophets who foretold evil were divinely right, for they were divinely directed: but the prophets of evil in our time are generally false prophets. Some of our weather-wise people prophesied we would have a summer of unparalleled heat. It has been a very comfortable summer. Last fall all the weather prophets agreed in saying we should have a winter of extraordinary severity, blizzard on the heels of blizzard. It was the mildest winter I ever remember to have passed. Indeed, the autumn and the spring almost shoved winter, out of the procession. Real troubles have only heralds running ahead of their sorrowful chariots, and no one has any authority in our time to announce their coming. Let yourself up with hopeful words and deeds. The hymn once sung in our churches is unfit to be sung, for it says:

> "We should suspect some danger near,
> Where we possess delight."

In other words, manage to keep miserable all the time. The old song sung at the pianos a quarter of a century ago was right: "Kind words can never die." Such kind words have their nests in human hearts, and when they are hatched out and take wing, they circle round in flights that never cease, and sportsman's gun cannot shoot them, and storms cannot ruffle their wings, and when they come in flight in these lower skies of earth they sweep around amid the higher altitudes of heaven. At Baltimore, I talked into a phonograph. The cylinder containing the words was sent on to Washington, and the next day that cylinder from another phonographic instrument, when turned, gave back to me the very words I had uttered the day before, and with the same intonations. Scold into a phonograph, and it will scold back. Pour mild words into a phonograph and it will return the gentleness. Society and the world and the Church are phonographs. Give them acerbity and rough treatment, and acerbity and rough treatment you will get back. A father asked his little daughter: "Mary, why is it that everybody loves you?" She answered: "I don't know, unless it is because I love everybody." "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly."

We want something like that spirit of sacrifice for others which was seen in the English Channel, where in the storm a boat containing three men was upset, and all three were in the water struggling for their lives. A boat came to their relief, and a rope was thrown to one of them, and he refused to take it, saying: "Don't fling it to Tom; he is just ready to go down. I can last some time longer." A man like that, be he sailor or landsman, be he in upper ranks of society or lower ranks, will always have plenty of friends. What is true manward is true Godward. We must be the friends of God if we want him to be our friend. We can not treat Christ badly all our lives and expect him to treat us lovingly. I was reading of a sea fight, in which Lord Nelson captured a French officer, and when the French officer offered Lord Nelson his hd, Nelson replied. "First give me your sord, and then give me your hand." Srender of our resistance to God must pcede God's proffer of pardon to us. Rentance before forgiveness. You must g up your rebellious sword before you c get a grasp of the Divine hand.

h, what a glorious state of things to he the friendship of God! Why, we old afford to have all the world against u and all other worlds against us if we h God for us. He could in a minute b out this universe, and in another ute make a better universe. I have n idea that God tried hard when he nle all things. The most brilliant thing kwn to us is light, and for the creation o hat he only used a word of command. A out of a flint a frontiersman strikes a sk, so out of one word God struck the nday sun. For the making of the p ent universe I do not read that God d so much as a finger. The Bible fr uently speaks of God's hand and G 's arm and God's shoulder and God's fc then suppose he should put hand a arm and shoulder and foot to utmost te ion, what could he not make? That G of such demonstrated and unde m strated strength, you may have for y present and everlasting friend, not a tely and reticent friend, hard to get a but as approachable as a country m sion on a summer day, when all the d s and windows are wide open. Christ s . "I am the door." And he is a wide d , a high door, a palace door, an al w s open door.

y four-year-old child got hurt and did n cry until hours after, when her mother c e home, and then she burst into w ping, and some of the domestics, not u erstanding human nature, said to her, "hy did you not cry before?" She an s ed: "There was no one to cry to." N . I have to tell you that while human s pathy may be absent, Divine sym pty is always accessible. Give God v love, and get his love: your service, a secure his help; your repentance, and h his pardon. God a friend? Why, th means all your wounds medicated, a your sorrows soothed, and if some s en catastrophe should hurl you out o earth it would only hurl you into h en.

ow refreshing is human friendship; a true friends, what priceless treasures! W en sickness comes, and trouble comes, a death comes, we send for our friends fi of all, and their appearance in our w way in any crisis is reinforcement. a when they have entered, we say: ow it is all right!" Oh, what would w do without personal friends, business fr nds, family friends? But we want s mething mightier than human friendship n e great exigencies. When Jonathan E ards, in his final hour, had given the a good-bye to all his earthly friends, he t ed on his pillow and closed his eyes, c fidently saying: "Now where is Jesus o Nazareth, my true and never-failing F nd?"

es, I greatly admire human friend s as seen in the case of David and J than, of Paul and Onesiphorus, of H der and Goethe, of Goldsmith and R nolds, of Beaumont and Fletcher, of C ley and Harvey, of Erasmus and T mas More, of Lessing and Mendels n, of Lady Churchill and Princess A e, of Orestes and Pylades, each re sting that himself might take the point o he dagger, so the other might be s ed: of Epaminondas and Pelopidas, w locked their shields in battle, deter med to die together; but the grandest, th mightiest, the tenderest friendship in all e universe is the friendship between J s Christ and a believing soul. Yet, a r all I have said, I feel I have only d e what James Marshall, the miner, d in 1848 in California, before its gold m es were known. He reached in and p upon the table of his employer, Capt Sutter, a thimbleful of gold dust. "here did you get that?" said his em p er. The reply was: "I got it this m ning from a mill race from which the w er had been drawn off." But that gold d , which could have been taken up be tween the finger and the thumb, was the p phecy and specimen that revealed C fornia's wealth to all nations. And t day I have only put before you a speci n of the value of divine friendship, o a thimbleful of mines inexhaustible a infinite, though all time and all eter n go on with the exploration.

"THE HOUSE OF PEACE."

What an "Old Maid" did to make Helpless Old Couples Happy.

CAROLINE ELIZABETH Burnap was what most people would call an old maid. She had lived fifty-three years here below and was alone in the world. For a long time she had been caring for her father and ministering to the needs of his declining years. When the sunset came she had a few hundred dollars in bank and faced the world in the future with only herself and her God to rely upon.

She was profoundly religious, and though she had lived all her life in a small country town, she had a longing in her heart, to bring good cheer and Gospel comfort to the forgotten and neglected people who abound in the slums of the large cities. Boston is the Mecca of New Englanders, and so naturally her thoughts turned towards the North End and its hive of sins and sorrows.

Miss Burnap's idea of doing mission work was quite different from that of a great many good people, who hope thereby to find for themselves a more comfortable way of getting a livelihood than hitherto. Her thought was to be a self-supporting Christian worker. She proposed to pay her own way and do what she could to carry the comfort of Christian faith which was dear to her, to those who were stumbling the lonely way without it. People of that spirit, with a missionary call, do not usually have a very hard time finding a job. So it was not long before she was immersed in the work of the North End Mission. She showed great aptitude for dealing with women who were in sin and trouble. Her great fund of common sense, united with a heart gentle as a child's, formed a partnership that made her a tower of strength to many a ship-wrecked sister on the rocky coast of the North End.

While in the midst of this work Miss Burnap came to know an old woman who had in her earlier life a good home and cultured and comfortable surroundings, who through the death of her loved ones, and misfortune in business matters, was left entirely without means. Miss Burnap sought to be of help to this good woman, but soon discovered that with all the multitude of charitable institutions (and they are legion) about Boston, there was no place open for a woman of this kind, except the poor-house. There were homes for old couples, and homes for women, but it was necessary that someone should pay a very considerable sum before they could gain admission.

It was from studying this case that Miss Burnap felt called of God to establish a home for a group of old women who had been good women, and whose past history was worthy, but who, coming to old age, found themselves stranded without friends or means. She proposed to stand between the other homes and the poor-house as a resting place for these aged saints. She rented a house, took the old lady home with her, and began her work. After a little others came and she has had sometimes as high as eleven, but ordinarily eight or nine have completed her family.

Miss Burnap has not, at any time, sought to be dispenser of other people's charity. She has never gone about taking collections, or asked anybody for help, except God. It is her home, and she is the hostess there, and these lovely old ladies, whom she gathers, are her guests. During the earlier years of her work she took in washing from people outside to help pay her rent and get money for their food. From the very beginning she had been the cook and housekeeper of the establishment, and though now she is well past the Psalmist's three score years and ten, she still does all the cooking for the dwellers in her house of peace. Of course, she has received help from outside. People who have known of her loving work, have been glad, from time to time, to share her burdens, but it has always been in a quiet, gentle and unobtrusive way.

Her home is indeed a house of peace. Her own religion is as simple and unaffected as the fragrance of a flower, blooming forth its worship towards the sun. The whole atmosphere of the place is one of love and of peace, and year after year, some of God's choicest saints find there a sweet haven of repose.

I first came to know her because an aged sister of an old sea captain whom I knew was left, through the death of her brother, without support. She was over eighty years old and all her life had known the comfort and self-respect of a New England sea-captain's home. How could such a woman go to the poor house to die? Then it was that Miss Burnap came to the rescue and took Aunt Hannah to her heart and fire-side. For several years her guest tarried in perfect peace and when, last year she entered into rest, Miss Burnap journeyed down to Maine to lay her in the old village grave-yard by her ancestors. May heaven multiply such houses of peace!

The Bowery Mission's New Home.

Its Spiritual Work Now Conducted at No. 55 Bowery Under Cheering Auspices.

AN audience of earnest seekers after righteousness filled the beautiful hall at No. 55 Bowery, the new quarters of the Bowery Mission, on the occasion of the opening service, a few days ago. It was a memorable event, being the first public gathering in the Mission's new home, and those present, as they gazed at the spacious hall, with its rows of neat pews, its four large, light domes and its great organ at the further end, back of the platform, showed by the delighted expression on their faces, how they appreciated the change. The building is probably the finest that is used for mission work anywhere in this country. The large hall is 100 by 25 feet, and has a seating capacity of between 400 and 500.

The first service held in the new hall was a consecration meeting, by members of the Bowery Mission Rescue League. After half an hour of sacred song, the Scripture lesson was read by Mr. S. H. Hadley, Superintendent of the McAuley Mission. Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, "the mother of the Bowery Boys," whose Thursday night meetings had been discontinued during the summer months, followed with a largely attended spiritual meeting, at the close of which 400 needy men were supplied with a substantial meal. Among the rescue workers present on this occasion was a young lady evangelist, a neice of Mr. D. L. Moody. For several years past she has been engaged in evangelistic work among the prisoners in different jails in the country. At the close of the service, twenty-five men expressed a desire to abandon sin and lead a better life.

Regular Gospel meetings will be held every day in the year at the new Bowery Mission Headquarters. Like the old Mission it will be a light-house in a great and populous thoroughfare, to guide the wanderers to Christ and the Cross. Its doors will be ever open and the poor, the unfortunate and the distressed will receive a special welcome.

A Strange West Indian People.

While there is so much turmoil in the West Indies, a writer who has visited it, calls attention to a little-known member of the group, antedating our own, and to which Raynal gave the above title. It is Saba, a dot on the map just north of St. Kitto. It is accredited to Holland and flies the Dutch flag on holidays and Sundays; but the flag has in the corner a cabbage, which is the national staple and therefore has just claim to its position of dignity in the Coat of Arms. Saba's circumference is about twelve miles; population about 2,000. It rises like a mountain out of the ocean—its sheer sides reaching an altitude of 800 to 1,200 feet, before being broken by crag or slope. On the east side a break in the cliffs supplies a somewhat less perpendicular surface along which a series of giddy stairs have been cut. The cove at the foot of these steps is Saba's only port. From the top of the steps one looks outward over a magnificent view of ocean and islands; and inland to a lovely valley in the heart of this ocean mountain, which now seems to be hollow. The Sabans are farmers, fisher-folk and excellent boat-builders; they construct sloops and schooners of considerable size and slide them down the face of the cliffs or lower them by immense but primitive derricks and tackling. The inhabitants are ruddy, fair-haired, blue-eyed, hardy and stalwart mountaineers, and are the descendants of Dutch, Swedish, and Danish pirates of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, who being impressed with the islet's matchless possibilities as a stronghold, settled their families here. European warships tried to take possession of Saba, but in vain. The islanders, however, eventually laid some sort of claim to a Dutch protectorate, but they pay no taxes to Holland and govern themselves after a very simple fashion. There is little litigation and less crime. They are simple honest folk in spite of pirate descent; their religion is Lutheran.

Review of the Quarter's Lesson.

S. S. Lesson for Sept. 25. Golden Text, Psalms 84 : 11.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE children of Israel had desired to have a king that they might be like the nations. God "gave them their desire, and sent leanness withal into their soul." Through his prophet Hosea, he says to them, "Where is now thy king that he may save thee in all thy cities? . . . thou saidst, give me a king and princes. I have given thee a king in mine anger" (Hos. 13: 10, 11). There is always judgment in it when God gives his children their own way. His way is perfect, our way is perverted; and it is our great sin, "they have turned every one to his own way" (Isa. 53: 6). When the failure of Saul, after a forty years' reign, had fully proved the word of God concerning him (1. Sam. 8: 11–18), God gave them in mercy the man after his own heart, and under David the nation became powerful and the name of God was exalted in the earth.

The whole people got their way in having a king, and now the majority, the ten tribes of Israel, got their way in separating from the house of David, and from the holy city where the temple and the ark of God were. They wanted to manage things themselves, and a bitter experience of two hundred and fifty years, during which every single king of Israel followed Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who set up the golden calves at Bethel and at Dan as a substitute for the worship of God at Jerusalem in his temple, was brought to an end by the humiliating captivity of Israel: God's judgment upon their idolatry. All the strife and division in the eighteen and a half centuries of Christianity have come about much in the same way. Idolatry and worldliness have crept in, and instead of the going on from strength to strength, the deterioration, not only in so-called Christendom, but also in the mass of believers, the church of Christ has been as marked, and the division has been as sad as in the history of Israel.

But God never leaves himself without a witness. In the midst of the confusion and the shame of Israel's degeneracy, and by means of the very suffering it entailed on such as took these things to heart, God educated his prophets. An Elijah and an Elisha could not have been produced otherwise. Just as in Noah's time, the same waters of the flood which destroyed the men who had no ear for the preacher of righteousness, lifted him nearer to heaven and sent him forth to God, so the wrath of the wicked Jezebel through the weak King Ahab, whom she made her tool, while it was the occasion of developing outwardly in the midst of the people who wanted to be like the nations, the idolatry which was already in their hearts, and so bringing them under judgment, served God's prophets to throw them back upon their God, and to develop in them the bold faith and lively energy which were a power in their generation.

Elijah could not go the way of the people because all things in the land set at God. God's way was his only path. The king's favor was no object to him, popularity was of no value in his eyes; earthly advantages counted for nothing; he stood before his God, and saw all things in their relation to God. The interests of God and his interests were so really one that he had not to consider when God sent him to the brook Cherith, whether he could really depend upon ravens to feed him: he looked above the ravens to his God. Elijah saw the king, the ravens, the failing brook, the starving widow, and death itself as only secondary things, and he did not reckon with them, but with him who permitted them, and worked through them, and thus none of these things moved him. Was he an exceptional man? The Apostle James tells us he was a man of like passions or nature as we are (James 5: 17): there was nothing at all extraordinary about him; but he simply dared to believe in God in the midst of a people who had grieved the Holy Spirit (Isa. 63: 9, 10).

While the Kings Ahab, Ahaziah and Jehoram were ripening for destruction, Elijah was learning in the school of God. All things are yours (1. Cor. 3: 21). If that which God permits to happen is apparently the greatest hindrance to us, it is, by that very reason, the greatest possible blessing; because it casts us so entirely on his almightiness. There is not the smallest indication that either Elijah or Elisha were in any way remarkable in themselves: no single striking characteristic is recorded of either of them, and we are especially told that Elijah was of the same nature as other men. All that distinguished them is as possible to the weakest child of God as to them; it was that they were so yielded to God that he could do what he would, and say what he would, through them; they never wanted their own way.

When God sent Elijah to reprove a king, he did not consider his feelings, but simply went. When he knew that God wanted to hide him by the brookside, he did not complain of wasted time: when he sent him as boarder to a poor widow in the time of famine, he did not shrink back because of what people might say about his depending upon a poor widow. Feel mss and all he was the Lord's, therefore God could use him. When he was face to face with death, and God wanted him as a witness that death itself must yield to him, Elijah could trust God to raise the widow's son before he trusted, as Enoch had done before him, to be himself taken away without dying to heaven. Through all these steps of faith, God made him ready for Mount Carmel, that crowning day of his ministry. After this his education took another turn, and like John the Baptist, who said, "He must increase but I must decrease" (John 3: 30), this prophet of the Lord was glad to anoint a successor that he might disappear, not from morbid sensitiveness, but because there was probably dawning upon him something of what he and Moses spoke of with the transfigured Saviour on the mount (Luke 9: 31). Elisha was no Elijah, and the ministry of Elijah had to be fulfilled that the Elisha ministry might follow it.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE twelve lessons of the review cover nearly two and a-half centuries from B. C. 937 to B. C. 721. This was the entire existence of the Northern Kingdom, which took the name of Israel, in distinction from Judah and Benjamin, which constituted the Southern Kingdom. Israel was much the larger and more vigorous kingdom, but its situation was more perilous, as it had on its north-eastern frontier the aggressive kingdom of Syria, and beyond that, the powerful Assyrian Empire, which was contending with Egypt for the world empire. The end of the nation came, as the lessons of the quarter have shown, when Israel had to choose between paying a heavy tribute to Assyria, or with Egypt's help, defying her oppressor. She chose the latter, and as Egypt did not give the promised help, Israel was overpowered and dispersed. The sacred historian took a religious view of the national dangers. He believed that if his country had obeyed its God and trusted him, he would have protected her. But instead of doing so, she worshiped idols, introduced the horrible, degrading worship of the heathen deities, and lost the purity of character and strength of righteousness which alone can give stability to a nation. To this fact he attributes the fall of the nation. There was no reason why God should interfere for the protection of a nation which did not honor him and did not fulfil the mission with which he had intrusted her. This broad view is justified by secular history. A nation which becomes godless, licentious and depraved, becomes weak and needs only a vigorous attack from a foe to collapse. Like the individual, the nation is enervated and deteriorated by sin.

The Lord was not in the earthquake (1. Kings 19: 11). Perhaps Elijah hoped that at Sinai he might witness some visible manifestation of God. It might be that the Being, who had once spoken to Moses from the top of that mountain, might speak to him. When, therefore, there was one of those terrible wind storms, which still rage in that region, Elijah emerged from the cave in which he had sheltered, thinking he might see God. But there was no sign in the storm that spoke to him. Nor in the earthquake, which followed it; nor in the electri agitation, which seemed to fill the air w light and flame. None of them spoke to h of God or gave him any message. Th are some men who see God in startli tragedies and awful calamities, who can s him nowhere else. A traveler, who has be in many storms at sea, says that in r danger he has noticed that the sailo who in ordinary times are the most ca less and profane, are the first to kn down and pray.

He went away in a rage (11. Kings 5: Naaman's disposition is common. It one of the chief difficulties in the way the Gospel. Men have always been v ling "to do some great thing" to e salvation—to go into monasteries, undergo suffering, or to render some gr service, or pay some large sum for sal tion—but they do not see the use simply believing. It seems inadequa That is why a child, who is docile and ready to do unquestioningly whatsoe he is told, is more likely to be saved t a philosopher. A traveler in south France was annoyed by finding a lock gate across the path he was taking. looked around, but there was no way climbing over the spikes that surmount it. But a little girl came out of a loc at the side, who asked him if he wan to go through. He said he did. "The said she, "you must say 'may I pass He repeated the formula, and she oper the gate at once. She explained that road belonged to a private gentlem who simply wished to have his right knowledged. A man who sisted on forcing his way, paying toll, could not through, but he who asked it a favor had no difficulty.

The mountain was full horses and chariots (Kings 6: 17). This show God's care for his servar It is not always manifes in saving his servants fr injury or death. Sometin God allows his child to killed or to suffer some gri ous injury, but he never serts him, and even in fires of martyrdom is with child to support and cl him. Whittier tells bea fully in his Legend of Mark how a peasant slave Provence found that he co see over the fields, from high window in his maste castle, the towers of the Cat dral of St. Mark. When was cruelly treated he u to go up to this window a pray that St. Mark wo help him to bear his suf ing patiently. He was a po uneducated lad and he ho that the Saint would h him. The legend goes on tell how his master found h thus praying and was an that the boy should give to a dead saint homage he did not give to his living m ter. He therefore ordered him to be tort ed. In the torture chamber the boy pray again and beheld St. Mark appear. T rack was broken, the chains torn asun and St. Mark bore him away to libe and eternal life. This is only a leger but there has been many a martyr w has been delivered not from suffering a death, but borne through them to t Father's house of many mansions.

Ye that put far away the evil a (Amos 6: 3). If it could be put away, th would not be so much trouble, but it only in their thoughts that it is put away. When Napoleon's army was Moscow, in 1812, some of the officers h a ball in one of the deserted mansions the Russian nobles. The governor set t city on fire that night. The revellers s the flames but they were far away a they thought themselves safe. Even wh the next house was burning they cont ued to dance. Some grew alarmed, Carnot, one of the officers, called for o more dance and there would still be t to get away safely. Men and women w whirling away merrily, when there was terrific explosion. There was a magaz full of gunpowder near them, of wh they knew nothing. There would ha been time to get away from the flame but the gunpowder brought a swifter struction and the dance ended in death.

FROM FEVER-STRICKEN CAMPS.

Invalid Soldiers Returning to Their Homes—Enthusiastic Welcomes—The President Visits Camp Wikoff—Work of the Christian Commission.

WEAK from fever, emaciated by long privations or still suffering from wounds received in the field, our regular and volunteer regiments are now being sent home from the different camps as rapidly as their condition will permit. Many of these regiments of returning heroes afford sad evidence of the sufferings they have undergone. Some have left nearly half their number behind; many of their members lie in Cuban graves, others are still sick in Cuban hospitals, while others still are lying fever-stricken in the detention hospitals of the home-camps fighting a battle with disease that is far more deadly than Spanish bullets. To add to the discomforts of the returning troops, the journey home has been made during the severest weather that has been experienced for many years. But the enthusiasm of the welcome at every stopping-place and the lavish kindnesses extended to them on every hand, have caused them to forget many of the hardships they but lately encountered. Home at last, they have been received by cheering multitudes, and waving flags and the stirring strains of martial music. The worn faces have lighted up with eager pleasure, and the men have marched through crowded streets almost as jauntily as though they had not just finished a most arduous campaign that had brought many of them to the very gates of death.

A Thrilling Scene.

Such a scene as we have described occurred in New York lately on the arrival home of the Seventy-first Regiment. Haggard and wan from the hardships of war they rode up Broadway in cable cars and marched up Fifth avenue and Thirty-fourth street to their armory. Not in a generation has New York witnessed such a spontaneous demonstration of sympathy and affection. Many of the spectators wept as they looked on the meagre faces and attenuated forms of the men who marched forth but a few months ago in the pride of health and manly vigor. But it was a scene not confined to New York alone; it has been repeated in every city where troops have come back from the home-camps or by transport and rail direct from Cuba. The same glad welcome has awaited them, showing how deep is the popular sympathy and how genuine the appreciation of their services to the nation.

Seldom has a sadder sight been witnessed than that presented by many of the volunteers and regulars returning from Camps Wikoff, Alger, Black and Chickamauga. Many were so weak and debilitated that it was evident that they had returned to die. The weakest were conveyed in stages and ambulances, the strongest walked; but even among the latter there were many who tottered, and would have fallen if friendly arms had not been ready to support them.

Typhoid, malarial fever and various other forms of sickness continue to prevail nearly all the home camps, notably at Camp Black and Camp Wikoff, where the death rate from these causes is still very high. Continued hot weather, with the thermometer for several days near the 100 mark, has added greatly to the sufferings of the soldiers. An official investigation of the charges of inefficiency and neglect at several of the camps is now under way, and it promises to be thorough. Secretary Alger, Gen. Miles, Gen. Shafter, Gen. Wheeler and the heads of the medical staff are all directly interested in the inquiry, which, it is hoped, may result in fixing the responsibility for much of the needless suffering our soldiers have been compelled to endure, both on the journey home on the transports and since their arrival at the camps.

Sad Scenes at Camp Wikoff.

At Camp Wikoff, a few days ago, a great hospital ship arrived from Santiago, filled with the sick and wounded. Those of the soldiers who were able to be about, hung over the railings, feasting their eyes on the shores of their native land, for which they had longed so much.

As the ship drew up to the pier, a long line of ambulances prepared to carry the sick to the hospital tents. Many who were sick when they left Cuba, were now apparently near to death. Others had improved in the sea breezes, and were able to walk down the gang-plank, but all were thin and white.

Wagon after wagon, filled with sick and wounded, sped away to the hospital tents. There were not nearly enough cots and blankets. Then it was that the Women's War Relief Association, which has been quietly and earnestly working ever since the war began, came forward with an abundant supply of blankets and soft cots, and every soldier was made as comfortable as possible. The Association had thoughtfully provided everything in advance, otherwise many of the wounded men would have fared badly.

General Wheeler has given the Woman's War Relief workers full sway in camp, and they are devoting their time and money unselfishly to the care of the sick soldiers. Milk being very scarce, the good women in camp procured carriages, and drove throughout the surrounding country, asking that the farmers give all the milk they could for the camp. Their mission was successful.

During one of her rounds in the hospitals, Miss Helen Gould met a young trooper who had lost his arm in the engagement at San Juan Hill. He was disconsolate, thinking he would never be able to work. Miss Gould quietly sympathized with him, and told him that as soon as he was able he must come to her, and she would procure him suitable employment. Her ample purse is wide open for the needs of the "boys in blue," who call her the "Angel of Camp Wikoff." Miss Gould at her own expense is providing for the nursing and care of some thirty soldiers at her Tarrytown hospital. None of these godly women seem to have fear of contagion from the fever, though there are several cases in the camp. Their gentleness and kindness have won them the undying gratitude of every regiment at Montauk Point.

The President Visits the Camp.

President McKinley and Vice President Hobart visited Camp Wikoff, partly for the purpose of honoring the heroes who fought in Cuba and partly to inspect the condition of the Camp and its sanitary arrangements. The President spent five hours among the streets of tents and in the hospitals, and did not hesitate to enter the "Dangerous Ward" in which the contagious cases are quartered. He passed into tent after tent in which lay men suffering from wounds or ill of fever, and had a cheering word for all. He chatted with the private soldiers, asked how they were progressing and whether they wished for anything, and gave them the assurance of the country's esteem of their valor and patriotism. As he entered some of the tents, the invalids tried to raise themselves to salute him, but he told all to "rest easy," and not attempt to rise, and then he shook hands with each most cordially. His visit and his kindly, thoughtful words and considerate manner to each were greatly appreciated by all. He talked with them about their wounds or their fever, and expressed genuine solicitude for each of the hundreds of poor fellows he met. It was a broiling day and the President streamed with perspiration, but he kept on his rounds until the last of the sick tents was visited and its occupants cheered by a handshake and a greeting. After the inspection, he addressed 5,000 men of 9th Massachusetts, 1st Illinois, 8th Ohio, and the 13th, 21st, 22nd, and 10th Regular Infantry. Standing bare-headed in the hot sun, he welcomed them home and congratulated them in the name of the American people on their bravery in the field and the conquests they had made. A distinguished official party accompanied the President on this occasion. He expressed approval of the camp and its facilities, and especially of the hospital service, which has lately been considerably improved.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey, the well-known Gospel singer, was among the visitors at Camp Wikoff a few days ago. He thus records his impressions for the information of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers:

I visited the hospitals and the sick soldiers in their tents. They are improving fast. The Camp is now one of the best and everything is being done for the comfort of the soldiers that can be done by warm hearts and loving hands. I hope the Government will soon see its way to send the regular soldiers to their own Posts, where they will soon get well. At our Gospel meetings in the Army and Navy Christian Commission tent last night at least thirty men rose for prayer.

At Chickamauga Park.

The camp at Chickamauga Park is rapidly being broken up, and the troops moved to other places. The Christian Association work is following the troops, and, in all cases, is receiving hearty co-operation and assistance from the officers, who thoroughly appreciate the influence of the work on their men. Christian work at the new camp at Knoxville, Tenn., is in charge of H. L. Sawyer, an Illinois Secretary, while Lexington, Ky., is under the direction of Thomas Maguire, whose experience in Army Gospel work dates from the beginning of things at Camp Thomas when he was F. W. Pearsall's assistant. Fred B. Smith, who has just finished ten weeks of evangelistic work at Camp Thomas, goes to the camp at Huntsville, Alabama. D. S. Toy, whose two months' work at Camp Thomas has been wonderfully blessed, goes to the camp at Lexington, Ky.

One of the men from Battery A, Georgia, which was ordered home to "muster out," came to Headquarters to see the Secretary who had been in charge of the tent at the Battery Brigade, and gave this testimony:

The Association tent has been the one oasis in this army life of mine. I thank God for giving it to us fellows, for I, like many others, would have fallen into the vicious habits common in the camps, if it had not been for the influence going out of that tent. I want to thank you for the books you gave me, too. They've done me a world of good.

A large number of Testaments were given away at this place.

The Christian Commission.

Strong testimonials of the great value of the Young Men's Christian Association work in the Army and Navy have poured in from many different sources, and from all parts of the country, and these enthusiastic commendations have been accompanied by generous contributions. Nearly $50,000 have been expended. The single item of stationery supplies for the camps is nearly $1,000 weekly. Now that peace has come, national camps will be maintained for several weeks, perhaps months, and these days of waiting will be trying ones for the soldiers. The hearty support which has thus far been accorded to the Gospel work in the Army and Navy leads its promoters to hope that a knowledge of the need of its continuance will be met with the necessary support. The Association stands ready with its men and machinery to carry on the work so well begun.

Many notable letters of warmest commendation have reached the leaders of the Christian Commission, showing how universal is the appreciation of their evangelistic work among the troops. President McKinley has written the following cordial letter:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, August, 26, 1898.

JOHN J. MCCOOK, ESQ.
Chairman Executive Committee, Army and Navy Christian Commission, New York City, N. Y.

MY DEAR SIR:—

I have noted with pleasure the admirable work the Army and Navy Christian Commission, organized by the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, has been accomplishing for the welfare of our soldiers and sailors.

Hoping that the good work may be continued, I am faithfully yours,

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

War Testaments in Demand.

This letter from Camp Wikoff shows the eagerness with which the War Testaments are welcomed by the soldiers there:

Editor "Christian Herald":

We are having at Camp Wikoff, Montauk, a great demand for some portion of the Bible, especially do the soldiers want a small Testament. It occurs to me they mean the vest-pocket Testaments issued by you. We have six tents at different points of the camp and Gospel meetings nightly, with inquiries at each. There each week I plan to be with them, having supervision of the army work in our State, and at each visit I find men begging for the Testaments.

If you can make a donation of 1,000, or even 500, we can make good use of them. Address Secretary Y. M. C. A., Camp Wickoff, Montauk, L. I. Please send by express, as we need them at once.

GEO. A. HALL,
State Sec'y Y. M. C. A., N. Y.

In response to this appeal, 1,000 War Testaments have been sent to the Montauk camp as a donation from the readers of this journal.

The Moody Gospel Fund.

As already announced in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the work of the Christian Commission will be continued. Contributions forwarded to us for the Gospel field work under Mr. Moody and his associates will be duly acknowledged. These contributions have been received:

Degradation of War.

WE all understood long ago that there was an awful demoralization in war. But never did the world have a more vivid illustration of this than in the scene in several places in the Philippine Islands, as well as amid the encampments on our own shores, when the news of peace came, and the tidings were received with expressions of disappointment. The guns were loaded for more bloodshed. The troops were ready for embarkation, hoping for active service, but peace having been made between Spain and the United States, the orders came for cessation of hostilities on land and sea. Instead of congratulation on the part of every man, woman and child on earth, there were many disappointed. They wanted the killing to go on. They practically said by their own words and actions they would like to see more broken bones, more bereft households and more graves. After that for which the war was proclaimed had been gloriously achieved there were some who wanted to keep on shooting Spaniards.

Alas, that the closing of this triumphant crusade, which has been a surprise to all sensible and merciful people on both sides of the ocean, should have been a disappointment to any soldier or sailor! When will steel pens take the place of sabres and ink the place of blood?

The World's Applause.

THE applause of this world is a very mean god to worship. It is a dragon that falls upon its worshipers and crushes them to death. Alas for those who, fascinated by human applause, give up the service of the Lord God and go as Laban did to hunt in Rachel's tent for the lost images!

There are many Christians being sacrificed to appetite. There was a time when they said: "I will not surrender to evil appetites." For a while they seemed to break away from all allurements by which they were surrounded, but sometimes they felt that they were living upon a severe regimen. They said, "After all, I will go back to my old bondage:" and they fell away from the house of God, and fell away from respectability, and fell away for ever.

Oh, why go down hunting for our old idols? We have found out they are insufficient for the soul. Eyes have they, but they see not; ears have they, but they hear not; and hands have they, but they handle not. There is only one God to worship, and he sits in the heavens.

Religion and Weather.

INIQUITY does not cease in summertime. She never takes a vacation. The devil never leaves town. The child of want, living up the dark alley, has not so much fresh air nor sees as many flowers as in winter-time. In cold weather the frost blossoms on her window-pane, and the snow falls in wreaths in the alley. God pity the wretchedness that pants and sweats and festers and dies on the hot pavements and in the suffocating cellars of the town.

Let us remember that our exit from this world will more probably be in the summer than in any other season, and we cannot afford to die at a time when we are least alert and worshipful. At mid-summer the average of departures is larger than in cool weather. The sunstrokes, the dysenteries, the fevers, the choleras, have affinity for July and August. On the edge of summer, Death stands whetting his scythe for a great harvest. We are most careful to have our doors locked, and our windows fastened, and our "burglar alarm" set at times when thieves are most busy, and at a season of the year when diseases are most active in their burglaries of life, we need to be ready.

Our charge, therefore, is, make no adjournment of your religion till cool weather. Whether you stay in town, or seek the farm-house, or the seashore, or the mountains, be faithful in prayer, in Bible reading and in attendance upon Christian ordinances. He who throws away two months of life wastes that for which many a dying sinner would have been willing to give all his possessions when he found that the harvest was past and the summer was ended.

Stubborn People.

THERE is not so much difference between horses and men as you might suppose. The road between mind and equine instinct is short and soon traveled. The horse is sometimes superior to his rider. If anything is good and admirable in proportion as it answers the end of its being, then the horse that bends in its traces before a Fourth avenue car is better than its blaspheming driver. He who cannot manage a horse cannot manage a man.

We know of pastors who have balky parishioners. When any important move is to take place, and all the other horses of the team are willing to draw, they lay themselves back in the harness.

First the pastor pets the obstreperous elder or deacon on the neck and tells him how much he thinks of him. This only makes him shake his mane and grind his bit. He will die first before he consents to such a movement. Next, he is pulled by the ear, with a good many sharp insinuations as to his motives for holding back. Fires of indignation are built under him for the purpose of consuming his balkiness. He is whipped with the scourge of public opinion, but this only makes him kick fiercely and lay harder in the breeching straps. He is hacked down into the ditch of scorn and contempt, but still is not willing to draw an ounce.

Oh thou foolish minister, trying in that way to manage a balky parishioner! Let him alone. Go on and leave him there. Pay less attention to the horse that balks, and give more oats to those that pull. Leave him out in the cold. Some day you will come back and find him glad to start. At your first advance he will arch his neck, paw his hoof, bend into the bit, stiffen the traces and dash on. We have the same prescription for balky horses and men: for a little while let them alone.

Value of Poetry in Education.

IT is high time that we all began to consider the value of poetry as an educational element. In our matter of fact age, many consider poetry to be waste of time; and even the intellectual and reflective only dimly realize its advantages. It is true that a kind of moral merit is imputed to the learning of hymns, but the hymns usually found in selections for children show how little their true power is apprehended.

For there seems to be an idea that poetry for children must be written especially for them; while in fact, such poetry is almost useless. When Sir Walter Scott began his "Tales of a Grandfather," he used language he thought most suitable for the comprehension of children; but he soon found out his mistake, and, with the humility of true genius, acknowledged in his preface "that children equally with adults must be addressed in words far above those of ordinary conversation." Trying to understand is our highest intellectual attitude. Why should children be deprived of a mental position which is the very element of growth?

It is hard work for us to be romantic, hard work for us to realize, as they deserve, the daily miracles of nature. Not so with children. They live in a wonder land. All beyond their limited experience is full of mystery, is vast, beautiful or terrible, as their imagination—as yet free from the dominion of the senses—is clear, keen, and effective. This is the time then in which to fill its chambers with pictures of beauty and purity. When a child is seven or eight years old it is not too young to hang there the saintly Una, whose

Angel face,
As the great Eye of heaven shined bright,
And made a sunshine in the shady place.

Nor the lovely Christabel, so richly clad and beautiful exceedingly; nor that damsel which Coleridge in strange vision saw—the Abyssinian maid playing on her dulcimer and Singing of Mount Abora.

Take any little lad of eight years old and read to him the grand old ballad of "Sir Patrick Spens," and watch how his eyes will kindle and his cheeks glow to the brave story. Or let Macaulay tell him "How Horatius Kept the Bridge." Or let him go with "The Ancient Mariner" into that silent sea, and learn with him the great lesson

He prayeth best, who loveth best;
All things, both great and small.

It may be asked if the natural bent of a child's mind is toward the wonderful, the mysterious, and the romantic, why it should be necessary to encourage it? Because, if the imaginative faculty is not exercised in a healthy way, it will exercise itself very likely in a wrong direction. So, then, it is well to educate and direct the imagination of children from a high standard; then in youth—when the senses begin to influence it—there will be far less danger of its seduction by the brilliant indecencies of Byron or the languishing emotions of Lalla Rookh.

Children appreciate poetry which they cannot comprehend. They like sonorous, majestic words. They enjoy the march and music of regular metre. An object half in mystery, fills them with thoughts and aspirations they cannot explain, but which is just as elevating and educational to them as the dim, vast suggestiveness of Milton is to us. How much of the Bible is there which fills our souls by this very element? There are passages in Job and the Prophets which no "explanations" will ever make clear to us, they are as far beyond our capacity as Milton is beyond a child's. Who can explain the magnificent prayer of Habakkuk? Yet who when reading it is not conscious of a sensible growth and elevation of soul that is far beyond his capacity to analyze or express?

Not the least important aspect of this subject, is the power it might be made in imparting religious instruction. The church is rich in glorious hymns. They are her creed universal, her confession of faith—a confession no creed and no Christian disputes over. Every child ought to lay in a good stock of hymns. It is not necessary that they comprehend them; their interpretation will come. When the father is no longer there to advise, when the mother is no longer there to comfort, there will be many days and many crucial hours when the hymns learned at their knees will soothe their heart's great bitterness, or enter into and sanctify its joy. Here are three verses a dear little lad learned when he was five years old, and he went over the river saying them:

I saw the stars of the morning wait
On their lofty towers, to watch the land;
As a little child stole up to the gate,
And knocked with a tiny, trembling hand.

"I am only a little child, dear Lord!
And my feet are stained already with sin;
But they said, you had sent the children word
To come to the gate and enter in."

The man at the gate looked up and smiled,
A heavenly smile and fair to see;
And he opened, and bent to the pleading child
"I am willing, with all my heart!" said he.

Our Peace Commissioners

DETAILS of the treaty of peace with Spain were, it will be remembered, left for final settlement to a commission consisting of ten members, five of whom to be appointed by the President of the United States and five by the Queen of Spain. According to the terms agreed upon by M. Cambon, the French Ambassador to Washington, representing Spain, and Secretary Day, the Commission was to meet in Paris to discuss the situation produced by the war, and to decide on the articles of a treaty between the two powers. President McKinley has chosen the five men whose portraits appear on this page to represent our Government. Four of the five accepted the appointment at once, but Justice White, of the Supreme Court, asked to be excused on the ground that his absence from Washington would embarrass his colleagues on the bench, who are already overworked, owing to the illness of one or two justices. The President, however, is very anxious that Justice White should serve on the Commission, and has urged him to reconsider his decision. It is expected that Mr. White will yield, and that the Commission, as originally chosen, will go to Paris. If, however, Justice White declines, another member will have to be chosen in his stead. Secretary Day is the most influential member of the Commission. His conduct of the negotiations previous to, and during, the war with Spain, and his intimate relations with the President render him specially fitted for the duties which will devolve upon him, and enable him to speak authoritatively for the President and the Cabinet. Senator Cushman K. Davis is also a useful member of the Commission. He is chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and in that office has been familiar with the situation from the beginning of the trouble. He is sixty years of age and has represented Minnesota in the Senate for ten years past. Senator William P. Frye is sixty-six years old. He has given close attention, during the seventeen years he has been in the Senate as representative of Maine, to foreign affairs, and has carried through several laws affecting our relations with foreign countries. Justice Edward D. White is a Southerner, and served in the Confederate army during the Civil War. He was, for a short time, Senator from Louisiana, and left that post only to become Justice of the Supreme Court. As a Roman Catholic, it is expected that he will have cordial relations with the Spanish Commissioners whose religious prejudices will probably have some influence in the negotiations. He is fifty-five years old. Mr. Whitelaw Reid, the fifth member, is best known as the editor the New York Tribune. He served as Minister to France under President Harrison's administration. He is sixty-one years old and a native of Ohio. The Commissioners have a difficult and delicate duty to perform, for although Spain must in the end accept our terms, it is little likely that she will do so without a hard struggle, in which the firmness and courtesy of our Commissioners will be severely tried. The prayers of all Christians should go with them on their mission, that wisdom may be given them, so that the result of their labors may be an honorable and enduring peace. Even those Christians who have deplored the war can join in these prayers and can unite in hoping that the Commissioners may enjoy to the full the beatitude pronounced by Christ on men engaged in such efforts.

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God (Matt. 5: 9).

A Surgeon's Courage.

In a discussion on varieties of courage now being conducted in a daily journal, the following incident is related as the specimen of a courage higher than that of the soldier: During the recent campaign on the Indian frontier, the British troops finding themselves in an ambuscade ran to cover. One of the men who were left on the ground was a young lieutenant who was badly wounded in the shoulder. No one went to bring him in, for the crossfire was intense and continuous over the place where the young officer lay. The attention of an army surgeon was called to the young man, and he immediately stepped forward regardless of the rain of bullets and knelt beside the sufferer. No ligature was at hand, but the surgeon found the severed artery and held it between his finger and thumb. For more than an hour he kept his position while bullets whizzed passed them. At last darkness fell and then assistance came. The lieutenant was carried to camp, the doctor walking by his side still holding the severed artery and preventing his bleeding to death. It was a noble deed showing that rare kind of courage which, without the rush and excitement which animates a soldier charging on the foe, coolly puts life in peril in the discharge of duty. Besides this, the surgeon's object was like that of Him who said:

The Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives but to save them (Luke 9: 56).

In Search of a Dinner.

Four privates of the Yale Light Battery, all undergraduates of Yale College, left Camp Haven a few days ago on a morning's excursion into the country. Their object was to find a farm-house where they could get a dinner which would be more palatable than the pork, beans and black coffee which formed the sole fare of the Camp. Thinking that two were more likely to receive an invitation than four, they separated into two parties and took different roads. One party selected a farm that was remarkable for its neatness. All the outbuildings were painted, and the fences in good order. The two men went to the door and knocked, but it was not opened. An upper window was raised and a sharp voice asked what they wanted. They replied that they wanted a dinner. The response was a blunt refusal, but on their pressing their request, they were told to wait. Presently a lower window was raised, and two slices of dry bread were thrust out. They passed in a quarter in payment in the hope that when they showed they had money, they would be invited to join the family at dinner. The money was accepted, but there was no invitation. They were merely told the location of the well in case they wanted a drink of water. An hour or two later they were at the place where they had arranged to meet their two companions. When the latter appeared they had a different story to tell. They had applied at a farm-house, which bore signs of poverty and had anything but a hospitable appearance. But no sooner did the farmer see their brass buttons than he begged them to come in and called to his wife to make the dinner large enough to satisfy two hungry visitors. He explained that he had been a soldier himself and had served through the civil war. The dinner was excellent, and the farmer pressed his guests to eat heartily. He refused to receive a cent in payment, and when they came away he shook hands cordially with them and told them he had enjoyed their visit. The difference in the two receptions was doubtless due to the fact that the hospitable farmer remembered being in like case himself during his own military experience. Nothing so tends to produce sympathy with other sufferers. The Bible says that even Christ was fitted for his work by passing through suffering.

In that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted (Heb. 2: 18).

The Fall of the Khalifa.

News of the brilliant victory in the Soudan on Sept. 2, has been received with gratification all over the world. Gen. Kitchener has emancipated the people of that region at last from the tyranny they have endured for more than twenty years. The Khalifa, who succeeded the Mahdi, is now flying from his victorious enemy a broken, powerless man. The capture of Omdurman, his capital, is a death-blow to his prestige and power, and no tribe will fear him any more. The city lies on the Nile opposite Khartoum, which was dismantled to build Omdurman. It was in Khartoum that the brave Gen. Gordon perished under the spears of the Mahdi's savage warriors, and it was there that his head was hung on a tree for them to gloat over. He is avenged at last, and the people whom he loved and for whose deliverance he laid down his life are delivered. It has been a long and costly work. The expedition, composed of English and Egyptian troops proceeding southward from Egypt, has slowly but surely penetrated the Soudan, finding everywhere in burned villages and desolated districts evidence of the cruelty of the Khalifa's rule. The deliverers drove him before them until he turned at bay before Omdurman, and there in one desperate battle his power has been annihilated, and his surviving followers have laid down their arms. The Soudan will once more have an orderly government, and its people no longer live in terror of their savage and ruthless tyrant. We rejoice that one oppressor the less is ruling in the world, and the time is nearer when the last of them must disappear.

Iniquity shall have an end saith the Lord. . . . I will overturn, overturn, and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him (Ezek. 21: 25–27).

Eleven Years a Captive.

One of the most gratifying incidents in connection with the capture of Omdurman by Gen. Kitchener's expedition on Sept. 2, was the rescue of Dr. Charles Neufeld, the German physician, who has been a prisoner in that city since the year 1887. Slatin Pasha, who escaped out of the Khalifa's hands in 1895, told the story of the misery Dr. Neufeld was enduring, and there was general anxiety as to his fate. It was feared that he would perish, as Gen. Gordon did, before the expedition could reach the place of his imprisonment, and indeed that the approach of the expedition might precipitate his death. Happily, however, he was alive, and the Anglo-Egyptian forces had the pleasure of setting him at liberty. His imprisonment has been a most cruel one. He went with a small company into the Soudan in April, 1887. Ostensibly his object was trade, but it was generally believed that he really went to rescue Slatin Pasha out of the Mahdi's hands. Through the treachery of an Arab, he was taken prisoner, and was treated with great cruelty. The Mahdi at first ordered him to be hanged and the execution was in progress and the rope had already been put around his neck, when the Mahdi relented and ordered him to be imprisoned. He was loaded with irons and kept a close prisoner for four years. At the end of that time he was sent to the saltpetre works and set to the work of making gunpowder. Even then, heavy iron fetters were put around his ankles to prevent his escape. After the death of the Mahdi, the Khalifa, who succeeded him, employed Dr. Neufeld in various mechanical operations, but always disliked and distrusted him. It was peculiarly cruel to compel Dr. Neufeld to make gunpowder, which as he well knew, would be used against his own friends. Those who become captives of the enemy of souls are frequently used in the same way to do mischief to people whom they love. Pity it is that they do not, like Dr. Neufeld, gladly avail themselves of the deliverance which he did not get for eleven years, but is always near to those who desire it.

That they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will (II. Timothy 2: 26).

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

The Old World's Poor.

Parisian Charities — Protestant Mission Work in Belleville — Its Influence on French Homes.

OUR picture, "The Unfortunates," which is the reproduction of a famous painting by a great French artist, presents a scene of poverty and suffering common to many cities of the Old World, besides Paris. The poor gather in the corridors, halls and vestibules of certain churches, missions, and public buildings where charity is dispensed, and wait for alms. Usually their cases are investigated and their needs met as far as practicable. The larger and more densely populated the city, the greater seems to be the extremes which meet in it: the rich, populous, merry Paris has its East Side of profounder misery than that of our young metropolis on Manhattan Island.

Christ said, "The poor ye have always with you," and while it is sad to think that in every country and every clime, poverty, hunger and nakedness are found, it is blessed to know that the Christ spirit is found also—found in the patience of the poor who suffer, in the love of the rich who give the relief, in the devotion of the Christian missionary who carries the Gospel to both, and causes both to feel that "the rich and the poor meet together, the Lord is Maker of them all." Since Christ came into the world, Christ's spirit has been changing the world; and even municipalities (those, too, not noted for confessing him) have hearts of mercy and apply unconsciously his precepts. The system of public charity, as conducted in Paris under direction of the Prefect of the Seine, is very far-reaching, and is supplemented by endless private beneficences. Even the pawn-broking trade is made to contribute to relief work, for all proceeds over expenses in the famous Mont de Piete, the national pawn-broking establishment of Paris, go to the public charity funds. For the benefit of the working-classes, and for the encouragement of thrift, there is also a national banking system by which the smallest deposits are accepted and interest paid on them. Day nurseries, training schools, hospitals, and all forms of public and private charities are developed, multiplied and encouraged. In this connection many readers may remember the full accounts given in this paper in 1890 and 1893, of the evangelical work of Rev. R. W. McAll, in Belleville, the great northeastern slum of Paris. This work begun in 1870-71, after communism in demoralizing the imperial rule, had swept away religion also, produced such marked effect on the morals of the anarchistic neighborhoods in which it operated, that free-thinking Paris enrolled the Protestant pastor's name in the Legion of Honor, bestowing upon him medals never before conferred for purely religious service, because this service was recognized as civil benefit to France. Into homes where the Bible and Gospel songs had come, peace and order had entered also. And thus, into any home however ignorant and humble, however unchristian and rich, with the Spirit of Christ enter love and gentleness to convince but to bless.

Arabs and Fountains.

When a wealthy American would found a hospital, or church, or library, or endow a charitable institution, an Arab digs a well or constructs a fountain. He can think of no other way to transmit a benefit to future generations. Life in the desert has set water above all blessings. We remember that the patriarchs dug wells in token of their gratitude to God and as an act of service to their fellowmen—then fellow-men of whom prophets and psalmist often thought as a traveler in the desert of life. Isaiah promises that God will "give waters in the wilderness and rivers in the desert," and again, "the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose . . . in the wilderness shall waters break out and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water; in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes."

A Passenger Service for Babies.

Sometimes one is tempted to say that the New York street urchin is a fortunate boy. He learns how to endure privation and hardship, often how to make a living for his family, and he is a good business man in embryo. The new East Side Passenger Company is evidence of his enterprise. The head of the concern is twelve years old. Several "newsies" put their pennies together, hired a dilapidated baby-carriage, and began taking babies to ride, a penny an hour each. The company enjoys the full confidence of the Duane, Forsyth and Rivington street community, as they take excellent care of the babies. "We's makin' money outer dis line uv baby 'buses," said an officer, "an' we's chasin' de kids aroun' all day. We begins early in de mornin' when de loidies don't want to bodder wid 'em, an' we quits late at night. Us fellers have got four baby buggies now, an' we shoots 'em roun' everywhere its safe fur kids ter go. De loidies is han'in' out kids to us, and we's drummin' up trade all de time we's not runnin' de busses. Nex' week we's goin' to buy two mo' uv 'em, an' we'll have a dozen or mo' in a munt."

WAITING FOR ALMS.

Water Palaces.

One of the most novel and effective ways of keeping cool in this hot weather is that of the "sinking rooms" of the Orient. Gilded glass-walled palaces float on the bosom of Lake Niris, one of Persia's loveliest lakes, and when the heat is beyond endurance, the owners enter and the palaces are sunk by weights into the transparent depths of the lake. Air is supplied by tubes from above, and the Persian millionaire, in luxurious surroundings, sips his sherbet, and knows nothing of the heated world above him. The most gorgeous of these palaces is that of the Prince of Agra which is kept ready for use in one of the reaches of the Jumna. The curtains are of the finest silks, the golden chairs are jeweled, and all the furnishings are superb. Yet we may doubt if prince or millionaire, even "in enchanted palaces at the bottom of fairy lakes," can shut out from his memory the suffering of unfavored ones.

"Dont's."

The extent of the training in many homes, writes M. B. Mosher, consists in a series of time-honored "dont's;" "don't make a noise," "don't put your finger in your nose," "don't put your hands in your pockets." The child is a puppet which is not to move unless the string is pulled. He has hands which are not to touch anything, eyes which may see but must desire nothing, feet that may not go, and a silent tongue. Such children exist for their guardian's sake, and not for their own. Right education is disinterested and brings up the child for its own sake, and for the sake of its race and country. It should be individual and social.

A Woman's Fire Brigade.

Nasso, a town in Sweden, is said to have a woman's fire brigade. The "firemen" of that town—which is only a little village—are all women. One hundred and fifty make up the fire department, and one of their duties consists in keeping the tubs filled with water. They are said to be fine workers, and to handle a fire with little confusion.

Gardening for Children.

By all means let your child keep a garden if you have a bit of ground which he can dig and plant and busy himself over. It will be good for him, body and soul; it will teach him more about nature's wonderful ways than school can ever teach him. Sprouting seeds and bursting buds and forming fruit are perpetual miracles. While so much is being said about nature studies in the schools, attempt a little nature teaching at home by giving your child a bit of ground or a few house-plants to potter about in. Let him start now. Some things can be done in the fall.

Aunt About Summer Dress in Hotels or at Watering-places—Famous Patchwork Quilts—Careful Housekeepers—Our Wounded Heroes Coming Home.

I HAVE been asked to say something about the appropriate dress for a hotel where one is staying temporarily. Whether one is living in a hotel for weeks or months as her home, or simply is a guest in one for a few days makes no difference in regard to the style of dress in the dining-room, parlors, and other public places of the house. She must not wear any sort of wrapper, dressing sacque or tea gown in the public rooms of a hotel; these are reserved for the privacy of one's own room. A neat traveling dress is always in order in the dining room, and it is quite customary to wear one's hat at the breakfast table or to any meal if one is going out directly after, although it is usually in better taste not to wear a hat at the dinner table. A quiet but elegant street gown may be worn at dinner or supper, but it should be a costume fit for the street or for church, and not the negligee which is allowable in one's own home where one sees only one's family. There has been a change with regard to the elaborateness of dressing in hotels. In my own early days at such places as Saratoga or Long Branch or other watering places, one observed a great deal of display in the toilettes of women and also very lavish use of jewelry. This is not usual now, unless there is some function going on in the hotel which renders a very formal and elegant toilette appropriate. I would say friends who consult me about these matters that it is generally safe to consult common sense. A lady's own instinct of fitness is ordinarily a good guide. Also as to the manners one observes in meeting strangers and going about away from home, it may be said that the foundation of all politeness is the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you." By the constant exercise of patience and gentleness at home: by never failing in courtesy to those whom we meet in daily life, we shall best prepare ourselves for making a good impression and receiving happiness when we leave our own abodes.

One of my friends writes in a very interesting way about her experience in washing some very highly prized patchwork quilts. There were family reasons for regarding these quilts as a special care. They had been a gift from her husband's mother and were very beautiful. For years," says my friend, "I kept these quilts for company as extras when the weather was cold and changeable. Then came a time when they must be washed, and I spent many of my waking hours at night, and also gave much thought in the daytime to how I could wash those quilts and not have them fade. They were made of pieces of all kinds of good calico and print, and I thought of things that would take out dirt and be most likely to retain the color. Finally I decided to try the following plan, which proved a greater success than I had dared hope: I took one-fourth bar of good soap, three tablespoonfuls of ammonia, two tablespoonfuls of kerosene, and one tablespoonful of borax, and dissolved all in one quart of water. This I poured into a tub of water, enough to cover two or three quilts, a little warmer than the hand could comfortably bear. The quilts were put into this suds and allowed to remain there a half hour. I then washed them carefully around the edges and folded them in such a way that they would be only washed, passing them through another warm water without adding soap, ammonia or borax. I rinsed them in two other tubs of waters, to which were added a few tablespoonfuls of salt, and hung them in the shade to dry. Such quilts should not be wrung, as it breaks the stitches and injures the quilts. I think my friends who try this plan will be surprised to find how quickly and easily such a task will be accomplished. My quilts came out from this process as good as new; one of them would never have been suspected of having been washed at all, and the others were not in the least faded."

I REMEMBER when a very young housekeeper having an elderly friend visit me, and I still recall my thrill of pride when she looked out in my yard and saw the lines filled with blankets which had been washed and were drying.

She said: "I see, M., that you are a careful housekeeper. One of the marks of good housekeeping is care with regard to bed coverings." The fact is, as we all know, that good housekeeping is a very intricate thing. It means looking carefully after everything one possesses, making the most of what one has, and day by day utilizing one's time and thought. We must be careful, however, to remember that there is a spiritual housekeeping which we cannot neglect. When we are told in the Bible that our bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost, it surely means that we are to live in those temples as those who would be ready at any time to welcome the King. We need prayer and meditation and Bible reading; we need to be up and doing, because this is a world in which are many aching hearts to be comforted and many lonely homes to be cheered. If the heart is right with God, the daily work will be easy.

SINCE I last wrote to you the soldiers have been coming home from the war and peace has been proclaimed; but at this writing the army is not yet disbanded. Our poor men are the shadows of themselves—weary, and haggard, and tattered, and fainting—they come home from the terrible campaign in the relentless heat, some of them to wear for life the scars of the conflict. It is difficult to understand why they have been subjected to what seems to us needless suffering in the crowded transports and lack of even common comforts on their way. One sees more clearly than ever that the great need in this world, so far as any large movements are concerned, is ability in administration. I do not know how you feel, but I am very tired of red tape. I think that a great deal of effort for the helping of others is fruitless in this world just because a certain routine must be gone through before anything can be done. God forbid that we should ever have another war, but should one come perhaps we will have learned from the experiences of this one how to better care for sick and hungry and thirsty men: how to prevent illness; how to care adequately and swiftly for the wounded. When the poor fellows arrived at Montauk Point the other day, women who saw them as they staggered along faint and white and mere spectres of themselves, burst into tears. By the time you read this the sea-breezes and the good food and rest will have changed all this, and to some of you the dear "boys in blue" will have come home none the worse for the sufferings they have undergone. Meanwhile let us pray for our country that in her new responsibilities she may have God's help, that in assuming new duties and reaching out to the ends of the earth she may be true to her great mission of evangelizing and uplifting mankind.

E. K. S.—The shock of which you tell me in your letter is probably responsible for the distress which you are suffering from constant fear. Still, it will not do for you to go through life a slave to such terrors as now overmaster you. Say to yourself each day and each night, "I am God's child. My Father is able to take care of me: his kind love is over me all the time and he will deliver me from all harm." Above all things, cease to feel timid in the dark. The darkness is as comforting as the daylight to one who places entire trust in the Heavenly Father. It is not well for you to go out by yourself after dark, especially if your home is, as I infer, in a rather lonely and secluded locality. Let your sister or mother or some friend always accompany you. Your brother, big or little, is a good protector. I do not myself believe in having young girls out without protectors after nightfall, although notwithstanding a contrary opinion, they are much safer if obliged to go on errands or on business at that time of the day, in a great city which is well lighted, where plenty of people are about and policemen are within call, than they are in quiet country places and villages. Your condition at present seems to me a nervous one to which your physician can to some extent minister; but the true relief from such bondage you will find in prayerful trust and clinging to the Heavenly Father and his kind and merciful care. Here is a text for you, "I will trust and not be afraid, for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and song."

MORAL SUNSHINE.*

"THE world would look better and brighter," said Sir John Lubbock, "if people were taught the duty of being happy, as well as the happiness of doing our duty. To be happy ourselves is a most effectual contribution to the happiness of others."

"I don't know what to do," cries the transformed Scrooge, laughing and crying in the same breath: "I am as light as a feather, I am as happy as an angel, I am as merry as a schoolboy, I am as giddy as a drunken man. A merry Christmas to everybody! A happy New Year to all the world! Halloa, there! Whoop! Halloa!"

David Coombe, in his old English cobbler's shop, said dolefully: "It is the darkest hole that ever I saw: never a bit of sun comes in this place, summer or winter." A vision came to the dozing cobbler, in angel form, saying: "I will tell you how to set a trap for a sunbeam. It must be bright and pure, baited with Energy, Perseverance, Industry, Charity, Faith, Hope and Content. Do this David Coombe, and you will never say again that no sunbeam gilds your dwelling or gladdens your declining days." The first step David took was to clean the dust and dirt of years from the window-panes of his cobbler's shop. Then the sunbeams came in, a whole family of them; and they came to stay.

Have you ever read the story of Billy Bray? He was a most remarkable and original character. The dominating characteristics of his religion was its joyousness. Some people did not like his exuberance of spirit; and they told him that, if he did not cease to praise God so much in the meetings, they would shut him up in a barrel. "Then," said Billy, "I'll praise the Lord through the bunghole."

"The joy of the Lord is your strength," said Nehemiah to the throngs of Israel.

Of Lord Holland's sunshiny face, Rogers said, "He always comes to breakfast like a man upon whom some sudden good fortune has fallen."

"Many years ago," says Oliver Wendell Holmes, "in walking among the graves at Mount Auburn, I came upon a plain, upright marble slab, which bore an epitaph of only four words, but to my mind they meant more than any of the labored inscriptions on the surrounding monuments —'She was so pleasant.' That was all, and it was enough. That one note revealed the music of a life of which I knew and asked nothing more. She was

> A happy soul that all the way
> To heaven had made a summer day."

Miss Cheerful cannot be called pretty. Seeing her for the first time, one cannot help thinking, even if he does not say it, "What a plain face!" Yet her friends never think of it. The juniors at Sunday School, who love her as their superintendent, never think of it. Farthest of all is the thought from those in the home that is wonderfully brightened by her presence.

In a group picture of a family, Miss Cheerful's face is seen among the rest. Did I say she is plain? In this picture she fairly outshines them all. Why? Just because she is herself. She is Miss Cheerful.

The little girl bade "Good morning" to the sun for waking her up, and her birdie; then she asked her mother's permission and softly, reverently, gladly bade "Good morning" to God—and why should she not?

There is ever sunshine somewhere; and the brave man will go his way rejoicing, content to look forward if under a cloud, not hating one jot of heart or hope if for a moment cast down, honoring his occupation, whatever it may be; rendering even rags respectable by the way he wears them; and not only being happy himself, but causing the happiness of others.

Anxiety mars one's work. No one can do the best work when fevered by worry. One may rush and always be in great haste, and he may talk about being busy, fuming and sweating as if he were doing ten men's duties; and yet some quiet person alongside, who is moving leisurely and without anxious haste, is probably accomplishing twice as much, and doing it better. Fluster unfits one for good work.

"Give us, therefore, oh give us," let us cry with Carlyle, "the man who sings at his work! He will do more in the same time—he will do it better—he will persevere longer. One is scarcely sensible of fatigue whilst he marches to music. The very stars are said to make harmony as they revolve in their spheres. Wondrous is the strength of cheerfulness, altogether past calculation its powers of endurance. Efforts, to be permanently useful, must be uniformly joyous—a spirit all sunshine, graceful from very gladness, beautiful because bright."

"There is no sunshine for those who persist in keeping their shutters barred," says Dr. Cuyler. "Joy is not gained by asking for it, but only by acting for it; we have got to walk with Christ if we want to walk in the sunshine. There is a lamentable lot of moping and grumbling and sour-spirited Christians who disgrace the name they bear. If one of this sorry regiment should ask a shrewd man of the world to embrace Christianity, he might well reply: 'No, I thank you; I have troubles enough now without being troubled with such peevish and doleful religion as yours seems to be.' What a letter of recommendation some Christians carry in their cheerful countenances."

"There was a little potted rose-bush in a sick room which I visited," said Rev. J. R. Miller. "It stood in the window. One day I noticed that the one rose on the bush was looking toward the light. I referred to it; and the sick woman said that her daughter had turned the rose round several times toward the darkness of the room, but that each time the little flower had twisted itself back, until again its face was towards the light. It would not look into the darkness. The rose taught me a lesson never to allow myself to look toward any gloom, but instantly to turn from it. We should train ourselves to turn from all shadows and discouragements. There is always a bright side and we should find it. Discouragement is full of danger. It weakens and hurts the life."

When asked what the weather would be on the morrow, the Shepherd of Salisbury Plain replied that it would be just what he preferred; and on further inquiry as to how that could be, answered, "Because it will be such weather as shall please God, and whatever pleases him always pleases me." Enjoyment of life is independent of the thermometer, if we determine it shall be. Sunshine within more than compensates for its absence without.

*From The Secret of Achievement, a book designed to teach that the highest achievement is that which results in noble manhood and womanhood; that there is something greater than wealth, grander than fame that character is the only success. By Orison Swett Marden, author of "Pushing to the Front." Handsomely illustrated with half tone portraits, and bound in cloth. Thomas Y. Crowell and Company of Boston and New York, Publishers.

REJOICE IN THE LORD ALWAYS.

Phil. 4:4.

BE thankful and glad in the Lord all his children;
Wherever your life in the earth may be passed,
Rejoice in Jehovah, praise greatly his kingdom;
Exultant before him your victories cast,
Or if victory elude you, defeat be the answer
To effort and prayers in integrity wrought,
God seeth not as man, and apparent disaster
To ultimate good by his hand may be brought.

If beauty and wealth be your heritage earthly,
Lift in rapture your hearts to the Giver divine;
Proclaim his munificence, tell of his bounty,
Acknowledge his oversight wholly benign;
But if yours be adversity dire and unyielding,
If sickness and sorrow throw o'er you their pall,
God's grace is sufficient, trust him and be loyal,
His promise your surety, no harm can befall.

Whatever inheritance be your allotment,
However unlike what your wisdom had planned,
Though the heart ache to bursting and though the flesh quiver,
Rejoice in the Lord, still unmovable stand.

WE SHALL BE IMMORTAL.

OFT we tire of service here,
Oft the flesh is weary;
Oft we shed the burning tear,
Oft the way is dreary.
But the cares of life will cease
When we cross the portal.
We shall find a sweet release—
We shall be immortal.

Oft we grieve o'er loved ones flown,
Oft we weep in sorrow;
Longing just to clasp our own
On some bright to-morrow.
But no shadow will annoy
When we cross the portal.
Sorrow will be turned to joy—
We shall be immortal.

Do we love the Saviour more?
Are we onward pressing?
Do we count our mercies o'er?
Do we share our blessing?
Then the darkness will be light
When we cross the portal.
We shall walk with him in white—
We shall be immortal.

Are we watching, waiting here,
Lamps all trimmed and burning?
For a time that's drawing near,
For our Lord's returning?
Some of us may stand to-night
Just outside the portal.
And before the morning light
Find ourselves immortal.

THE BARREN FIG-TREE.

Parable of Solemn Import to Useless People. Luke 13: 6-9.

One of the most solemn passages in the whole Bible, is this parable of the fig-tree. We seem to be lifted, as we read it, above the world and to see what is taking place among men from a higher point. Here is a fig-tree that is planted for a definite purpose—that is to bear figs. It may be an ornament to the landscape, and it may give shade on a sunny day, but its specific purpose is to bear figs. If it does not do that, it is a failure. There was no possibility of mistaking the Master's meaning. If a man did not fulfil the purpose for which God placed him here, he was a failure. He might attain wealth or power, or culture, but if he did not fulfil the purpose of his being he was a failure. What that purpose was Christ Himself declaring by his voice and manifesting by his life. Righteousness, helpfulness, gentleness, love—all that list of graces which the Apostle recounts in Galatians 5: 22, 23—the human life ought to bear. If it does not bear these it fails of its purpose. He represents God as looking for the man to see if his life bears these fruits, and finding that it does not, but finding another kind of fruit which is miserable and poisonous, ordering it to be cut down. He complains that it is not only useless, but is a nuisance. It cumbers the ground. It takes up room which might be filled by better trees. That is a solemn consideration. The useless man is filling a place which might be filled with profit to God. That is a strong reason for removal. The order therefore goes forth. But a plea is raised for a brief extension of probation. Perhaps under new conditions it may bear fruit. Then disappointment comes to the unfruitful man. He loses his property, or he loses his children, or he is prostrated by sickness. What effect will it have? Will he bear fruit afterwards? Or does he turn to the Lord for comfort and go on in the same way? If he is not a better man for the discipline, if he does not bear fruit even then there is an end of pleading. "Then you shall cut it down." How many people there may be now undergoing just this test!

Havana, a Typical Spanish Town.

Havana is described as a perfect specimen of a walled town, with portcullis, moat, gates and battlements. Built over 250 years ago, it is still in good condition and repair. The streets are picturesque, and represent a study in work and cost in themselves. Inside the walls, the city is laid off in regular squares, with parallel streets running in the direction of the length of the island and seven at right angles. The houses are closely and compactly built of brick, usually of two stories, stuccoed both outside and painted in a variety of colors. The upper floors are occupied by the more respectable people, while the ground floors are given up to negroes and the poorer classes, who herd together in the most appalling fashion. The population within the walls is estimated at 20,000. There is no running water in the town. The entire population depends on rain water caught on the flat roofs of the buildings and conducted to the cistern, which occupies the greater part of the courtyard. There is no sewerage, except for surface water and sinks, while vaults are in every house and occupy whatever remaining space there may be in the patios not taken up by the cisterns. The streets are wider than in the older part of Havana and will admit two carriages abreast. The sidewalks are narrow, and in places will accommodate only one person. The trade wind blows strong and fresh, and through the harbor runs a stream of sea water at a speed of not less than three miles an hour. With these conditions no contagious diseases, if properly taken care of, could exist.

The Canteen in the Army.

A petition to President McKinley has been drawn up and signed by a large number of influential friends of temperance, asking him to close the army canteen. The petition states that President McKinley, as the Commander-in-Chief of the American armies, must recognize the great danger which threatens the soldier from alcoholic beverages, which are now sold under army auspices. It urges the President to revoke that part of general Order No. 46, which refers to the canteen and to command that hereafter no beverages containing alcohol shall be sold or dispensed to any soldier or sailor of the United States, while in service or on duty. Among the more prominent signers of the petition are: Bishop Samuel Fallows, Arthur L. Mills, John V. Farrell, Wm. R. Harper, Rev. H. P. Judson, Rev. Josiah Strong, and Hon. John Wanamaker. The petition is being numerously signed and when complete will be forwarded to Washington.

The soap commonly used in the kitchen is made of materials that you would not want to come into contact with your dishes and cooking utensils.

If you are particular in this respect you will find comfort in the use of Ivory Soap. It is made of sweet, clean, vegetable oils.

WARNING.—There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

LITTLE has been said or written about the mestizos or half-breed ladies of Manila. They combine the superstition of the negro with the grace and languor of the creole, and the features of either the Chinese or Japanese. Their favorite costume is a long, loose robe of bright-hued silk, and their long, flowing hair forms their mantilla.

This illustration is reproduced from a photograph taken in Manila in 1892. It was intended to form part of the series of National Costume cards prepared by The Singer Manufacturing Co., for distribution at the Chicago Exposition, but was not secured in time. It now has a peculiar interest to the women of America because of recent events connecting the U. S. with the Philippine Islands, where Singer Sewing Machines are, as in every other part of the world, one of the foremost factors of civilization.

WHAT IS SUCCESS?

Different Degrees of Life Demanding Different means of Development.
Matt. 10 : 21-27.

Finding and losing life are terms which even yet are not fully understood and never will be appreciated in all their significance, until on the other side the grave, we perceive what life really is. The common idea of physical existence which goes by the name of life, will be seen then to be but a very small part of what is included in the term. Even now we discriminate. The hog has life and has its own ideas of the things that go to make its life enjoyable. A dog and a horse have life and we know how to make their lives as happy as it is possible for them to be. There are some men who seem to require but little more. If they can have a comfortable home and plenty to eat and drink their highest desires would be satisfied. But teach the man to read and write, show him beautiful pictures and statues, tell him some of the wonders of the world he lives in, and of the wonders of the worlds that on a clear winter's night shine above him, and he begins to learn that there is more in life than he knew before. So we see that the difference between the meaning of the word life, to a cultivated, educated man and to an ignorant savage is greater than the difference between the latter and an animal. As the naturalist traces the varied degrees of life from the jelley-fish up to the bird and the animal to man, so in man himself there are infinite gradations from the man whose life is like that of the animal up to the scientist and statesman. At every stage we see life becoming greater and fuller. Now what is there beyond? What is there above the life of the greatest man on earth? Is it possible that these gradations still go on upward? Christ gave hints of this possibility. He intimated that the soul might develop as the intellect develops and that on that side there was room for infinite expansion. This was what he called life. There were men about him, whom he welcomed and loved, who were unlearned and uncultivated. It is easy to read between the lines and to see that the Apostles themselves were far from being the most cultivated men of their time. Neither riches, nor fame, nor even intellect was sufficient in Christ's view to realize his ideal of the highest type of manhood. His supreme test was that of character. A selfish man, one who cared nothing for others, one incapable of self-sacrifice, one who loved no one so well as himself, or whose love did not extend beyond his own family, belonged in his esteem to the lowest type of man though he might hold high office or be a rich man or have all the learning of the time. To be kind even to a stranger, or an enemy, to be gentle, merciful, patient, to be willing to sacrifice present interest or gain that someone else might be benefited, to leave the scrambling for the best places at feasts to other people, to bear wrong, rather than to do wrong — these were the qualities Christ looked for in men. He bore patiently with ignorance and with stupidity, but his indignation was kindled by injustice, selfishness and cruelty. Thus the highest success was the development of character. The good man was better than the rich or the learned, because that life would go on extending and expanding throughout eternity. The man who gave up all that men esteem in life—who lost his life as men say—that he might do good to others, would find it again in greater fulness in the world to come.

Chautauqua Reading
COURSE FOR 98-9.

When you remember that Chautauqua has guided in a comprehensive plan of home reading, more than half a million people in every State in the Union, offers a great variety of courses, conducts the largest and most complete summer school in the world, and that nearly sixty Chautauqua summer assemblies are held every summer in 31 different States, reaching more than five hundred thousand people, you get some idea of its strength, its scope and its influence.

EUROPE IN THE XXth CENTURY

is the unsolved riddle of the present, but Europe in the 19th century foreshadows it. No subject is of deeper interest at the present time. The Chautauqua Course for 98-9 presents the whole question in clear and delightful fashion.

A FATHER'S RANSOM.

PINKS, three for a nickel! Roses, four for a quarter!" was heard near the Astor House, New York.

The vender was a girl, eight ne years old. She had once been aitful, and might be so again; but she had a pale, care-drawn face, and a as of one poorly fed. There were tions on her cheek that she had cut or struck; one thought it likely ther home was one of quarrels, prob- of intemperance. Still, her sweet piped up a little ditty she had com- and which pleased her:

"ere are some 'Jacques,'" exclaimed to her mate, "and we might get them or our party to-night. They will and we can patronize this little miss."

s, they are just the thing; nothing acqueminots to wear in the belt. e sure to keep the stems long. Do we many of these roses, little girl?"

But she looked wearily at the unch of pinks, and wondered if uld ever sell them before they wither. An hour passed without r sale; in sheer desperation, she d to go into the shops to dispose pinks. She passed a saloon, one n the doorway bought three and ll her a nickel, and, called out to rtender that a few flowers would e a more attractive counter. The ler seemed to think so, and bought n, giving the pale-faced child a and two nickels. One of these had a hole in it, as if pierced with h.

mother ran to the felled child. u'll encourage the brat in stealing g!" shouted the man to his wife.

It needed only the glance of one in her senses to see what an irreparable injury that brutal blow had inflicted. The eye was running out. The seal or the bezel of the father's ring had struck and torn the child's eye.

Bill Gorton walked up to the bar that night and called for his favorite drink. From his handful of coins he picked out two nickels, one of them the bored nickel—for two reasons, first, because it was disfigured, second, because he did not feel like keeping it; he was half ashamed of that blow, though he laughed at his wife's cry that he had cut the child's eye out—"it was a woman's fears."

"Ha!" said the bar-tender, "'bad penny soon returns.' That's quick work, any way."

"What do you mean, Lawton?"

"Why, I gave that bored nickel to a little flower-girl to-day for some pinks."

"You did?" gasped the father.

"Sure's you are a sinner."

The father set down the liquor and rushed out. A wild cry escaped him; a mighty anguish was upon him. In remorse, he rushed along, straight on, till he came to a Gospel meeting hall, rushed up the stairs and into the room, as if to disturb the meeting.

"Give me a paper!" he cried, "I want to sign the pledge. Pray for this wretch and brute who this day struck and almost killed his child."

An hour later, the father, in anguish as he bent over his child, learned to the full the terrible truth. Again and again he kissed her, moaning, "Oh, my child! my child! But I have given my promise to God and man never to drink again."

Smiling even in her terrible pain, she clung about his neck and said, "Never mind my eye, if I've got my father back." And more than once during the following dreary weeks, to the father's remorseful, pitiful confessions, she would look up and say: "An eye isn't too much to give to get my father back again."

OMAHA EXPOSITION.

Eight-Day Personally Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has arranged for a special eight-day personally-conducted tour to the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition at Omaha on October 1, allowing four full days at the Exposition. Round-trip tickets, including transportation and Pullman berth in each direction, meals in dining-car going and returning, hotel accommodation and meals at Omaha, admissions to the Fair, and carriage drive and hotel accommodations at Chicago, will be sold at rate of $100 from New York; $96 from Philadelphia; $95 from Washington and Baltimore; $91 from Williamsport and Harrisburg; $80 from Pittsburg; and proportionate rates from other points.

The party will be accompanied by a Tourist Agent and Chaperon, and will travel in special Pullman sleeping cars.

For the benefit of those who may desire to remain longer in Omaha, tickets will be made good to return on regular trains until November 15, inclusive. Such tickets include only railway transportation returning with reduction of $15 from above rates from all points.

For further information apply to ticket agents, Tourist Agent, 1196 Broadway, New York, or Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Philadelphia.

Sick Soldiers Hear the Gospel

The Great Camps Breaking up and the Invalid Troops Going Home—The Christian Commission Work Goes on.

T last there is a prospect of an early break-up in several of the great military home camps, established after the close of the war. Its investigation will not be confined to com- concerning the camps at home, but will also include camp conditions in Porto Rico and the Philippines. Every effort will be made to fix the re- sibility for the existence of conditions unhealthful to the soldier or productive of unnecessary hardships: for lack of system or the existence of a bad system in commissariat, clothing or medical supplies. Apart from more immediate results, it is believed that the investigation may give rise to important Congressional action, making such provision as will effectually prevent the development of similar conditions in future.

THE CONVALESCENT SOLDIER.

Meanwhile, affairs at the camps themselves are perceptibly improving. Malarial and typhoid fever still claim many victims, however. Many of the sick have been removed from the camps and sent to hospitals, while the convalescent have been allowed to go home on extended furloughs. In a number of cases, generous individuals or relief organizations have undertaken to care for several convalescents. A typical instance is the magnanimous offer of Miss Helen Gould who is now sheltering, nursing and caring for over one hundred soldier patients in hospitals or homes at her own expense. The Women's National War Relief Association has received a number of offers of a like character from different quarters, the writers doubtless having been stimulated by Miss Gould's example.

Gospel work continues at all the Camps, both inland and seaboard, and most encouraging spiritual results are reported. The Christian Commission announces that its evangelistic work is fairly under way at the new Camps that have been opened since the practical abandonment of Camps Alger and Chickamauga, and that Mr. Moody and his associates purpose continuing their efforts, as long as there is an opportunity of preaching to the soldiers. There is a constant demand for Testaments and other religious literature, and thousands of our Vest-Pocket War Testaments are now

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

J. J. S., Brooklyn, Ia. In the proposed treaty of peace between Spain and the United States do you think it would be right for the United States to give up the Philippines to Spain? Is it not true that the people of the Philippines have been as cruelly treated by Spain's misrule as were the Cubans?

It is doubtful whether any one, not thoroughly familiar with the whole subject, can express an opinion of any value concerning the retention or surrender of the Philippines. Retaining them would involve a large and expensive civil, naval and military administration for these islands alone, and new international responsibilities. On the other hand our Peace Commissioners may either regard it as our duty to hold what has been conquered, and endeavor to govern it wisely, or to give to the Filipinos, as well as to Cuba, an opportunity to prove their capacity to self-government, retaining only the Island of Luzon in the Eastern Archipelago as we may retain Porto Rico in the Western.

Triskaideka, Montreal. Will you please suggest a few topics which would make interesting and profitable subjects for debate, suitable for a young men's literary club?

Among the timely topics that occur to us are: The Proposed Anglo-American Alliance; the Canadian Liquor Plebiscite; Best Uses of Vacations; Comparative Chances of City and Country Bred Youth, etc.

J. J. C., Cleveland, O. What is the story of the "Pardoner's Tale?"

The "Pardouneres Tale," in Chaucer, is known as "Death and the Rioters." Three rioters, who had agreed to hunt down Death and kill him, met on their way an old man, who told them he had just left him sitting under a tree in a lane nearby. Off they started in pursuit, but when they came to the tree, they found a great treasure which they agreed duty. There should be repentance on the part of the wrongdoer, and there are instances in which you can produce it by kindness and magnanimity. It is the duty of the one who has suffered the wrong to do all in his power to show the other the evil of what he has done and to bring him to a better state of mind. He has a right to expect contrition, but his attitude should be one of pity and not resentment. Our rule is to forgive as we hope to be forgiven. 2. No, it is never right to declare what is untrue. Perhaps the injunction to which you refer was when there are faults on both sides, to be more ready to acknowledge our own than to point out the faults of others.

R. S. H., Springfield, Ill., writes in answer to S. P., Chesterfield, Conn.:

I earnestly prayed to God that he would take the desire for tobacco away from me and from the moment I arose from my knees on that 14th day of July, 1888, to the present time, I have not had the slightest desire for tobacco, and the smell of it has become distasteful to me. My advice to S. P. is to quit trying in his own strength and go to God in faith, believing, and ask him to take the desire for the vile stuff from him. He will do it.

Roger L. C., Brooklyn, N. Y. We believe that our National Administration will be wisely guided, as they have hitherto in the matter, and that Providence will direct the issue of the war. It does not, therefore, seem necessary to circulate any such petition.

D. J. S., Galt, Ont., Canada, writes:

I noticed in a recent issue a question by H. B. Bruner, of Germantown, Pa. in regard to a poem, the first line of which he quoted to be: "I see beyond the hills of Ayr." Like yourself, I am unable to place any poem of Burns' in which any such line is to be found. I think, however, the piece your correspondent wishes to find is Longfellow's poem on Burns, the first verse of which runs:

I see amid the fields of Ayr,
A ploughman, who in foul or fair
Sings at his task
So clear, we know not if it is
The laverock's song we hear, or his,
Nor care to ask.

The same information has also been supplied by Miss Isabella McFe, Clinton, Ont., Canada.

Student, New Haven Conn. Am I not right in rescinding a man who believes in evolution as an infidel?

Do not be rash in coming to such a conclusion. There are many sincere Christians who believe in evolution. Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, one of the greatest Christian scholars of our time, accepted some of the conclusions of evolutionists, though he could not accept them all. Professor Drummond, one of the best Christian teachers of the day was a strong advocate of evolution, and there are many others who might be named. They contended that evolution was only God's way of production.

A. N. S., Lowell, Mass.; Selma H. K., Schoharie, N. Y., and several others have sent in solutions to the puzzle which recently appeared in THE MAIL BAG. The puzzle was:

'Twas there two parricides once fled,
Whose sword had left their father dead.

The answer is found in II. Kings 19:37, and the country referred to is Armenia.

Geo. B., Gardner, Ill. The Sunday School lessons on Elisha's miracles have caused a discussion on which we should be glad to have your opinion on: 1. What a miracle is and 2. Whether the day of miracles is past or whether faith cures should be classed as miracles?

1. A miracle in its theological sense is defined by "The Standard Dictionary" as: "An event in the natural world, but out of its established order and possible only by the intervention and exertion of divine power; a supernatural event." Sceptics have contended that a miracle is an impossibility because natural laws are supreme and cannot be broken. The argument, however, is faulty, because we do not know the extent of natural law, nor whether there is not some higher law which can overcome or suspend it. If our great-grandfathers were alive now and saw the effect of the X-rays, or realized that two men a thousand miles apart were conversing by telephone, they would probably think they were witnessing the miraculous. There may be other secrets yet undiscovered still more wonderful. These being known to the Creator may have been employed in producing a miracle

While he was gone, the other two agreed to kill him, and so increase their share; but the third bought poison to put in the wine and so get the whole treasure himself. On his return, the other two set upon him and killed him. And sat down to drink the wine; but the wine being poisoned, all three rioters found Death after he treasure he old man had said.

Life at the African Lincoln.

How the Philafrican League's Station is Being Prepared for the Reception of Liberated Slaves.

GOOD news of progress is contained in Mr. Heli Chatelain's latest letters from Lincoln, the first station established in Central Africa by the Philafrican League for the reception of emancipated slaves. On this page is a photograph of the huts erected in the start as the nucleus of the settlement. It shows that the pioneers have to endure some hardships and have none of the comforts of civilized life. Mr. Chatelain, however, writes cheerfully and is evidently full of hope and courage. The following extracts from his letters will give some idea of the life they are living under African skies:

"We have completed the workshop, and have struck water in a well near the house at the depth of twenty-two feet. The result is not satisfactory, but I am hoping that a still greater depth will bring us to a permanent and sufficient supply. We all are in good health. The rinderpest has attacked our cattle, although it is on all sides of us. All work on the dam for irrigating purposes has been suspended temporarily, but in lower and moister ground we are planting Irish potatoes. Several times a week natives come to us for the repair of their implements, and often make payment in chickens or sweet potatoes. Thus the industrial department helps the larder.

"We have occasion for continual thanksgiving to God. Invaluable experience is constantly gained. The foundations are being laid broadly and, as we trust, permanently. Reinforcements are needed, and I rejoice that consecrated young men are ready to come as soon as the League can meet the demands of a proper outfit. The second party sailed to join Mr. Chatelain's party at Lincoln, June 5th].

LINCOLN, THE PHILAFRICAN LEAGUE'S FIRST STATION—A WHITE ANT-HILL.

And still the cry of our souls must be for the enduement of God's Spirit, in larger and larger measure. All our real help is from above. But the promise is ours, and on that we may confidently lean."

"We have begun building a little house for the young men who come to work for months. I shall make them as comfortable as possible without spoiling them for work, and in due time some will feel themselves too happy here to exchange this place for their heathen homes.

"Although the natives keep urging me to make rum, and build a distillery, which would enable me to buy all their sweet potatoes, they now recognize, at least in theory, that rum is their enemy, and that we are their friends, because we will have nothing to do with what hurts them, although it might be very profitable to the mission financially. What the whole tribe of Caluquembes appreciates, however, most keenly, is that the mission may exercise such an influence as will tend to preserve them from the raids and plunderings to which they have heretofore been subjected. In turn, I assure them that an indispensable condition is their own quiet and rightful conduct."

Many things are still needed for the development of the station. Implements, seeds and conveniences for saving manual labor are in demand, and if they had them the station would soon be ready for work. It would be very gratifying to be able to send these to the consecrated men who have expatriated themselves that they may help the unhappy victims of the horrible slave-trade. Funds, however, are lacking and for the present the work must go on slowly. Any contributions our readers may send to this office for the cause will be gratefully received and promptly applied to the purchase of the articles Mr. Chatelain and his colleagues most urgently need.

An Open Door for Christian Women.

Mr. Moody's Advice to Those who Wish to do the Lord's Work.

IT seems to me that in the 20th chapter of Matthew, verses 6 and 7, we have a picture of the state of things which exist in our churches to-day—a great work to be done, many standing about perfectly able to do it, but idle because no man has set them at work.

We are living in an age which is vastly different in many ways from the days of our fathers. Time was when the minister might be sure of reaching the people, and that his Sunday morning audience would include all the adults of his parish, because they were compelled by law to be there. That time has gone by, and especially in our cities the only way to reach a large proportion of the men and women with the Gospel now is to take it to them in their homes. They must be visited and dealt with there, and by personal invitation and continued effort brought to the house of God. Of course no pastor can expect to do such a work alone, and therefore there has arisen a need for trained workers who can give their time to it. I believe experience has proven that the very best ones to do this work are Christian women. A woman can get into these homes much easier than a man, and by many kind ministrations such as a woman alone can render, win the mother and children for Christ. This is not a matter of theory but of actual experience in many churches with which I am acquainted, and I believe is one answer to the old question of how to reach the masses. There ought to be thousands of women giving their lives to this work in the cities and large towns of our land, and more and more the churches are calling for such workers. I have recently been much interested in a kind of work that has been attempted in some of the rural districts of New England. For years it has been a problem with missionary boards to know how best to help small country churches. Many such churches have steadily run down: the people have moved away, and other causes have weakened them until they can no longer support a pastor and must be carried by the missionary board or abandoned. Now one board at least has been sending trained young women workers into such communities. They have lived with the people, visiting among them, giving Bible readings at their homes, and preaching in the church. The blessing of God has been upon their work.

I have spoken of only two fields in which the need of Christian women with some training for such work is very manifest. It would be easy to mention others. There is the need in our home missionary fields in the West and South of those who can teach the Bible. There is the whole great heathen world, where 800,000,000 people sit in midnight darkness.

Now I believe there are in this country a great many Christian young women of from twenty to thirty years of age—women of fair education and ability—who could and would give their lives to this work if they only knew just how to go about it. They are in the condition of the laborers in the parable, idle because no one has put them to work, and the point I am getting at is to tell such young women of this great possibility of usefulness before them and how they may enter into it.

We have established at East Northfield, Mass., a Training School, where young women are taught the Bible and practical methods of Christian work—giving as nearly as we can just the training that is required in these for whom this great call is coming. Many young women have gone out of it into places of great usefulness, and are making their lives count mightily for the salvation of men and the glory of God. If this has fallen under the eye of such a young woman as I have tried to describe, may I ask her why her life should not be thus spent?

I shall be very glad to correspond with any who may wish to enter the School. We can take only a limited number, but our doors are wide open for as many as the building will accommodate.

I do not know why churches could not send one of their number here for a few months. I am receiving inquiries for such workers constantly, and I think many times the worker is right in the church where her services are required, if she could only be found and helped to obtain a little practical training.

The War Testament Fund.

Thousands of our vest-pocket War-Testaments are now being distributed weekly among the troops at the different camps throughout the country by the evangelists, chaplains and Y. M. C. A. workers. These little volumes are everywhere welcomed, and are a great comfort to the soldiers, being printed in clear type, and the book itself being of a size to fit conveniently into the pocket of a vest or tunic. One dollar will supply ten soldiers with Testaments. Ten dollars will give the Gospel in this compact form to an entire Company. All contributions for this work are applied to sending out these Testaments free to our soldiers and sailors, and every contribution will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The following sums have been received for the work during the week:

A CRY FROM CAMP.

"No man cometh unto the Father but by me."
"Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

DEAR mother, goodbye! The far homeland,
Alas, I shall ne'er see again!
'Neath alien skies I am dying,
A victim, but oh, not of Spain!
Dear mother, your boy, when he left you,
Was upright and true, as you know;
But soon, all too soon, came the ordeal
Of facing a terrible foe.

Satan's hounds came after me, mother,
I thought I was strong—but I fell
Like Lucifer, son of the morning,
From heaven to nethermost hell.
I lie in the mire, dear mother,
A sinner 'gainst God and the right;
Yet over the sea steals like music,
Your prayer "bless my soldier to-night!"

Your pure boy no longer, my mother,
The drink did its duty too well—
Spain's bullets to me are as nothing.
My soul has been struck by a shell.
No love I deserve, yet, precious mother,
I yearn for a sight of your face;
The touch of your hand on my forehead
Would be like the touch of God's grace.

Our chaplain says, "Come to the Saviour!
Forgiveness there is, and for you."
But, mother, I scarce can believe him,
The news seems too good to be true.
A robe for the prodigal's body!
A ring for his weak, sinning hand!
And shoes for the feet that have wandered
So far from the good Father's land!

My heart is just broken with kindness,
The love of the Father for me;
Such love is too great for rebellion—
I come, my Redeemer, to thee.
With fever my body is burning,
It will not be long ere I go;
But Heaven's begun with me, mother,
Christ's blood makes me "whiter than snow."

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

ENEMIES OVERTHROWN.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Psalms 68: 1, ... { Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered.

A PROCESSION was formed to carry the ark, or sacred box, which, though only three feet nine inches in length and four feet three inches in height and depth, was the symbol of God's presence. As the leaders of the procession lifted this ornamented and brilliant box by two golden poles run through four golden rings, and started for Mount Zion, all the people chanted the battle hymn of my text, "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered."

The Cameronians of Scotland, outraged by James I., who forced upon them religious forms that were offensive, and by the terrible persecution of Drummond, Dalziel, and Turner, and by the oppressive laws of Charles I. and Charles II., were driven to proclaim war against tyrants, and went forth to fight for religious liberty; and the mountain heather became red with carnage, and at Bothwell Bridge and Aird's Moss and Drumclog the battle hymn and the battle shout of those glorious old Scotchmen was the text I have chosen: "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered."

What a whirlwind of power was Oliver Cromwell, and how with his soldiers, named the "Ironsides," he went from victory to victory! Opposing enemies melted as he looked at them. He dismissed Parliament as easily as a schoolmaster a school. He pointed his finger at Berkeley Castle, and it was taken. He ordered Sir Ralph Hopton, the general, to dismount, and he dismounted. See Cromwell marching on with his army, and hear the battle-cry of the "Ironsides," loud as a storm and solemn as a death-knell, standards reeling before it, and cavalry horses going back on their haunches, and armies flying at Marston Moor, at Winceby Field, at Naseby, at Bridgewater and Dartmouth—"Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered!"

So you see my text is not like a complimentary and tasselled sword that you sometimes see hung up in a parlor, a sword that was never in battle, and only to be used on general training day, but more like some weapon carefully hung up in your home, telling its story of battles, for my text hangs in the Scripture armory, telling of the holy wars of three thousand years in which it has been carried, but still as keen and mighty as when David first unsheathed it. It seems to me that in the Church of God, and in all styles of reformatory work, what we most need now is a battle-cry. We raise our little standard, and put on it the name of some man who only a few years ago began to live and in a few years will cease to live. We go into contest against the armies of iniquity, depending too much on human agencies. We use for a battle-cry the name of some brave Christian reformer, but after awhile that reformer dies, or gets old, or loses his courage, and then we take another battle-cry, and this time perhaps we put the name of some one who betrays the cause and sells out to the enemy. What we want for a battle-cry is the name of some leader who will never betray us, and will never surrender, and will never die.

All respect have I for brave men and women, but if we are to get the victory all along the line we must take the hint of the Gideonites, who wiped out the Bedouin Arabs, commonly called Midianites. These Gideonites had a glorious leader in Gideon, but what was the battle-cry with which they flung their enemies into the worst defeat into which any army was ever tumbled? It was "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Put God first, whoever you put second. If the army of the American revolution is to free America, it must be "The sword of the Lord and of Washington." If the Germans want to win the day at Sedan, it must be "The sword of the Lord and of Von Moltke."

Waterloo was won for the English, because not only the armed men at the front, but the worshipers in the cathedrals at the rear, were crying "The sword of the Lord and of Wellington."

The Methodists have gone in triumph across nation after nation with the cry, "The sword of the Lord and of Wesley." The Presbyterians have gone from victory to victory with the cry, "The sword of the Lord and of John Knox." The Baptists have conquered millions after millions for Christ with the cry, "The sword of the Lord and of Judson." The American Episcopalians have won their mighty way with the cry, "The sword of the Lord and of Bishop M'Ilvaine." The victory is to those who put God first. But as we want a battle-cry suited to all sects of religionists, and to all lands, I nominate as the battle-cry of Christendom in the approaching Armageddon the words of my text, sounded before the ark as it was carried to Mount Zion: "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered."

As far as our finite mind can judge, it seems about time for God to rise. Does it not seem to you that the abominations of this earth have gone far enough? Was there ever a time when sin was so defiant? Were there ever before so many fists lifted toward God telling him to come on if he dare? Look at the blasphemy abroad! What towering profanity! Would it be possible for anyone to calculate the numbers of times that the name of the Almighty God and of Jesus Christ are every day taken irreverently on the lips? Profane swearing is as much forbidden by the law as theft, or arson, or murder, yet who executes it? Profanity is worse than theft, or arson, or murder, for these crimes are attacks on humanity—that is an attack on God.

This country is pre-eminent for blasphemy. A man traveling in Russia was supposed to be a clergyman. "Why do you take me to be a clergyman?" said the man. "Oh," said the Russian, "all other Americans swear." The crime is multiplying in intensity. God very often shows what he thinks of it, but for the most part the fatality is hushed up. Among the Adirondacks I met the funeral procession of a man who two days before had fallen under a flash of lightning, while boasting, after a Sunday of work in the fields, that he had cheated God out of one day anyhow, and the man who worked with him on the same Sabbath is still living, but a helpless invalid, under the same lightning flash.

Years ago, in a Pittsburg prison, two men were talking about the Bible and Christianity, and one of them, Thompson by name, applied to Jesus Christ a very low and villainous epithet, and, as he was uttering it, he fell. A physician was called, but no help could be given. After a day lying with distended pupils and palsied tongue, he passed out of this world. In a cemetery in Sullivan county, in New York State, are eight headstones in a line and all alike, and these are the facts: In 1861 diphtheria raged in the village, and a physician was remarkably successful in curing his patients. So confident did he become that he boasted that no case of diphtheria could stand before him, and finally defied Almighty God to produce a case of diphtheria that he could not cure. His youngest child soon after took the disease and died, and one child after another, until all the eight had died of diphtheria. The blasphemer challenged Almighty God, and God accepted the challenge.

Do not think that because God has been silent in your case, O profane swearer! that he is dead. Is there nothing now in the peculiar feeling of your tongue, or nothing in the numbness of your brain, that indicates that God may come to avenge your blasphemies, or is already avenging them? But these cases I have noticed, I believe, are only a few cases where there are hundreds. Families keep too quiet to avoid the horrible conspicuity. Physicians suppress them through professional confidence. It is a very, very, very long roll that contains the names of those who died with blasphemies on their lips.

Still the crime rolls on, up through parlors, up through chandeliers with lights all ablaze, and through the pictured corridors of club-rooms, out through busy exchanges where oath meets oath, and down through all the haunts of sin, mingling with the rattling dice and crackling billiard-balls, and the laughter of her who hath forgotten the covenant of her God; and round the city, and round the continent, and round the earth a seething, boiling surge flings its hot spray into the face of a long-suffering God. And the ship-captain curses his crew, and the master-builder his men, and the hack-driver his horse; and the traveler the stone that bruises his foot, or the mud that soils his shoes, or the defective time-piece that gets him too late to the rail-train. I arraign profane swearing and blasphemy, two names for the same thing, as being one of the gigantic crimes of this land, and for its extirpation it does seem as if it were about time for God to arise.

Then look for a moment at the evil of drunkenness. Whether you live in Washington, or New York, or Chicago, or Cincinnati, or Savannah, or Boston, or in any of the cities of this land, count up the saloons on that street as compared with the saloons five years ago, and see they are growing far out of proportion to the increase of the population. You people who are so precise and particular lest there should be some imprudence and rashness in attacking the rum traffic will have your son some night pitched into your front door dead drunk, or your daughter will come home with her children because her husband has, by strong drink, been turned into a demoniac. The drink fiend has despoiled whole streets of good homes in all our cities. Fathers, brothers, sons on the funeral pyre of strong drink! Fasten tighter the victims! Stir up the flames! Pile on the corpses! More men, women, and children for the sacrifice! Let us have whole generations on fire of evil habit; and at the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer let all the people fall down and worship King Alcohol, or you shall be cast into the fiery furnace under some political platform!

I indict this evil as the regicide, the fratricide, the patricide, the matricide, the uxoricide of the century. Yet under what innocent and delusive and mirthful names alcoholism deceives the people! It is a "cordial." It is "bitters." It is an "eye-opener." It is an "appetizer." It is a "digester." It is an "invigorator." It is a "settler." It is a "night-cap." Why don't they put on the right labels—"Essence of Perdition," "Conscience Stupefier," "Five Drachms of Heart-ache," "Tears of Orphanage," "Blood of Souls," "Scabs of an Eternal Leprosy," "Venom of the Worm that Never Dies?" Only once in a while is there anything in the title of liquors to even hint their atrocity, as in the case of "sour mash." That I see advertised all over. It is an honest name, and anyone can understand it. "Sour mash!" That is, it makes a man's disposition sour, and his associations sour and his prospects sour; and then it is good to mash his body, and mash his soul, and mash his business, and mash his family. "Sour mash!" One honest name at last for an intoxicant! But through lying labels of many of the apothecaries' shops, good people, who are only a little under tone in health, and wanting some invigoration, have unwittingly got on their tongue the fangs of this cobra, that stings to death so large a ratio of the human race.

Others are ruined by the common and all-destructive habit of treating customers. And it is a treat on their coming to town, and a treat while the bargaining progresses, and a treat when the purchase is made, and a treat as he leaves town. Others, to drown their troubles, submerge themselves with this worse trouble. Oh, the world is battered and bruised and blasted with this growing evil! It is more and more entrenched and fortified. They have millions of dollars subscribed to marshal and advance the alcoholic forces. They nominate, and elect, and govern the vast majority of the office-holders of this country. On their side they have enlisted the mightiest p[ower] of the centuries. And behin[d] stand all the myrmidons of the [w]orld, Satanic, Apollyonic and Di[a]bolic. It is beyond all human effort to ove[r]throw this Bastille of decanters or captu[re] Gibraltar of rum jugs. OUR NEW HAWAIIAN DOMAIN.

The Islands and the People that Have Now Come Under Our Flag—A Dying Race—Our Missionary Work in Hawaii.

NOW that the Hawaiian Islands have become really our own, both by gift of the people there who have controlling influence, and are responsible for law and order, and also by action of the Congress of the United States, we shall feel a renewed interest in them. Many Americans will look to those islands as a possible place for business undertaking, and undoubtedly quite a large number will venture to make their home in that advanced outpost of our national civilization.

The history of the islands is long and interesting, even though not a word had been committed to writing until after the advent of white men within the present century. That history has already become familiar to many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. One of the most striking characters in the whole history is that of the first king. The long name of five syllables is quite easy when you once get hold of it. Pronounce the first syllable, Ka, with the broad sound of a as in ah, or as if it were spelled Kah. Then divide the remainder of the word into two parts, which are simply the same repeated, namely, meha, giving é the sound of long a in English, and a the same broad sound as before. We can show the sound perhaps, in the following spelling: Kah-mayha-mayha, with the accent on the syllable, may.

The statue, heroic size, stands in the Government Grounds at Honolulu, and is admired by the people. Kamehameha I. was a native chief who had many of the noble traits of the best kings. He it was who conquered other chiefs and made the little islands, scattered through three hundred miles of sea, one country, and thanks to the civilization brought in by American missionaries, and British and American visitors and residents, they have remained united ever since the day of that conqueror. Hawaii's policemen are decked with the badge of authority. It is plain that they are very personable people. In fact many of the native Hawaiian race are shapely and pleasing in figure. In the olden time, chiefs and their wives were particularly so. Even the last king, Kalakaua, though said not to be a pure Hawaiian, and scarcely of the royal line, was in appearance "every inch a king."

Hawaiians have necessarily ceased to be the ruling people in their own islands, just as the ancient Angles did long ago in England. Yet they still have much influence, and hold many good positions. Some of the native policemen are thoroughly faithful and capable, and will render good service under the "Stars and Stripes."

One of our photographs I have called "A Hawaiian Kindergarten," because in the water, in their plays as here shown, the children readily learn one of the national accomplishments of the Hawaiians. They are a race of swimmers. The legends of olden times relate most remarkable exploits in swimming long distances. And within the memory of present times, is the daring feat of riding a surf board on the crest of incoming breakers. Balancing themselves most adroitly on a kind of long plank, these men, and even women, would stand in such a way as to hold their perilous craft just right to catch the motion of the surf, and be borne triumphantly toward shore, much faster, it is said, than a horse could gallop on land. But the era of shipping and civilization has pretty nearly banished that daring sport from Hawaiian recreations. Our illustration shows youngsters disporting themselves just where the ocean breaks over a reef. On the hither side, the water is still, but beyond, where in a tranquil day they can play safely, the waters extend outward toward the vastness of the mighty ocean.

A HAWAIIAN OCEAN KINDERGARTEN.

In a peculiar sense the Hawaiians are a dying race. Not only must individuals pass away, but the race as a whole has rapidly been dying out. Wars, physical disorders, and contact with continental races have diminished them to one-tenth of their former number. But we may hope that a regular and stable government, with good hygienic and moral instruction properly enforced, may save a remnant to the population of the future.

A very common method of disposing of the dead was to cover the body with a glutinous wash, and then deposit it in a sitting posture in some cave on a mountain side, or on some natural shelf or niche on the side of a precipice. There offerings were frequently carried and prayers performed. Remnants of such a cave may still be seen in the mountain, where the promontory of Diamond Head approaches the sea, not far from Honolulu.

American missionaries began work in Hawaii in 1820, and with remarkable success. The force was large, able, and thoroughly united. In proportion, it was the same as if America should send to China several thousand missionaries, instead of a few score. By the end of ten years, the language had been reduced to writing, a fine literature begun, and schools widely established. At the end of twenty years, an orderly government had been well initiated, modifying and finally supplanting with regular law and citizenship, the old-time personal rule of the chiefs. At the end of forty years the islands were practically a Christian nation, with statutes against immoralities as well made and enforced as in the United States. And although since that date many thousands of Asiatic pagans have come into the diminutive country, and adventurers of many kinds have there sought to gratify their desires and ambitions, yet the good work done by the missionaries is still strong in the high sentiments of right prevailing among Hawaiians. REFORMATION UNDER ASA.

S. S. Lesson for Oct. 2. II. Chron. 14: 2-12. Golden Text, II. Chron. 14: 11.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

IN our lessons for the last quarter we have considered God's dealings with Israel under Jeroboam and his successors; we commence now a series of lessons from the history of the kings of Judah. It is very striking that in Israel during the time in which not one of the kings proved to be a true leader of the people in the fear of God and in obedience to him, God, in his considerate grace and love, gave to his people such prophets as Elijah, Elisha, and Micah. He never leaves himself without a witness, so that men shall have no excuse for living without God.

Rehoboam had obeyed the Lord when he forbade him to go to war with Jeroboam, and God rewarded him by drawing to him the Levites from all Israel (II. Chron. 11: 4, 13). Thus the king was surrounded by men who for the honor of the God of Israel had forsaken Jeroboam who had set up idolatrous worship throughout his kingdom. But Rehoboam was a weak man, who succumbed to every influence, bad and good. When he was strong, he forsook the law of the Lord and all his people with him, and God suffered Shishak, king of Egypt, to come up against Judah and to take the fenced cities. Thank God there were right-minded princes in Judah who recognized the hand of God, humbled themselves and acknowledged, "The Lord is righteous." Whenever in a time of trouble and judgment, God's people thus justify him, God is glorified in delivering them, and so it was now. He granted "some deliverance," but not entire, because Rehoboam "set not his heart to seek the Lord" (II. Chron. 12: 6-14).

Abijah, his son, succeeded him, but reigned only three years. His reign was signalized by the war he made against Jeroboam, in which he showed a spirit better than that of his father, and yet "he walked in all the sins of his father which he had done before him, and his heart," says the historian, "was not perfect with the Lord his God as the heart of David his father" (I. Kings 15: 3). "But God smote Jeroboam and the children of Israel before him and his people because they relied upon the Lord the God of their fathers" (II. Chron. 13: 18).

It was only when Asa came to the throne that God had a man on his side through whom he could work unhindered. "Asa did that which was good and right in the sight of the Lord his God." His grandfather, Rehoboam, had encouraged idolatry and grievous sins (I. Kings 14: 22-24), but Asa stood out against the vain manner of life received by tradition from his fathers (I. Pet. 1: 18); he was bound by the love of his God more than by family considerations, and he did what must have cost him much suffering, when he removed his grandmother, Maachah, from being queen dowager because she had made an abominable image . . . and the king cut down her image and burnt it at the brook Kidron (I. Kings 15: 11-13, R. V.). Thus while his father, Abijah, walked in all the sins of his father which he had done before him (I. Kings 15: 3), Asa had the grace and the courage to stand true to his God in the midst of unconverted relatives, a test which many of us have found to be a very severe one.

A time of reformation, whether in a kingdom, a city, a church, a mission, or a household, needs, if it is to be effectual, very special grace of God. Asa believed in his God. The generation in which he was brought up had been habituated to idolatry; no doubt idolatry was mixed up with all their social customs, and abominable sins, which spring out of the devil worship which idolatry means, were common among the people. Asa made a clean sweep of the whole thing. Without considering what it might be to him in losing favor with his people, nor yet the pecuniary loss, he "took away the strange altars and high places and brake down the pillars, and hewed down the Asherim: and commanded Judah to seek the Lord, the God of their fathers, and to do the law and commandment" (R. V.).

The result was that God stood by him, and the country, which had been so long torn and desolated by war, "had rest ten years." It was God who gave this time of rest, and Asa acknowledged it (ver. 7): it was not the result of any power in Asa.

RUINS OF BEIT JEIBRIN, NEAR THE SCENE OF ASA'S VICTORY.

Was the king right to spend this time in strengthening himself building fenced cities, walls, towers, gates and bars? We read of no command that he should do this; and when God permitted Zerah, the Ethiopian, to come against him with a force twice as strong as his own, the king could only fall back upon his God as much as though he had done nothing to strengthen himself. He went out with his army to meet the enemy at Mareshah, and there he practically handed over the whole command to the God in whom he trusted.

"Lord," he said, "it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many or with them that have no power: help us, O Lord, our God, for we rest on thee, and in thy name we go against this multitude. O Lord, thou art our God; let not man prevail against thee." It was perfect confidence in a well-known God; it was a confession of absolute weakness, while at the same time Asa had the courage and the faith to take for granted that his cause was God's cause: "Let not man prevail against thee." The Lord smote the Ethiopians before Asa and before Judah. Such an appeal from a child to a father could not go unheard. The prayer of Asa was in the very spirit of the Lord's prayer. "Hallowed be thy name:" the king put God to the front, and God took the place given him and utterly routed the enemy. What chance had the Ethiopians when God fought for Judah? "They were destroyed before the Lord and before his host." Judah was his host at this time, for they were surrendered to him; and the fear, not of them, but of the Lord, "came upon the cities round about them." His people cleansed from sin with a sense of utter weakness, and an unlimited trust in God, and then what can he not accomplish! Asa's experience is the experience of all who go forth in God's strength to meet spiritual or material enemies.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

HAVING traced in previous lessons the history of Israel from the period of its separation from Judah to its dispersion, we are now to take up the history of the southern kingdom, which continued about four hundred and fifty years after the separation. It was much smaller than the territory occupied by Israel. Though the tribe of Benjamin was considered to belong to the Judæan kingdom, the border between the two kingdoms, which was always a subject of dispute, ran so as to leave the greater part of the tribe of Benjamin in the northern kingdom, and people were more in sympathy with it, having never quite forgiven the revolution which transferred the crown from the dynasty of Saul to that of David. The border line was not more than six miles north of Jerusalem. There was, however, some compensation in the greater security which the situation of Judah gave it. On the north, Israel formed a barrier to the attacks of Assyria. On the west, the Philistines were so thoroughly subdued by David that they let the kingdom alone. On the south was the desert, which barred the way of invaders, and on the east was the Dead Sea, which protected the country from the Moabites. Besides these advantages, Judah had the prestige of possessing the capital city and the Temple, which was the centre of attraction for every religious spirit in the Hebrew nation. This fact is very prominent in the Chronicles, from which most of the ensuing lessons are taken. It is believed that if the author was not Ezra, as many think, it was some official of the Temple, and probably of the choir, as he is so careful to record matters connected with the musical part of the services.

And Asa did that which was good. Asa was the grandson of Rehoboam, and the fifth of the kings of the Davidic dynasty. The splendor of the kingdom had been decreased. Even the Temple had been stripped of its gold and had been decorated instead with brass, or bronze. Rehoboam the grandson of David, had been subjugated by Egypt. His son, Abijah, had been forced to fight with Israel, and though he had conque ...distributed weekly. A special consignment of one thousand of the War Testaments was sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to Jacksonville, Fla., a few days ago, on the request of the Christian Commission, and still other consignments have been sent to Camp Wikoff, Camp Alger and other points.

War Testaments at the Camps.

Rev. J. G. Anderson writes, regarding the consignment of War Testaments sent him for distribution among the troops at Tampa, Fla.:

"I was very glad to get them—had wanted them for some time. The Fifth Regulars had come in and had become so scattered that the Commission had done nothing for them. I took out one hundred Testaments, and as I called out that I had Testaments, they rushed at me in great crowds. I could have distributed five hundred; eager hands were stretched out for them. The Seventh Artillery had had very little done for them on account of its location. I took another regiment to them and the scene I had just witnessed in the Fifth Infantry was repeated among them. I assure you that you could not have sent anything the soldiers would have been more glad to get.

"These consignments along with many previous ones were very welcome, but for the distribution among the soldiers, the best betrayed to the Testament Fund subscribed by readers of this journal. Thus the contribution to the fund is the means of bringing in hundreds of many more other soldier boys. The Living Epistle of which they carry with them wherever they goes. Camp, in hospital, or on the field. Many of the boys who receive the Testament have sent back letters to the effect that they received at the front, which they value very highly as a souvenir and as a remembrance of those friends who thought of the soldier's spiritual welfare the most critical period of the war. Many very touching incidents are related concerning the work of the Christian Commission evangelists at the different camps. One of Mr. Moody's workers writes:

"At the close of the meeting there were some Testaments on hand to give out to any men who wanted them, and they flocked around. One old alwart, splendid looking man waited until every last and asked for a Testament. He said, "I wish you would write my name in it. And the name was written in it. "Now," he said, "three years ago my mother wanted me to take a Testament, and I threw it at her and said. I would give all the world to-night if I had never done it. I have lived for three years a wretched life. I am a graduate of college, and expected to go into the Presbyterian ministry. I have tried to be an infidel and an atheist, and it has all been because I loved sin, and it got hold of me, and I have been unwilling to give it up. But now," he said, "I will take this Testament, and I pray God I may soon be able to write to my mother of my conversion. I have changed my mind; she has not heard of me for three years, and she doesn't know where I am; but, God helping me, I hope soon to write to her that her prodigal boy, after all his wanderings, has come back to God."

Another, referring to the work at Camp Thomas, writes:

One night last week a fine-looking young man from Wisconsin got up at the close of the meeting and said: "Boys, I came on these grounds as tough a case as ever walked. My father is a Presbyterian minister, and my mother is a God-fearing woman; but I paid no attention to them while I was at home. The night before last I came to the meeting, and I accepted Christ as my personal Saviour, and now I want to confess him."

The majority of the commanding officers at the camp have given the most enthusiastic approval to the services. Gen. Brooke, while at Camp Thomas, said:

Gentlemen: I have been well aware of your presence in my camp and of the work you are doing. I have had my eye on the tents you have erected, and know of the conveniences and comforts you have brought the soldiers. I am much pleased with your work, and believe you are doing good. Go on with your duty. Hew to the line, and then let the chips fall where they will. This has been my motto through life.

Colonel Coffee of the 2d Missouri Volunteers wrote:

I desire to state my very great appreciation of the work being done by your Commission in camp here. Nothing has so much contributed to the comfort of the men, their contentment and well being, as the Christian Commission tents.

Chaplain Springer of the 17th United States Infantry, wrote:

I want personally to thank you for the great work the Commission has done in the United States Army, especially in Tampa. I am sure the work was productive of great good.

Reading Matter for the Troops.

Thousands of volumes of good reading matter have been placed on the different war-ships and transports, both in the Atlantic and Pacific. Y. M. C. A. Secretary H. J. McCoy writes from San Francisco:

We put fifteen hundred volumes on the transport Pennsylvania, taking the Montana regiment to the Philippines last Tuesday, and fifteen hundred on the Rio Janeiro sailing to-morrow with the South Dakota troops; and will place them with all the other regiments as they go. The men are very eager for the books, and I doubt if any line of work could be of more service than this as they will have ample opportunity in seven thousand miles ocean travel to read, meditate and digest. Would it be possible for you to send us Bibles and Testaments? We are entirely out of them; have given away something like ten thousand and have exhausted the market. We now have fourteen tents in successful operation at Camp Merritt, this city, and you know two of our young men have gone with the invading army to the Philippines as representatives of the Christian Commission.

Rev. W. J. Peck, of Long Island City, who has spent some time at the camps, aiding the Christian Commission in its work, writes thus of his experiences among the sick soldiers at Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point:

The Christian Commission and Y. M. C. A. are in the actual harvest field of souls. A revival spirit pervades the Y. M. C. A. tents, and there are four of them, and all used night and day here. All day long the tents are well filled with soldiers writing letters home to relatives and friends. Secretary Sanford Whiting and others often have thus an opportunity to speak to the soldiers of Jesus.

At 7 P. M. the tents fill to the full with soldiers eager for the bright evangelical services, which last an hour, with inquiry meeting following. No minister could have a more responsive audience than these boys in blue. It is indeed a joy to preach to them and hear them sing the grand old hymns like "Rock of Ages," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "Nearer My God to Thee," and note the tears of penitence.

After the service last night, a soldier from Kentucky stayed and wanted to be prayed for. He said: "I have wanted to be a Christian a long time and prayed for it a great while, but I somehow feel that God overlooks me and won't give me the blessing." But he knelt on the grass in a corner of the big tent and asked God to be merciful to a poor sinner, and there he gave his life to God and said, "Now I belong to Jesus." At the General Hospital a very sick colored man, J. L., also from Kentucky, said: "Ever since I was brought from the hospital in Cuba, and on the way up, I prayed that God would save me."

The Christian Herald in the Tents.

The next cot was occupied by A. B. B., from Michigan, who was studying at Kalamazoo, fitting for the Baptist ministry. He was very sick, but expressed a desire to recover and reach home to complete his course and preach salvation. I had a bundle of papers to give out. Young B. asked if I had THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I handed him the number of August 31, and his face lighted up as though meeting an old friend. He said: "This is best of them all." It is the paper usually desired, and I believe it is doing great good here. I wish the readers of your paper would pray that God would spare B.'s life and put him into the ministry.

Work here in the camp is full of interest, and is the cream of Christian endeavor. After one of the meetings thirty five indicated that they had commenced the new life. Most of the men are homesick, and are very approachable on the subject of religion. No rebuffs are met with. Doctors and nurses make it easy for evangelists and consecrated workers in the wards, and the officers also greet them cordially. The fire of the Holy Spirit kindles in many a life in camp and cot. Every evening new voices are heard confessing a newfound faith, and so the blessed work goes on. When they reach their church homes, may they be as lighted candles, not under, but upon a bushel, and give light to others! Pray for them.

SICK SOLDIERS LEAVING CAMP FOR HOME.

NOTES OF THE NEWS.

Captain-General Blanco has given our Evacuation Commissioners a cordial reception in Havana. It is said to be his purpose to leave Cuba before the Commission's work is completed.

The Spanish Senate has passed the bill authorizing the government to conclude peace.

Gen. Miles is now in personal command of affairs at Camp Wikoff and is rapidly remedying the present unhealthy conditions.

Aguinaldo's attitude toward our troops in the Philippines is so antagonistic that a collision between the Americans and the insurgents is far from improbable. The latter are endeavoring to occupy as strong a position as possible, before the question of the disposition of the islands comes up before the Peace Commission.

HEROIC TANG HSI.

The Story of West China's First Protestant Martyr.

Rev. J. H. McCartney, of Chung King, writes: "Tang Hsi I was one of our Chung King medical students, a native of Sui Ling, 150 miles distant from Chung King, and the only member of his family who knew anything about Christianity. He was the brightest Christian and the best student in a class of six. About twenty-two years ago, twelve native Roman Catholics were put to death by the people, of Kiang Pei, a city opposite Chung King on the Kia Ling River. The district has always been noted for anti-foreign feelings.

Last December, as there were many empty and suitable places, we concluded that it would be an easy matter to rent. No sooner was our purpose known than the building was torn down. We secured another and called for volunteers from our medical students to go over and take possession. Soon two men were on their way, thinking that after possession nothing further would be done, as we had consulted the officials, and help was promised. That night, about 2 o'clock, the building was broken into; the men dragged out, beaten, bound and taken, as their captors said, to be drowned in the river. Wang Hsin Kway, being more loosely bound than Tang Hsi I, succeeded in making his escape, and after a futile attempt in the dark to find him they gave up the search. He made his way to the city wall, over which he climbed, and thus escaped. The young man, who was murdered, was strangled by a rope tied tightly around his neck, after which his naked body was dragged over the stone pavements for nearly a mile and thrown over the city wall. The endowment of a bed in the Chung King Hospital, or the support of a medical student, would be a fitting tribute to the memory of Tang Hsi I, the first Protestant martyr of West China."

The Coming Campaign.

EVANGELISTS of all denominations are, at this season of the year, preparing their plans for the winter's campaign. May the blessing of God rest upon them and may the Holy Spirit so guide and help them that their labors may be more fruitful than ever before! Experience has proved that people who have for years sat unmoved under an earnest and faithful ministry, may be brought into the Kingdom of Christ, by God's blessing on a new presentation of the old truth, and thus the church is helped and revived by the efforts of these servants of our Lord.

In the letters that come to this office, day by day, there is a hint which may prove valuable to these earnest workers. We offer it to them at this time, so that in the preparation of their sermons and in arranging their methods of work, a danger that some of them may not have fully perceived may be avoided. One of our readers, whose letter is a specimen of hundreds which have reached our hands, during the past two years, writes:

I was converted several months ago under the preaching of ——. He assured me that I had only to believe on Christ as my Saviour and to confess him before the great meetings that were being held, and to join the church, in order to be safe for eternity. I did so and for a few weeks I was very happy, but now I have grown cold. I do not care for Bible-reading nor the prayer meeting, and, though for my own credit's sake I still maintain my profession, I have lost all enjoyment of religion, and am just in the same condition as before I made confession of faith. Do you think I was really converted?

Probably there are more people than our evangelists have any idea of, who are in the same condition as our correspondent. Would it not be possible in preaching and in personal talks with converts to prevent so terrible a collapse? If the anxious seeker were taught that his experience in conversion was only the beginning of his Christian life; that he must wage a constant fight with temptation and sin, in which victory could be gained only by the power which Christ gives to those who seek it, there would be less fear of his sinking into coldness and indifference. Many of the converts appear to regard their conversion as an experience which is to give them a title to heaven, without any idea of the Christ life that they should live on earth. The result is a lack of permanence in the fruit of the evangelist's work which is disappointing and injurious. Much may be done to correct it by the regular pastors, but we are convinced that the evangelists themselves might do more than is generally done to avert the evil. A timely hint at the beginning of this year's work will, we trust, lead to a perception of the danger, and an earnest, prayerful effort to avoid it.

Anarchy and Its Victims.

NEVER was there more striking illustration of the truth of the familiar line, "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," than in these days of anarchistic plots and machinations, aimed for the most part at the occupants of European thrones. Not kings alone, but the distinguished of either sex and any nationality, seem to be singled out impartially as intended victims, by those fanatics, whose frenzied brains have jumped to the conclusion that the "removal" of the great ones is all that is needed to redress the wrongs of mankind, and bring about a social millennium. So violent is the moral distortion of such men, that in their eyes all talent is an offence and all distinction a crime.

In the assassination of the Empress of Austria while leaving Geneva, where she had been resting for recuperation, one can discover no motive beyond the intense and indiscriminating hatred which seems to be shared by all anarchists toward all who fill thrones or stand near them. By his own confession, Luccheni, or Luchesi, the assailant, had been following, not the Empress, but the Prince of Orleans, with deadly purpose. He had dogged his prey to Geneva, where he had learned of the presence of Elizabeth, and instantly abandoned the less distinguished for the royal victim. Luccheni's crime has thrilled all Europe, and has confirmed the terrible fact, already known in Berlin and Paris, that a conspiracy exists which aims at the life of every occupant of a European throne. Within the memory of the present generation, the assassin's stroke has plunged many lands in sorrow. Three Presidents, a Czar, and various dignitaries have been among the victims. Several times Britain's aged Queen was menaced, but escaped. It remained for the unfortunate Empress Elizabeth to be the first woman to come into fatal contact with this mad enemy of all society and all law and property—anarchism. That she was a lady of wide benevolences, kind and generous, personally interested in many charities, innocent of all politics, and fonder of a simple outdoor life in the country than of the pomp of State, did not seem to call for an instant's consideration by her assailant, who had only too readily and eagerly imbibed the doctrine that kings, princes and rulers are an encumbrance on the face of the earth.

One almost immediate result of the crime will be the inauguration of a determined system of repression by France, Italy, Spain, Germany and Russia. Already we hear of wholesale arrests and imprisonments of those suspected, even in the remotest degree, of anarchistic tendencies, and an international movement, directed against anarchists in general, is now agitated. Truly, human experience is full of the strangest contrasts. The same week witnesses the coronation of one queen and the killing of another; the same month sees all the royalties of the old world thrilling over the Czar's proposition of universal disarmament and banding together to exterminate by force a class who are striving to reach universal peace through the destruction of thrones, cabinets, palaces and armies. Only in God's own good time can this great human tangle of cross purposes be unravelled. Till that blessed time comes, troubles will not cease, and nations and thrones will be bereft by the violence of men who, in the name of peace and humanity, are guilty of the most abhorrent crimes.

The Plebiscite in Canada.

THE Hon. Frederick Coudert, late United States Minister to France, said to us some time ago: "One of my surprises in Paris was to see so many statesmen total abstainers from strong drink." He continued: "There is no question that so engages and disturbs the minds of the public men of most of the nations of Europe as the drink question." Most of the civilized countries of the world have manifested a growing impatience at the domination of the saloon, and have by new legislation tightened the restraints and reduced the damages of the liquor traffic. Canada seems to take the lead in temperance sentiment. In its provinces only one-fourth as much liquor per head is consumed as in the United States, and only about one-seventh as much as in the countries of Europe. Military revolutions make a noise in the tramp of armies and booming of cannon, but the mighty moral revolution in Canada has been carried on almost as silently as the dawn ushers in the day, and the world is astonished to see the Dominion leading in one of the most important temperance conflicts ever waged.

On September 29th—one week hence—for the first time in the history of the world, a whole nation is to vote on the question of prohibition. There is to be no other question mixed up with it, and the following ballot is to be voted:

> Are you in favor of the passage of an act prohibiting the importation, manufacture or sale of spirits, wine, ale, beer, cider and all other alcoholic liquors for use as beverages?

The Dominion Parliament has authorized the vote that the lawmakers may ascertain the will of the people on the subject, with the understanding that if the majority of the people desire prohibition, a national prohibitory law will be enacted. Whatever the result of the vote may be, the Plebiscite is in itself a great temperance victory, as it illustrates the high tide of public sentiment on the subject, and evidences the fact that the lawmakers of Canada are not owned by the saloon as they are in some countries. We do not know of another country on the globe whose lawmakers would have the moral courage to submit such a question to the decision of the constituencies, because in no country is the temperance sentiment so advanced as to make such a course politically prudent.

Though it is impossible to foretell with certainty the result of a popular election, there are good reasons for believing that the verdict at the polls will be in favor of prohibition. Under the local option provision of the license law, sixteen out of the eighteen counties of Nova Scotia have secured prohibition. License has been issued in less than half the counties of New Brunswick. There is but one spot in Prince Edward Island where liquor can be legally sold as a beverage, and that is the city of Charlottetown. There are three hundred prohibition towns in the province of Quebec. The number of saloons in Ontario has decreased by one-half of late years. Three-fourths of Manitoba voted no license. The legislatures of the various provinces have been testing the sentiment of the people with the following result: In Nova Scotia, 43,000 for prohibition, 12,000 against it. In Prince Edward Island, 10,000 for prohibition, 3,000 against. In Ontario, 190,000 for prohibition, 110,000 against it. In Manitoba, 19,000 for and 7,000 against prohibition. The majority against the saloon was 130,000 in a vote of 260,000.

The legislature of New Brunswick petitioned the Dominion Parliament to pass a National Prohibitory Law. Quebec and British Columbia have not yet voted on the subject. If the provinces that have declared themselves will only hold their ground, there is a strong likelihood that the temperance people will be successful in the vote on the 29th of September.

The liquor men are pouring out their money like water, and are working in desperation. They were caught in an attempt to bribe the editors of the country papers throughout the Dominion, and the reaction has been against them. The liquor men will get some votes on the plea that the $8,000,000 revenue from the traffic will be lost. The temperance people make the just reply that the $8,000,000 of revenue really costs the state four times that amount. The temperance people are wide awake and are making a strong fight. The battle is wisely led by the Dominion Alliance under the direction of its Secretary, Mr. F. S. Spence. The ministers and churches almost to a man are on the right side of the question, and are waging a brave and vigorous warfare on the saloon. The Catholic Church of America, for the protection of he children, has each year taken advanced against the saloon. Many of the especially in Quebec, who are unfrie the saloon, will not go so far as to fa tional prohibition. Quite a number priests and members of the Catholic are enthusiastic prohibitionists, and a active in the Canadian campaign.

The Plebiscite in Canada will be a v object lesson to all nations. Whate the result of the contest, it will rev strength of the weak, inspire the cou the timid, and enkindle new hopes minds of desponding reformers thro the world. If the vote should go again hibition it would be only the tempora of an ultimately victorious army. If t should be for prohibition there would ror in the camp of the enemy and a lo would be taken toward the overthrow saloon power in North America.

It is to be hoped that the good exan by our Canadian neighbors may be of age to the cause of temperance in the States, and that the prohibition may rapidly to the counties and states Union. Dr. Hargreaves, of Philadel reliable statistician, has shown that ou bill for the year is: domestic spirits, 72 gallons, estimated cost, $432,845,184; al etc., 1,110,609,038 gallons, estimated $716,512,900. This with the imported would bring an annual drink expe $1,196,878,422. This billion and near hundred million dollars is only the n side of the question, there are other d that cannot be imprisoned in bars of la or computed by figures. To portray t tered health, the blighted mental pow corrupted moral sense, the domestic t the blasted hopes, the everlasting ruin. require a parchment as large as the s an inkwell deep as the sea. Love to G our fellowmen should not only dri Lord's children in Canada, but in every and clime, to wage a relentless warfare the liquor traffic and habit, and aboli saloon. FERDINAND C. IGLE

HE MURDERED EMPRESS.

ANARCHY has again displayed its stupidity and diabolical malignity in a crime which has shocked the whole civilized world. By the murder of Elizabeth, ress of Austria, on Sept. 9, there was cause that could be benefited, no g that could be avenged. The unfortunate lady, whose sorrows and misfortunes made her an object of pity, rather of envy, was making a visit to va, in Switzerland, when the crime committed. The tragic death of her son, Rudolph, and other troubles, made life at the Viennese court unbearable for her, and for many years she sought relief and diversion in foreign l. Unostentatiously she mixed with people, and took no part in governme, or in court ceremonies. A more inrusive lady could not be found in royal rts. The man who killed her, a villnamed Luccesi or Laccheni, confesses he hid behind a tree on the quay by n she was to pass to her steamer, when he saw her coming he rushed her and stabbed her to the heart. weapon used was a triangular file bened like a stiletto. An fluential Friend.

ong the applicants for information army offices, in New York, last week, a merchant from Alliance, O., who n the city on business. During his letter reached him from a customer ives near his home, asking his assist- The customer had a son at Camp off who had just returned with his ent from Cuba, but had died soon his arrival at the camp. The family very anxious to have his body sent home for interment, and begged the merchant, as he was in New York, to arrange the matter. At the army office to which he went with his application, he was informed that the only way to get the body was to obtain an order from the Secretary of War, and he had better get some friend in Washington who knew the Secretary to present his request. The merchant thought it over, and sadly replied that he had no friends in Washington, in fact did not know anyone there. A few hours later he returned to the office and said he knew President McKinley, and asked if he would do. The chief said he could not have a better friend, and advised him to wire the President. He did so and the next morning he received the coveted order from Secretary Alger. It is singular that he should not have thought of the President in the first instance, as there was no one so likely to gain for him the favor he wanted. Similar forgetfulness, still more astonishing, is often displayed by Christians who, when in trouble, apply to human friends, but neglect to ask God for help.

It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man (Ps. 118:8).

Heirs Seeking Hidden Wealth.

An eccentric resident of Mount Vernon, N. Y., has caused his heirs considerable trouble and anxiety by his reticence. Since his death, continuous search has been made for his property, but only thirty thousand dollars have been found. His children are convinced that he had accumulated large sums of money, which they think must be deposited in some trust company, or be invested in real estate or in some business partnership in New York. He was extremely prudent and penurious. One suit of clothes used to last him ten years, and he carried an umbrella which he bought thirty years ago. Under these circumstances, the heirs feel sure that more money than has yet been found was left by their father. They cannot be really certain of the fact, but they are resolved that if he did leave property that has not yet been found it shall not be lost to them for lack of energy in searching for it. What a pity it is that the same spirit does not animate the people who are told of the heavenly inheritance which they might have by seeking it through Christ.

Let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us of entering into rest any of you should seem to come short of it Heb. 4:1).

THE LATE EMPRESS ELIZABETH OF AUSTRIA.

A Child's Mistake.

An anxious and distressed family in New York suffered a night of agonizing suspense last week. A beloved child was missing. She was only eight years old and was the pet of the household. It appears that following a crowd, the child went on board a Sound steamer which was lying at the pier. She supposed it was a ferry-boat and she expected that if she kept still, she would have a trip across the river and back. One of the officers of the steamer found her in the course of the voyage to Stamford, Conn., and notified the captain. Nothing could be done then but take her on to Stamford and bring her back the next day. The child was well taken care of, but when she returned on the following day, she found her parents almost distracted with anxiety on her account. It may be hoped that her experience will teach her a lesson that will be useful to her in her future life. She may learn from it that in wandering away at her own fancy, she may be carried farther than she intends to go and have to depend on others for getting back to her Father's house.

The way of man is not in himself: It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps (Jer. 10:23).

A Druggist's Punishment.

A curious case has recently come before a local law court on the complaint of the parents of a child. It appears that a druggist had been annoyed by boys climbing the supports of an awning in front of his store and swinging from the cross-bar. He had warned them away and had tried various means to prevent their indulging in the amusement, but without avail. At last, he caught a boy in the act, and carried him into his store, where he compelled him to swallow a solution of quassia. He released the boy, who ran home crying, under the firm conviction that the druggist had poisoned him. The boy had a very bitter taste in his throat and some unpleasant sensations in his stomach, as a result of swallowing the nauseous stuff, but these were slight troubles, compared with his distress of mind and the expectation that he would soon die. His parents were agonized by fear and had the druggist arrested. They soon found that no serious harm had been done to the boy, but they wanted a balm for the suffering and anxiety they had endured, so they proceeded with the case. The druggist explained what he had administered and had medical evidence to prove that no permanent harm would result to the boy, but the magistrates considering it a "cruel and unusual punishment," fined him as a warning against a repetition of the practice. The cruelty consisted only in the mental suffering the boy and his parents had endured, but the court realized the fact that suffering which was only mental might be very severe. This fact is often forgotten by persons who having listened to modern teaching about eternal punishment, think that if there is no material fire, the doom of the impenitent is not to be dreaded:

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth when ye shall see Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out (Luke 13:28).

The New Peace Commissioner.

As intimated in these columns last week, there was some doubt as to one of the selections of the President for the membership of the Commission which will go to Paris to arrange terms of peace with Spain. Justice White of the Supreme Court declined the appointment when it was first offered to him, and though at the President's request he reconsidered his decision, he arrived at the same conclusion. It was therefore necessary to choose another member in his place. The President accordingly offered the appointment to Hon. George Gray, Senator from Delaware, who has accepted it. Mr. Gray was one of the Commissioners appointed to settle the pending disputes between this country and Canada, but at the President's request, resigned that duty to undertake the more difficult task of the Spanish Commission. Like the other Senators on the Commission, Mr. Gray has been a member of the Senate's Committee on Foreign Relations, and is therefore familiar with the questions at issue. He is the only Democrat of the five, and it is inferred from his attitude on the Hawaiian question, that he will oppose our taking possession of any Spanish islands. He, with his colleagues, will have a consultation with the President and the Cabinet before starting for Paris, and thus united action on the part of the American Commissioners may be assured. The problem of the future of the islands is exceedingly difficult. It would be cruel to restore them to Spain; yet they do not appear to be capable of self-government, at present. We may hope that some just and righteous solution of the problem may be found and that the men whom we are sending to solve it will prove to be like the men of Issachar:

Succumbed in Saving Life.

The death of John Gerry, an ambulance driver attached to Bellevue Hospital, New York, is peculiarly sad. He was sixty-two years old, and for the past five years had been in the service of the hospital. During the unprecedented heat of the first few days of September, he was kept very busy taking the ambulance to different parts of the city to bring in persons prostrated by the heat. None were more ready than he to turn out in response to a call, and there were many calls during those four days, when the daily records of deaths from the heat more than once exceeded forty, and on Saturday exceeded sixty. Early on Saturday morning there was another call, and Gerry went out and brought the sufferer back in his ambulance. He was himself suffering from the intense heat, but he managed to reach his room over the stable. There he rapidly became worse, and before the overworked doctors could give him help, he expired. Of the many sufferers whom he brought in a large number recovered under medical treatment; but he who had aided in saving their lives lost his own in helping them. It is another illustration of the principle of vicarious sacrifice which seems to pervade all our affairs. Men in all walks of life are toiling and laying down their lives for the benefit of others. Those who are doing it in Christ's name and for the saving of the souls of others have, however, the promise of eternal reward:

He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it (Matt. 10:39).

IN JERUSALEM OF TO-DAY

BY HON. SELAH MERRILL D.D. LL.D

WALKING ABOUT ZION.

Some of the Beauties of the Holy City—Its Ancient Trees and Fine Gardens—The Supposed Tomb of Queen "Mariamne, the Beautiful."

WE present an illustration of one of the famous trees about Jerusalem whose history has a tragic chapter which we must narrate. The actors in this tragedy were the government of the province on one side, and on the other certain people who lived in a village nine miles west of the city on the main road to Jaffa. This village is universally known to travelers as Abu Gosh, but it has another name equally well-known, namely, Kuriet-el-Anab, or "City of Grapes." In Hebrew it was called Kirjath Jearim, that is, the "City of Forests" (Josh. 9: 17). It is delightfully situated in a small but charming valley on the top of the mountain and always seemed to me whenever I climbed over those rugged hills, very inviting as a place of rest. It was, however, anything but that to travelers in the early part of the present century. It was a place dreaded by everybody far and near, for many were the victims who here lost either their property or their lives.

This beautiful village was the home of outlaws and robbers who for half a century or more kept all that region in a state of terror. No pilgrim or traveler could pass there without paying heavy blackmail. Among these thieves there was no "sense of honor," and sometimes robbery was only the lightest of atrocities practised upon the sufferers. On one occasion the monks in a small Latin convent which existed in 1810 were all murdered in a single night, their bodies mutilated and their property taken. For a time the power of these outlaws extended as far as the Jordan and the people of Jerusalem lived in constant dread of them.

This powerful family of Abu Gosh, whose name became attached to the village, consisted in its prime of six or more brothers and a large number of sons, besides other relatives, so they could rally of their own kin one hundred men who were strong, daring and wicked, and who domineered the country and defied the government. At one time one of this family, described in his old age as "having an intelligent face but with a keen robber's eye," was governor of Jerusalem, and under his rule the terrible condition of things in the city can easily be imagined. Although it is more than fifty years since this family was thoroughly crushed, traditions of bloody deeds still linger in all that region, and the natives who pass by the place in the night still fear that some evil will befall them.

At last vengeance overtook these cruel men. After repeated attempts the Turkish government overcame them and punishment was meted out by the Power which does not know what mercy means. Some of these robbers were taken to Constantinople, while a number of them went only as far as Jerusalem to meet their doom, for they were all hung upon the tree of which I am speaking. One of the descendants of this family, who was not at all proud of his ancestry, told me the story of the crimes and fates of these men, and it is no wonder that the natives regard this venerable monument with an unusual degree of superstition.

But the curious native mind has gone far beyond this fragment of actual history, and has connected this tree with the fate of the Turkish Empire itself. For many years it was thought, and the matter was frequently mentioned in the most serious manner, that if this tree should fall before the year 1300 of the Mohammedan era, it would indicate the speedy doom of the Mohammedan power. I was residing in Jerusalem at the time and I well remember how earnest many of the people were in this belief. The date was more than ten years ago (1884–1885), but it can readily be imagined with what anxiety among ignorant and superstitious people the fatal point was approached and passed. The soldiers in their barracks and the people who occupy the upper portion of the Armenian Convent, and those in Bishop Gobat's school, have always before them to the west a most picturesque view. Travelers who come from the railway station to the Jaffa Gate have on their left a part only of this view because the carriage road passes under instead of over Mt. Zion. In it is embraced the upper section of the Valley of Hinnom, which is broad and fair, while south of the city it is a narrow, rocky gorge. It is well known that Jerusalem stands on a small rough plateau between two deep valleys, Jehoshaphat on the north and east, Hinnom on the west and south, the two uniting southeast of the city and continuing as one great valley, the Valley of Fire, to the Dead Sea.

To David in his palace on Mount Zion the view to the southeast was wild, that to the east with Olivet resting in majesty against the eastern sky was grand, but that to the west up this valley, adorned with villas, gardens, and all the signs of prosperity, must have called forth from him the exclamation, "beautiful for situation."

UPPER HINNOM VALLEY, LOOKING W. FROM MT. ZION.

THE TEREBINTH TREE WHERE ROBBERS WERE HUNG—THE ARMENIAN CONVENT

One of the finest pictures inside the wall of Jerusalem is that of Armenian Street, including the garden belonging to the Convent and Patriarch's house. The Armenians, who have been brought into world-wide notice the past two years on account of the atrocities they have suffered, are well represented in the Holy City. They have a beautiful church and a school where young men are trained for the ministry; they have an extensive printing establishment; the amount of real property which they hold is large, some of the finest public buildings outside the walls belong to them and the number of Armenian pilgrims that visit Jerusalem every year is considerable, numbering from one to two thousand, and that number and more can readily be accommodated at once in the spacious apartments of the Convent. Owing to recent events the annual flow of pilgrims has for two or more years been necessarily small. This body does not pretend to rival either the Greek or Latin, though they have considerable wealth and influence.

I think it strange that the Turks should ever have surrendered to them such an important section of the city as they have secured on Mount Zion, and the same may be said of the grounds outside the walls. When or how this was accomplished I do not know, yet the finest portion of Jerusalem is theirs. What is called the Armenian Garden, where stand the two noble pines of our illustration, is a long piece of ground containing about twenty-five thousand square yards, extending from the barracks to the south wall of the city, and having the west wall for its western boundary. This land is not occupied by buildings, nor does it appear that it ever has been thus occupied since the destruction of the city by Titus in A.D. 70. Of special interest is the fact that this very ground was the garden of Herod the Great. The famous towers which he erected were just just north of the barracks, one of which still remains. His palace stood near where the Armenian Patriarchate now is, and his beautiful pleasure grounds have not been built upon since the Tenth Legion pitched here its camp. Several times I have urged upon the Patriarch the importance of excavating in this garden, but was always deterred by lack of fun am fully convinced that here we hav gin soil which some day will yield

Commonplace Courtesies.

Curious Customs of Different Peoples—Politeness in Home Life—The Significance of some Peculiar Salutations.

"Be courteous," said St. Peter, and he stipulated that we were to be courteous to one another "as brethren." The character of a people, their degree of advancement in civilization and religion can be told by the manner in which they practice the small amenities of daily life. As the savage becomes informed, he asks: "What is the right thing for me to do?" As he advances further, he questions: "What is the right way in which to do the right thing?" Barbarians have said: "Speak the truth." It remained for the Christian apostle to command that the truth be spoken in love. The more advanced, the more cultivated the home, the more will be the grace with which the small courtesies of every-day life are performed: if the home be truly Christian, these little amenities may become perpetually recurring helps and benedictions—constant reminders that "love and faith are at our side,

And common life is glorified."

Take the cheerful breakfast room, for instance, however humble—every meal and room should be cheerful, you know—and let everybody enter it with hearty, ringing, loving "Good morning"—meaning just that—good morning; and does not the whole day run more smoothly for being started right?

Of the one matter of salutations it is easy to rate a man. Cowering or crouching attitudes, lying prostrate, face downward, are found only in countries where tyranny and slavery exist. Taking the hat off is the relic of a custom of uncovering in the presence of a superior in token of defenselessness, of being disarmed, of non-resistance. Observe, however, that in Christian countries the act is reciprocal. Our President accords to the humblest citizen the courtesy he himself receives.

The curious custom in salutation as found in different countries would fill a book. Some weep for joy; and the greeting, like our hat-lifting and hand-shaking, becomes perfunctory; others, as in Australia, weep, lamenting the loss of friends who have died since the last greeting. In the Orient it is fashionable to remove the shoes instead of the hat. In New Zealand the Maori people rub their foreheads together.

We have a right to be glad that we have practiced courteous greetings until they are automatic with us, and we give our hand and good wishes, without thinking, to everybody; yet is is a pity that we cannot really feel and mean every one (and the oftener the better) the hand-shake as it was originally instituted among Christians—as giving the right hand of fellowship (Gal. 11:9), and that we do not say, instead of "goodbye," the more beautiful form in which this salutation was first uttered: "God be with you."

The Sun-bonnet.

The old-fashioned sun-bonnet which our great-grandmothers wore when they worked their gardens—and sometimes in their villages when they went to church—is coming to the front again, like other "good things that are best." College girls have discoved its usefulness and prettiness, and as a head gear for the almshouse women of Blackwell's Island, it has attained such importance that a model has come over from France of the Breton peasant woman's bonnet, which is said to be the very simplest, prettiest and most effective head and face protector in all history. It is nothing but a straight piece of cloth, folded once, a folded newspaper between where it bends about the face, the ends caught together in the back with a pin, and the little points that hang down each side in front, as we see in Breton pictures, brought about by the putting of folds into place. When washday comes all you have to do is to throw the paper away and laundry your straight piece of cloth, taking pains to starch stiffly.

The Genius of Childhood.

"The child," writes Alex. F. Chamberlain, of Clark University, "must be kept free from the teacher who sees no beauty in the language of the Bible; from the teacher who planes down the themes of her pupils to the level of uniform, mediocre, insipid unchildlikeness, striking out as 'unsuited' or 'out of place' the few instances of spontaneous wit and wisdom that make the oases of literature in a desert of school-bred vacuity. We must never forget that the unknown child whose race-old 'mama,' 'papa,' 'dada,' 'tata,' are known the world over has an immortality far beyond that of the most priggish grammarian and the most self-satisfied follower of the dictionary. 'Cock-adoodledoo' has more inventive genius back of it than many a portly volume that represents the labored discussions of a state convention or a county institute."

Mistaken Discipline.

"I gave a gift to a little friend of mine," says a minister, "a sweet, wee boy, not long ago, and his mother said: 'Won't you thank Mr. W——?' Perfect silence! 'Do you refuse to thank Mr. W——?' And then tears came to the help of the little fellow, as they do at times to the help of most of us, and he just said: 'Mother, I do not like it!' Dear, wee man! It was beautiful! I took him in my arms, and said: 'What would you like?' 'I would like a lamb!' 'Then you shall have your lamb by to morrow morning's post,' I said, 'You will get what you like,' because I was able to say that without doing any harm to the boy."

There is a good point here. Denial for the sake of denial is as much to be avoided as over-indulgence. There is no reason why Polly should have a blue bonnet because she wants a green one, or Tom a ball because he wants a top. This sort of discipline is unnecessary punishment to parent and child. Where real occasion for denial occurs, it will be more effective if Polly and Tom know it is never done except when necessary. In disciplining ourselves, some of us, with a remnant in us of the old ascetic spirit of monasticism, think that in choosing between two ways, the one we don't like is necessarily the right one. This is a mistake. God wants us to do everything that will make us happy, provided it is not in itself wrong.

The Arab School.

An Arab school would be a queer sight to an American child. The school-room is usually a large tent—which is not so bad; but the teacher, who is a priest, lies in front of the class with a long stick in hand—which is worse. The Koran, which is their Bible, is the text-book; the priest reads the lesson out; the boys have to shout it back, rocking to and fro; and if they do not shout loud enough, or rock to and fro steadily enough, the teacher hits them with the stick—which, of course, is quite dreadful, and in the eyes of our little Americans, whom teachers do not flog under what is often quite heavy provocation, it is unlawful. What would be still worse in their eyes would be the fact that only little boys would be sitting around—little sisters could not go. To the little American boy who is being raised up to feel that every little girl is his sister, and should have equal chance to learn with himself, this would be the most deplorable of all deplorable features of a Mohammedan school. He would feel very lonely, too, for he would miss his little sisters.

"HOW DO YOU DO?" AS SAID IN NEW ZEALAND.

Flowers For the Blind.

Many flowers are carried by the West Side Fruit and Flower Mission to the Institution for the Blind, and for this purpose, only the sweet-smelling ones are chosen. When violets, mignonette, sweet peas, sweet verbenas, rose-geraniums, roses or other lovely members of the fragrant floral family come in, it is taken for granted that some of them must bear a dear message of God's love to the sightless ones. "As I entered one end of the ward," said a flower distributor, "a group of blind people at the other end turned smiling faces instantly toward the door, exclaiming, 'Oh, I smell flowers!'" By passing their hands over a bouquet they can frequently tell each flower—though their delicate, reverent touch leaves not a bruise upon a petal. Oh, if we home-makers and home-keepers—husbands and wives, brothers and sisters—who have eyes to see, could pass our hands as lightly and as wisely over the human flowers God gives into our keeping!

BUT A LITTLE CHILD.

"I AM but a little child,
Yet I would like to be
A faithful worker for the Lord;
What work is there for me?"

"A little child can watch,
And keep his actions pure;
A little child can love—
God's love is ever sure.

"A little child can walk
With Jesus all the way
That leads from earth into the joy
Of everlasting day."

A Lesson of Joys.

In her little book, Object Lessons for Junior Work, Miss Ella N. Wood has given many suggestions that are helpful to mothers who are at their wits' end, so to speak, to provide helpful entertainment for children on rainy days. The following outlines an indoor play:

Material: As many cards as you have juniors, and a small pasteboard box. The cards may be small, decorated ones that are inexpensive, or they may be made of cardboard; should be about two inches wide and three inches long, and can be made very pretty by fastening a pansy on one end of the card. To do this, cut a little slip and draw the stem of the pansy through. The juniors will be pleased to press the pansy on the card, and make thus a pretty memento of the joy meeting. On each card write one of the "joy verses" of the Bible, with the reference. Place the cards in a little box, standing them on edge. They are now ready for the meeting.

Make every feature of the meeting bright. Let joy speak everywhere by having the room made cheerful with flowers, leaves and birds. Select the most joyous songs—those that they all know, and can sing with all their hearts. Let the juniors tell you their ideas of joys. Compare the joys we have in our home life with the joys that God has in store for those that obey him. Impress the thought that the surest way to get joys is to give them. At the proper time let the juniors come forward, one at a time, take a card from a box and read a verse. The beauty of the card will please them and help to impress the text and its lesson on their minds.

Curious Dolls.

Queen Elizabeth, who, as a little girl, was very fond of dolls, had in her doll-family a quaint puppet made of the bark of trees, put together so artistically that it looked as if it was carved out of a piece of mahogany. It was two hundred years old when it came into her possession, and had such an extensive wardrobe that the princess had a maid to assist her in making this dolly's toilettes. Another of her dolls came from Spain; its garments were all made by ladies of high degree, and the stitching was open to criticism though the magnificent fabrics were not. The Duchess of Kinloch, who lived before the Reformation had a wonderful doll, which could be made to "yawn, laugh and make an expression as if in pain," by merely pressing upon the eyes. Its hair, it is said, had been taken from the head of a wealthy and noble lady who had lost her life for the sake of her religion.

The Finger Play.

Froebel's system, writes M. B. Mosher, comes to the mother's rescue with alluring games and songs which will afford her an endless means of interesting baby, and which establish a right activity before the wrong one can assert itself. One of these is a set of finger games for the mother to teach baby while still in arms.

This is the mother good and dear,
This is the father with hearty cheer,
This is the brother stout and tall,
This is the sister who plays with her doll,
And this is the baby, the pet of all,
Behold the good family great and small.

And as the child personifies his fingers and regards them as a small family which he can control, he has something to engage his thoughts and interest. Again if the mother wishes to put baby to sleep, instead of having a rebellious scene, she can suggest that the little fingers are tired and wish to sleep, and to the accompaniment of a soft lullaby, the baby and the fingers fall asleep together.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Reading Matter for Bookless People — Male Triflers—Some Boisterous Games — About a Blind Baby.

A FRIEND in Dakota writes to me about one of her neighbors, a miner, who was badly injured in an accident some time ago. She speaks of the dearth of reading in the place, and would be very glad if papers and magazines could be sent to her that she might give them to this poor fellow and to other neighbors. Now I have myself a number of books and papers which I will gladly send, but, unfortunately, I do not feel quite sure about the post-office address. Will this lady kindly write to me again and give me her full address, naming town, county and State. We cannot be too careful, dear friends, always to give our post-office address very plainly. A good many places in this country have the same names, and it is always well to be quite sure of the exact locality. I feel very strongly about this matter of sending on good reading from one hand to another. Those of us who have periodicals which we do not preserve for binding should not use them to paper our closet-shelves or kindle our fires, unless we are very certain that there are no others to whom they would be a boon. The story or article which has pleased you will please and help someone else, and it is your privilege to pass it along.

YOUR letter, Viola, in regard to the young man who is engaged to your friend, and, who, since the breaking of the engagement, has paid some attention to you, interested me very much. I feel quite sure that this young man is a trifler unworthy the attention of such a young woman as yourself. He seems to belong to that unworthy class of men who find it interesting to get silly girls in love with them, and then meaning nothing serious, drop their attentions and find their pleasure elsewhere. In short, if I do not do the young man injustice, he is what might be called a masculine flirt, and of all contemptible beings this style of person is the most so. Pray, have nothing more to do with him. In these days no self-respecting and dignified young woman can afford to waste her time in thinking about a man who has so little to recommend him as the one concerning whom you write. Life is full of opportunities for helping others and for our own development; it is too short to be wasted in regrets over people who are not morally up to the right standard.

ANOTHER letter, at which I must glance, is that of Louise D. She narrates a little domestic scene, in which she felt aggrieved, because her mother seemed to her unjust. Has it occurred to you, my dear Louise, that your mother is more than twice your age; that it cannot be agreeable to her to be made fun of, even in a good humored way before the family and her friends, and that your mother has a right to take her own stand and manage affairs in her own way? In the little passage of which you tell me, I am sorry to say that I think you were entirely to blame, and I feel sure you will see it in the right light and I ask your mother's pardon.

"DON'T swear, boys, but fight," said one of our captains before Santiago, and among words which will pass into history and never be forgotten is that immortal speech of Captain Phillips' on the deck of the Texas, after the gallant fight in which Cervera's fleet was routed. "I want to say here that I believe in God the Father Almighty. I want all you officers and men with bared heads to thank God for this bloodless victory." It is the bright spot amid the darkness of war that we have had Christian men in command, Christian men in the ranks, a Christian spirit in the nation.

F. A. C. asks my opinion about kissing games. I think there can be but one opinion of these games entertained by all thoughtful people. They certainly are rude and boisterous and are likely to lead to embarrassing and disagreeable situations. So far as I know, young people have at present abandoned the thought of playing games of this kind except in very primitive places. There are games into which familiarity of this kind does not enter and there is really no excuse for playing them. No young man who respects himself, whether a Christian or not, if he has the slightest claim to be considered a gentleman, will ever speak disrespectfully of girls or women. Should you hear a man speak in this way, you will be quite safe in dropping him from your list of acquaintances.

ANOTHER friend writes, and I have read her letter with an aching heart, that her little baby is blind. She has had the best advice possible to obtain in her region, but the occulists agree that there is no probability that the baby will regain his sight. I cannot advise this friend to resort to so-called Christian Science in the hope that it will heal her little one. She has a perfect right herself to go to God and ask him, if it be consistent with his will, to restore the lost gift and heal the blindness. Certainly God is able to do for his children anything of this sort that seems to him best, but we are not living under the dispensation of miracles, and ordinarily our dear Heavenly Father works according to law. I cannot think that any good purpose beyond that of a keen disappointment will be had by taking the baby daily or weekly to a mental healer. There is something very specious and inviting in the present day creed of mental scientists who counsel one to enter into silence and to cultivate an atmosphere of peace; but ages before "Don't Worry Clubs" were even thought of, our dear Lord himself enjoined upon us to enter into our closet, and having shut the door, to pray to our Father which seeth in secret. Jesus said, "Consider the lilies how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin," and he bade us, "Take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself." Your baby being so young, dear friend, will probably never know how much he misses in not being able to see. Other senses will grow stronger and more sensitive, and to some degree replace him for the lost one.

IN the city where I live there is a blind gentleman who lost his sight in early infancy. He engages in business with great success; walks to and fro between his house and his office without a cane, and when walking in company with a man who sees, will often, on arriving at a certain point, say, "Well, good morning. I must leave you here. I have an errand around this corner." Apparently the loss of sight has not handicapped him at all. Several years ago in Columbia College, New York, two young men passed through the various classes and were graduated with great distinction. One of them was blind. His brother, during all his preparatory and college course, read and studied with him, and was literally eyes to the blind. This man is to-day a successful journalist, so you see one may have a very useful and happy life even without possessing all one's complement of senses. Do not be unhappy about your baby. I know you will love him all the more because the dear little fellow cannot see. Talk to him about the beautiful things of God just as if he could see them; surround him with music; make his life as bright and cheery as possible, and let him play with other children, and then day by day say to yourself, "God's will is best for my child as for me, and I am happy to accept it even though I cannot understand why this form of trial was sent to me."

Matthew Arnold's prevailing spiritual mood is best indicated by a simple paradox, that glad sadness best describes his feeling—a sadness quietly, cheerfully, sometimes even gaily borne, as of one who is content that it shall be so, and will live his life as becomes a man, however much of it be set to a minor key. And so his most ardent prayer is to be saved from the enfeebling and corroding influence that lurks in perpetual doubt—to be saved from weak passion and from vain and vague regret.

Thou, who dost dwell alone—
Thou, who dost know thine own—
Thou, to whom all are known
From the cradle to the grave—
Save, oh! save.
O where thy voice doth come
Let all our doubts be dumb,
Let all words be mild,
All strifes be reconciled.
All pains beguiled!
Light bring no blindness,
Love no unkindness,
Knowledge no ruin,
Fear no undoing!
From the cradle to the grave—
Save, oh! save.

We cannot kindle when we will
The fire which in the heart resides;
The spirit bloweth and is still,
In mystery our soul abides
But tasks in hours of insight will'd
Can be through hours of gloom fulfill'd.

Two supreme spiritual convictions stand out as the very sum and substance of Browning's religion. The one is the absolute opinion of power and love in God, and the other is the strenuous joy of the life that is to be. The absolute union of power and love in God. If a man hold that, then the light of it floods all his days and no care can ever long depress, nor any sorrow slay.

I believe in God and truth,
And love . . . .
But chiefly, when I die . . . .
Know my last state is happy, free from doubt.
Or touch of fear.

In his early poem "Paracelsus," he utters in words which General Gordon declared had more often inspired him to conquer gloom than any others outside the Bible, this same great faith in the high life that is to be:

I shall arrive! What time, what circuit first,
I ask not; but unless God shall send his hail
Or blinding fireballs, sleet or stifling snow,
In some time, his good time, I shall arrive;
He guides me and the bird. In his good time.

Austria-Hungary (Tyrol).

TYROL is a prosperous county of Austria-Hungary; it is a mountainous region, containing about 800,000 inhabitants, of which one-half are German-speaking people, about 200,000 speak Italian, and the rest some form of the Slavonic language. Agriculture, forestry, mining, and the production of silk form the chief pursuits of the thrifty people.

Every householder has his own piece of cultivatable land, and clothes himself and his family with stuffs spun and woven at home from the wool and flax produced in the neighborhood.

To form from this material the quaint costumes which are pictured in the above illustration, from a photograph taken in the Tyrol by an agent of The Singer Manufacturing Co., the Tyrolese women find the Singer Sewing Machines most satisfactory.

A VOICE FROM HEAVEN.

I SHINE in the light of God—
His image stamps my brow—
Through the shadow of death my feet hath trod,
And I reign in glory now.
No breaking heart is here,
No keen and thrilling pain,
No wasted cheek where the burning tear
Hath rolled and left its stain.

I have found the joys of heaven,
I am one of the angel band;
To my head a crown is given,
And a harp is in my hand.
I have learned the song they sing,
Whom Jesus hath made free—
And the glorious walls of heaven ring
With my new-born melody.

No sin, no grief, no pain—
Safe in my happy home—
My fears all fled, my doubts all slain
My hour of triumph come.
O, friends of my mortal years!
The trusted and the true!
You're walking still in the vale of tears,
But I wait to welcome you

Do I forget? Oh, no!
For memory's golden chain
Shall bind my heart to the hearts below
Till they meet and touch again.
Each link is strong and bright,
While love's electric flame
Flows freely down, like a river of light,
To the world from whence I came.

Do you mourn when another star
Shines out from the glorious sky?
Do you weep when the voice of war
And the rage of conflicts die?
Why then should your tears roll down,
Or your heart be sorely riven,
For another gem in the Saviour's crown,
And another soul in heaven?

Superstition in Brazil.

The majority of the Brazilian people are in the deepest ignorance, writes a missionary. Few can read, and when you tell them you have the Gospels of Matthew, etc., for sale, they ask you for the Gospel of St. Jose, St. Pedro, etc. I think they must have named all the saints in the calendar to me.

A beggar came to the window with a bag and metal cross. I asked him what he wanted.

"Alms for the souls (to bring them out of purgatory)," he replied.

"Our souls are already saved in this house," I said; "and those who have died don't need alms."

"Yes, sir; but they serve to buy candles with."

"The souls don't need candles," I rejoined.

"Naoha duvida (There is no doubt of that)," he admitted, with a grin, as he went off, finding there was nothing to be had.

The alms generally go to buy drink. Almost every day we are pestered with these religious beggars, carrying little images on a plate, covered with a colored cloth, and asking for alms for the particular saint. There is St. Sebastian, the saint for small-pox and other epidemics, and Santa Lucia, who has wonderful virtue for eye disease. One day a beggar offered to let Mrs. McCall kiss this saint for 200 reis. I need not say she declined the honor! Santa Rita delivers from wife-beating husbands; St. Erophe protects from hunger; Sts. Antonio and Gonsalves secure good marriages; St. Benedict works miracles, and is the beloved of the negroes; St. Amaro cures wounds and bruises. Nossa Senhora (Our Lady) is a host in herself; her name is literally legion.

Have You Asthma or Hay-fever?

Mr. [illegible] at last reports a positive cure for Asthma and Hay-fever in the West African Kola Plant. [illegible] so much has lately been said in the medical journals. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Va., writes that a friend had Asthma of thirty years' standing, and Mrs. L. Johnson of No. 417 Second St., Washington, D. C., testifies that for years she had to sleep propped up in her chair. Have [illegible] to lie down night or day. The Kola Plant [illegible] Mr. Alfred C. Lee, editor of the Farmers' Magazine of Washington, D. C., was also cured, [illegible] not [illegible] per cent. of [illegible] worst in the world. Others [illegible] also [illegible] testimony proving it to be a wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant [illegible] for the cure for Hay-fever sufferers about it, so as to give them a chance to try it. Any sufferer from Asthma or Hay-fever can send your address to the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, who [illegible] free, will send a Large Case by mail [illegible] of The Christian Herald who reads it. In return they only request that when cured you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you nothing, and you should surely send for it

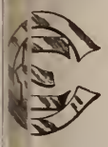
Trials and How to Bear them.

God's Promise to his Afflicted Children who Still Trust in Him. Isa. 41: 8-20.



New to the people of his day was the prophet's message on the trials that were impending. Hitherto the people had expected that as God's chosen people they would enjoy immunity from trials. Now they were told not that the trials would not come but that God would be with them in the suffering to support them. They were not to lament or repine, not even to look around for a human deliverer, but to trust their God. He reminds them that he has all power, which they knew; and also tells them that he is full of love and sympathy, which they had not yet realized. The prophet's message applies to God's children in all ages. Trials will come and there are none who wholly escape. They do not always come as punishment, but come they will. How should the child of God behave under them? If in looking back over his past life he sees sins of omission or commission that may have offended God, he must repent and amend his life. If the trial be a mystery for which he can perceive no cause, then he has an opportunity to manifest his faith and love. "Though he slay me," said the patriarch, "yet will I trust in him." Whether the trial come as punishment or as discipline, God has a right to expect from us the confidence and trust of those who know him and love him. We may shrink from walking through the dark valley, but how consoling and encouraging is the promise that his right hand will give support and his help be at hand! How many of God's people have found it true! The affliction that seen afar, seemed certain to crush them found them when it came upon them with strength not their own and a fortitude which surprised even themselves. God would have us put out of our life all apprehension and foreboding, trusting for our confidence the promise that no affliction that may come upon us, will be with us to support us.

The Call of Abraham.

The Turning-Point in a Great Life. Gen. 12: 1-4.

More than "a turning-point in a great life" was this emigration of Abraham. The whole world was to feel the result of it and is feeling it to this day. It was the beginning of the world's religious history. Out of the darkness of heathenism, but of the awful beliefs and rites and sacrifices which, as we learn from monuments, constituted the religion of the day, Abram came forth to receive the revelation of the true God. It was the dawn which grew brighter and brighter until it culminated in the appearance of the Sun of Righteousness. At his father's death, complete isolation was necessary. Abram must break with his kindred and henceforth live alone. The simple statement that, "the Lord said unto Abram," is all that is vouchsafed to us. Did he appear personally in visible form and speak to him in an audible voice? Or did he make his will known through Abram's conscience, as he now reveals his will to his children? We are not told, but it is clear that Abram understood the call. He was to be separate from all other families. He must give up home associations, the country in which he had been reared and go forth a wanderer on the face of the earth. The call of God often involves loss at the beginning. When Christ called his disciples, they left all and followed him. Even now, the man who resolves to follow Christ finds that there are some things that he must give up. But there is compensation. "I will bless thee," was the promise God gave to Abram. What is God's blessing worth? Abram thought it worth all that he was called to leave and he felt sure it would be bestowed. The promise is still valid. To every man the world offers its pleasures, its rewards, which are often very attractive. On the other side is renunciation, with God's promise of blessing. No man is encouraged to try to make the best of both worlds. It may be that he who follows Christ will be blessed in this world, too; but he seeks those to follow him who are prepared to suffer adversity and the loss of all things for his sake.

OMAHA EXPOSITION.

Special Day Personally Conducted Tour via Pennsylvania Railroad.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has arranged a special eight-day personally-conducted tour to the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition at Omaha on October 1, allowing four full days at the Exposition. . . . Europe Mourns the Dead Empress . . .

HE Austrian Empress, slain at Geneva by an anarchist assassin, has been laid at rest, and the latest tragedy in the House of Hapsburg passes into history. It is for Europe perhaps the most tragic event of the century. The killing of that amiable, kindly, excellent woman, herself a bereaved mother ter, burdened with sorrows that only a mother can know, is those crimes, which touch the heart- n of mankind, and cause all differ- e rank to be merged in deepest sympathy. Poor and rich ein America and Europe, r the stricken Emperor, hor the cowardly crime. ywhere interest in the gy continues to be in- tand nations are won- it what steps will be e to protect their er gainst the class of a ns who, almost one generation, id low two Pres- n of the United a Czar, the late n President, and e Empress of Austria. No death of one who wore a crown ever evoked more sincere tributes of grief and respect. The aged Prince Luitpold, who for twelve years has ruled Bavaria as king without a crown, and who, even with his weight of eighty years, is one of the pillars of the German Empire, fainted by the coffin of his illustrious relative. The German Emperor joined the funeral procession, and the poorest of the populace mingled with rulers and princes in mourning for her whom they had all learned to love and revere. During the forenoon, kings, princes and grand dukes from the German states, Russia, Italy and Greece arrived to do honor to the dead Empress. At 1 P. M. the German Kaiser was met at the station by the bereaved Emperor; the two drove to the Hofburg, and William II. placed on Elizabeth's coffin two wreaths for himself and wife. At 4 P. M. the great funeral car, drawn by eight black horses, and preceded and followed by a long

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Reader, Binghamton, N. Y. What is the amount of Spain's national debt, and where is it held?

The debt of Spain is given in the Statesman's Year-Book at nearly two billions of dollars, besides $600,000,000 of Cuban debt, a floating debt of about $100,000,000, and an indebtedness to the Bank of Spain. It is chiefly held by French bondholders, which partly accounts for French sympathy for Spain.

W. A. N., Angus, Ia. What is the Sabbath law of the United States? Have local boards authority to close stores, stop games, etc., on the Sabbath day?

By the common law, Congress may sit on Sunday but Courts cannot. Sunday verdicts have been declared void, and as a general rule all contracts made and judicial proceedings taken on Sunday are also void. Each State legislates for itself. "Common labor," games, etc., are expressly prohibited by statute in many States, but exceptions are made in order to permit absolutely necessary duties. Usually household work, the care of animals, and all works of necessity or benevolence are excluded. Local boards or officials have no power to pass Sunday laws, nor any authority, except to enforce existing State statutes. For full and accurate information, see A Treatise on Sunday Laws, published by the Lawyers' Co-operative Publishing Co., Rochester, N. Y.

L. B., Rahway, N. J. Of what nationality is Lipton, the rich philanthropist?

He was born in Glasgow, of Irish parents, forty-two years ago. He visited the United States when fifteen years old, and the foundation of his great fortune was laid with the money he saved by hard work here.

Z. V., Paxtonville, Pa. Where and who are the original blue-blooded people?

The term is really now a meaningless phrase. Originally it implied descent from the aristocracy. The French form is sang bleu (blue blood), but the notion is Spanish. The old Spaniards, who trace their pedigree beyond the time of the Moorish conquest, say that their venous blood is blue, while that of common people is black.

W. H. A., Crothersville, Ind. In what age of the world did Attila invade Rome, who was he, where did he reign as king, and over what territory or land?

Attila (called by the ancient Germans Etzel or Atzel), was King of the Huns, and ruled from 434 to 453. He was essentially a warlike monarch, and avowed an intention to secure for his people the dominion of the world. He was called "The Scourge of God," and even his own subjects regarded him with dread. He conquered a great part of Europe and Asia, and invaded Roman territory, but was defeated by Etius in 451, at a time when he was threatening the destruction of the Roman Empire.

Markus Calmet, Mich. 1. If a man in his young days gives all property to the church and mission work, relying on the promise in Mark 10:29 that he will be rewarded a hundredfold, but can not come to believe the promise at later in life, because the property are for his family? 2. Does the Government or the superintendent of Public Instruction responds to appeals on behalf of the pension of a district where lepers are found what service should be taken?

1. The promise appears to me to be that the compensations of the man who devoted to follow Christ will be worth a hundredfold what he leaves. You cannot suppose that Christ intended to promise a man who gave up a house, that he would afterward have a hundred houses. Besides, the repetition of the word "mothers," proves that Christ was not promising literal reimbursement. No man could have a hundred mothers. The apostles themselves did not acquire property in following Christ. Paul's statement, Phil. 3: 7, 8, shows in what sense the promise is to be understood. The things given up are worthless compared with the things gained. 2. We do not know whether the courts would supply a remedy through mandamus or in some other way. A lawyer familiar with Michigan law would be able to tell you. Perhaps, however, a better course than the costly and uncertain appeal to the law, would be to get the Assemblyman and Senator representing the district in the State Legislature to use their influence. That is, always supposing that the people are unable to take the best course of organizing the school and paying a teacher, until State aid can be secured.

M. A., New York City. During my summer travels I passed through lower Virginia, and was much impressed with the interest that one little Sunday School at Aaron's Creek displayed in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S good work for children at Mont-Lawn. They showed a sympathetic interest in all the details of your fresh-air charity, especially in its spiritual features; and expressed a desire to help in the good work for children. The little school was full of the spirit of Christian faith and endeavor. Yet its own needs were painfully apparent to the visitor. It has no library—no books or help whatever, except the quarterlies and song books.

Perhaps some of our readers may wish to help this Virginia mountain Sunday School to some good reading matter, old libraries, etc. Our correspondent gives us the address of the Superintendent, Mr. Sneed, Nelson, Mecklenburg county, Virginia.

J. M. S., Quakertown, Ind. What is the meaning of Paul's statement that nothing is unclean of itself? How can a man's esteeming anything unclean make it unclean?

Paul was sweeping away all the dietary and ceremonial laws of the Jewish code. They were so much rubbish from his standpoint. At the same time, he did not wish to hurt any one's prejudices. If a man had honestly and sincerely come to the conclusion that a certain practice was sinful, and yet indulged in it, he would be committing sin, because he would be doing what he believed to be wrong. The practice might not be really sinful, but it would be sinful for him, because it was a violation of his conscience. The Talmud gives a case in point. If a Jew in traveling lost count of the days of the week and was found working on the Sabbath, he was blameless; but if knowing it was the Sabbath he was working, he would deserve to be stoned.

Miss Annie C. Malcolm, Fogo, Newfoundland, writes that there is great suffering and distress among the poor of her neighborhood, and that any gift of clothing sent by friends will be acceptable. She adds: "It would make your heart ache to see the children going around barefooted and nearly naked in the severe weather. Some of the people in our section declare that they have bought no clothing for nearly two years, and can barely catch enough fish for food."

J. E. P., Springfield, O. 1. They are not comparable. One may have considerable character, yet without pronounced wisdom. Worldly wisdom is not so valuable as character, which represents what the man really is. 2. A corporation is where a company of citizens organize for a definite purpose and secure the assent of the State to carrying on certain work under a corporate name; the corporation enjoying certain rights, privileges and immunities which would not otherwise be enjoyed, and bearing the stamp of State approval.

J. B. E., DeWitt, Iowa. 1. Are we to understand Zech. 14: 4–11 as a prophecy to be literally fulfilled? 2. Are the last nine chapters of Ezekiel an intimation of the return of the Jews to their own land? 3. Is there any prophecy in the Bible implying a future conflict between Germany and Austria on the one hand with Russia and France on the other? 4. Will the battle of Armageddon be fought near Jerusalem?

1. Probably not in exact details. The prophet's reports of his visions would naturally be affected by his experience. It would be practically impossible for him to describe such conditions as will exist in the millennium. Divine revelation was always at the disadvantage of flowing through human channels. If a writer of the time of Washington attempted to describe the life of our day he could not have done it fully even if he had received a vision of it. The steamships, railroads, and telegraphs would have been mysteries he could not comprehend. 2. Ezekiel doubtless expected that his prophecies would be fulfilled at the return which subsequently took place under Nehemiah. But, like other prophets, he did not know how long an interval there would be. As the supernatural events he describes have not taken place we must presume they are yet future. 3. We do not know of any such prophecy. France seems rather to be in prophecy an antagonist of Russia. 4. That is the only inference that can be drawn from prophecies of the event.

A. H. B. 1. What do you consider the best harmony of the Gospels enabling a student to get a consecutive idea of the life of Christ? 2. How can a young minister acquire ease in the pulpit and the power of impromptu speaking? 3. What are the best helps in the making of sermons?

1. You could not have a better harmony than that contained in the Teacher's Bibles issued as premiums with this journal. 2. It comes with practice and a thorough mastery of the subject. 3. There are innumerable aids published. Perhaps the most helpful and effective in your case would be a study of Spurgeon's sermons, which would show you how he divided a subject and arranged his ideas. Parker's People's Bible, published by Funk and Wagnalls, New York, is full of suggestions to preachers.

A. C., New Whatcom, Wash. It is stated that Dr. Talmage some time ago preached a sermon showing that persons dying impenitent would have an opportunity of accepting him after death. Is that true?

No; it is emphatically untrue. Dr. Talmage holds, and has always preached, that the Bible holds out no hope of the impenitent having such an opportunity after death.

A. L. G., Fort Worth, Tex. Who is the author of the poem in which occur the lines:

"Oh, it was pitiful! In a whole city full,
Help there was none"?

It is from Hood's famous poem, One Unfortunate, and can be found in any collection of his works.

Mrs. T. L. T., Beresford, S. D. Who is the author of the hymn containing these words:

"And while the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return"?

The lines are the first of six stanzas (Hymn I. No. 88), to be found in any collection of Watts's Hymns, 1788.

R. H. S., Gordonsville, Va. In what sense "four" represent humanity?

Bahr and other writers on the subject of symbolic numbers, state that the first of which is the square, was held by the Israelites as the symbol "both of the world as the manifestation of God according to the contents of the symbolists, 3 represents divinity and 4 humanity, the two united being which represents the union of divinity and humanity. The attempt to assign to number four any of the relations of a sacred character, however, belongs to the main of speculative rather than to any particular race or religion.

Inquirer, Cleveland, O. Is the estimate of the cost of spirits and beer quoted by Dr. Iglehart from Dr. Greaves of Philadelphia in your issue of Sept. 2 extravagantly excessive? It does not cost anything like the sum named to produce a gallon of spirits or beer.

Dr. Iglehart did not undertake to estimate the cost of production. His purpose was showing what a stupendous sum the people of the United States spent for intoxicating liquors. Dr. Greaves reckon that there are, on the average, sixty drinks to a gallon of liquor, which is below rather than above the mark, and that each drink is usually sold for ten cents; and that there are on the average one hundred drinks to the gallon of liquor, each drink being sold for ten cents, you will find that the estimate is not by any means excessive.

OUR FAMINE ORPHANS IN INDIA.

How the Waifs Rescued During the Famine by the Missionaries from Starvation are being Supported by Christian Charity and Trained for Christ.

AMONG the thousands of lives saved in India by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the terrible months of famine, none are more interesting than the children. Many of these were orphans whose parents perished from hunger before relief reached them, or died of exhaustion while seeking food for their helpless little ones. The missionaries took charge of the tiny waifs, who otherwise would have died of hunger and neglect. From a worldly point of view, no course could have been more imprudent. The Mission Boards at home were reducing the appropriations in order to avoid the burden of debt, and had warned the missionaries that the expenses of the stations must be kept down. The income of a missionary is so small, at the best of times, that there is no margin for the support of adopted children. Under the circumstances how could the missionaries take these little orphans into their homes? But the love of Christ was in their hearts and for the sake of Him who loved little children, they accepted the charge, and the poor, haggard, famine-stricken creatures grew into bright, healthy, happy children, full of spirit and energy.

ONE OF RAMABAI'S ORPHANS.

It was a work of faith, for there were no funds in sight. During the famine the missionaries did not feel the burden. Through the liberality of the readers of this journal and of Christian friends in England and other lands they were able to provide for the increased family; but no one knew that, long before the children could support themselves, all such funds would be exhausted. The experience of Mr. Muller, Pastor Spurgeon and others who have undertaken the support of orphans, seems to show that God takes special care of those who engage in such work. So the missionaries in India have found it hitherto. Some of them, like Mr. Jenning, of Narsinghpur, have as many as two hundred of these little waifs dependent upon them. Rev. Rockwell Clancy, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission at Allahabad, says in his report to the conference: "We promised the Lord we would not refuse to take any child which might be brought to us. We had no money for the support of children; but believing that God would supply all our needs, we received all who came. Soon all our available accommodation was crowded, and tents pitched in the compound were soon filled. The condition of the children was indescribably sad. Many of them were so emaciated that they could not walk alone. It made our hearts ache to see these poor, little, naked, living skeletons." Some of them were sent to Peshawar, Meerut and other places where Mr. Clancy learned that Christian care would be afforded them. "We have now," he reports, "two hundred boys and girls for whose support we receive nothing from the Missionary Society or from the government. God has cared for them and will continue to do so."

In the stations of the Methodist Mission alone, there are over two thousand orphan waifs; and in those of the American Board, the Church of the Disciples, the Presbyterian and other missions all over India, there are sheltered probably a still larger number of these little ones. Besides these, Pundita Ramabai has received over five hundred girls, of whom one hundred and fifty were transferred to other orphanages, and the remainder are still being fed and taught in her institutions. It is gratifying to learn that of the elder girls thus received, a large proportion have voluntarily asked for Christian baptism, and Ramabai, after satisfying herself of their fitness, consented to the rite being administered. Thirty-five were baptized during the month of July last. The Rev. W. W. Bruere baptized them in the Bhima River on confession of their faith, and this is only one of several such scenes that have been witnessed there. Over two hundred girls, in all, from Ramabai's institutions have thus taken upon them the name of Christ. From other missions come reports of similar spiritual results, and as time passes and the children grow older, a still larger harvest may be expected. It is impossible to estimate the value of such work in the evangelization of India. Each of the children thus receiving Christian training and education will go forth to their occupations or household duties a centre of Christian influence, effective as no foreign missionary could be, in spreading abroad a knowledge of the Gospel. The missionaries fully appreciate the opportunity God has thus placed in their hands through the famine, and are anxiously inquiring whether the church of Christ will enable them to avail themselves of it. The support of a child involves an expenditure of from fifteen to twenty-five dollars a year, according to age and location. To meet this outlay, the missionaries have no resources but such as may be given them for the purpose. It would be a grievous thing if through lack of funds any child providentially rescued from heathenism and placed under Christian influence had to be given up for lack of means. We believe that God will interpose to prevent such a misfortune, and that his people will be led to contribute all the money required.

MISS ESTHER B. FOWLER AND FOUR OF HER FAMINE ORPHANS.

As our readers are aware, they have already a large share in this good work. Pundita Ramabai sends us the names of a hundred girls who are being maintained by funds contributed by our readers. A photograph of one of them forms the initial to this article. Miss Esther B. Fowler, of Sholapur, sends us a photograph of herself and four of the little waifs who are the wards of our readers. Bright little creatures, she says they are, scarcely recognizable as the little skeletons whom she received a year ago. "When I opened your letter," she writes, "and saw your check, I could scarcely believe my eyes. I had been praying for money to keep these dear little ones, and here was the answer. My heart was filled with praise to God and gratitude to the Christian people in the home land whose money you have sent me. May God bless them every one for thinking of these dear little children whom he has given us to train for him! You have no idea how much anxiety you have saved me by this timely help. It is sometimes hard to have the faith one should have in God's providential care; but this unexpected help is a lesson to me to trust and not be afraid. I pray earnestly that God may richly bless every one who has contributed ever so little towards this work. Will you ask them to pray for me that I may be enabled to train them to be God-fearing, God-loving women, and that they may pass the blessing on to their heathen sisters. I send you the portraits of a few of them, that your readers may know the kind of children who are being fed and taught through their bounty."

Among the missionaries who are being thus helped to support the orphans, are men and women of all denominations. Should any of our readers be willing to undertake the support of an orphan under the care of a missionary of any particular denomination, we shall be happy to arrange the matter and to ascertain for them the name, age and other particulars relating to their adopted child.

"Silent Sufferers."

With the opening of the Cuban ports of Bahia Honda and Jucara, the United States government is now able to accomplish what it has been endeavoring to do since the beginning of our trouble with Spain, i.e., relieve the distressed reconcentrados. Food cargoes will be sent from both ports to the interior and distributed under the United States flag.

The "Committee of Relief for Silent Sufferers," appointed by this journal in Havana in March last, has made a partial report of its work, through Mr. C. M. Pepper. The Committee consisted of Gen. Lee, ex-officio Chairman; Mr. E. R. Johnston, Treasurer; Mr. Pepper, Secretary, and several other journalists, the object being to afford relief to those families who had been reduced from a condition of comparative comfort to the verge of absolute want. There were in Havana and other cities hundreds of families of this class. Mr. J. F. Carbonell, a business man of Havana, was disbursing agent of the Committee. A Sub-Committee—consisting of the wives of Americans in Havana—was formed and by this means much good was done.

One of the sufferers relieved through this channel was the mother of Marti, the Cuban patriot-martyr. General Lee and Mr. Johnston also found many starving families to whom aid was extended by the Committee. The work was done quietly and unostentatiously. In all $2,500 was appropriated for this special work among the "Silent Sufferers." Mr. Carbonell's Committee took receipts from upwards of fifty families who were relieved.

EUROPE MOURNS THE DEAD EMPRESS.

procession, consisting of mourning royalties, the Empress' servants, and detachments of horse and foot soldiers, left the Hofburg. At the Church of the Capuchins, Cardinal Gruscha, Archbishop of Vienna, received the body, which was placed on the catafalque in the church. The Emperor stood at the foot throughout the services.

In the quiet old church where generations of Hapsburgs await the final summons to judgment which will come to king and to peasant, the murdered Empress was laid, her journeys ended, her sorrows over. It cannot be long before the aged Emperor will rest by her side. He has stood blow after blow in his household with a firmness of soul that has commanded the admiration and respect of his fellowmen. His brother, Maximilian, fell a victim to his own imprudent ambition to rule over Mexico; his son Rudolph committed suicide, and now his beloved wife has fallen under a murderer's stroke. The death of the Empress may be the final blow, although the Emperor has thus far borne himself with extraordinary fortitude.

Geneva, where this crime occurred, is one of the principal cities of Switzerland, and famous in history as one of the early seats of the Reformation. It was the home of Calvin, and the citadel of Protestantism in western Switzerland. There the great reformer whose name has been inseparably associated with Gospel work and teaching for centuries past, found secure protection from outside foes, and zealous assistance in carrying into practice his rules of Christian life and deportment. The story of the Reformation is largely a history of Geneva, and for this reason the city has a strong hold upon evangelical Christians. The Swiss are law-abiding, liberty-loving, and nowhere has the assassination of the Empress been more deeply deplored. It is a peculiar fact, however, in connection with the tragedy that the very respect for the law which in Switzerland, as in America, goes hand and hand with liberty and order, may save the assassin from capital punishment. Switzerland is divided into cantons, each canton having powers very similar to those of our American States, and the canton of Geneva has not capital punishment among its penalties. Therefore the assassin's life may be spared, unless some legal ground is discovered for delivering him up to a foreign country. The murderer, whose name is given as Luccheni or Lucchesi, may be extradited on the request of the Austrian Government.

Our photographs on the first page of this issue, bring vividly before the reader the scene of the crime and its illustrious victim. The Empress had been stopping at the Hotel Beau-Rivage, near the other side of the bridge, and was proceeding to her steamer at the quay, when the assassin plunged the deadly weapon into her body. The steamer had gone but a short distance on its way—about half as far as the part of the bridge shown in the picture—when it was obliged to put back, as the Empress was rapidly failing. She was carried on shore in a dying condition, and death followed in a few minutes. The scene, as shown in the picture, is one of the most peaceful and beautiful in any Old World city. It is known to almost every traveller in Europe.

Emperor Franz Josef has issued a manifesto to his subjects, in which he expresses the deepest grief at the loss of his life companion, and thanks his people for the universal sympathy expressed. His grief and its tragic cause, are typical of the perils and sorrows that encompass a throne, and of the innumerable responsibilities attending the high position of ruler over a nation. Not only is a monarch exposed to the assaults of those who are antagonistic to his personal rule, but he has to bear the burden of responsibility for the acts of his predecessors, however unjustly. There is not, in all probability, a titled potentate in Europe to-day who does not envy his plainest subject that peace of mind freedom from open and secret danger, and unalloyed social and domestic enjoyment which come from simple conditions, and surroundings that stir neither the envy nor the anger of men.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Enough Better than Too Much.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: I. Chron. 20: 6, 7:

"A man of great stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand, and six on each foot: and he also was the son of a giant. But when he defied Israel, Jonathan, the son of Shimea, David's brother, slew him."

MALFORMATION photographed, and for what reason? Did not this passage slip in by mistake into the sacred Scriptures, as sometimes a paragraph utterly obnoxious to the editor gets into his newspaper during his absence? Is not this Scriptural errata? No, no: there is nothing haphazard about the Bible. There is no use for giants now except to enlarge the income of museums. But there were many of them in olden times. Goliath was, according to the Bible, eleven feet four and a half inches high. Or, if you doubt this, the famous Pliny declares that at Crete, by an earthquake, a monument was broken open, discovering the remains of a giant forty-six cubits long, or sixty-nine feet high. So, whether you take sacred or profane history, you must come to the conclusion that there were in those times cases of human altitude monstrous and appalling.

David had smashed the skull of one of these giants, but there were other giants that the Davidean wars had not yet subdued, and one of them stands in my text. He was not only of Alpine stature, but had a surplus of digits. To the ordinary fingers was annexed an additional finger, and the foot had also a superfluous addendum. He had twenty-four terminations to hands and feet, where others have twenty. It was not the only instance of the kind. Tavernier, the learned writer, says that the Emperor of Java had a son endowed with the same number of extremities. Volcatius, the poet, had six fingers on each hand. Maupertuis, in his celebrated letters, speaks of two families near Berlin similarly equipped of hand and foot. All of which I can believe, for I have seen two cases of the same physical superabundance. But this giant of the text is in battle, and as David, the stripling warrior, had despatched one giant, the nephew of David slays this monster of my text, and there he lies after the battle in Gath, a dead giant. His stature did not save him, and his superfluous appendices of hand and foot did not save him. The probability was that in the battle his sixth finger on his hand made him clumsy in the use of his weapon, and his sixth toe crippled his gait. Behold the prostrate and malformed giant of the text: "A man of great stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand and six on each foot: and he also was the son of a giant. But when he defied Israel, Jonathan, the son of Shimea, David's brother, slew him."

Behold how superfluities are a hindrance rather than a help! In all the battle at Gath that day there was not a man with ordinary hand and ordinary foot and ordinary stature that was not better off than this physical curiosity of my text. A dwarf on the right side is stronger than a giant on the wrong side, and all the body and mind and estate and opportunity that you cannot use for God and the betterment of the world is a sixth finger and a sixth toe, and a terrible hindrance. The most of the good done in the world, and the most of those who win the battles for the right are ordinary people. The "Swamp Angel" was a big gun that during the Civil War made a big noise but musketoes of ordinary calibre and shells of ordinary belt did the execution. President Tyler and his Cabinet go down the Potomac one day to experiment with the "Peacemaker," a great iron monster that was to affright with its thunder foreign navies. The gunner touches fire, and it explodes, and leaves Cabinet Ministers dead on the deck, while at that time, up and down our coasts, were Cannon of ordinary bore, able to be the defence of the nation, and ready at the first touch to waken to duty. The curse of the world is big guns.

Clear back in the country to-day there are mothers in plain apron, and shoes fashioned on a rough last by a shoemaker at the end of the lane, rocking babies that are to be the Martin Luthers and the Faradays and the Edisons and the Bismarcks and the Gladstones and the Washingtons and the George Whitefields of the future. The longer I live the more I like common folks. They do the world's work, bearing the world's burdens, weeping the world's sympathies, carrying the world's consolation. Among lawyers we see rise up a Rufus Choate, or a William Wirt, or a Samuel L. Southard, but society would go to pieces tomorrow if there were not thousands of common lawyers to see that men and women get their rights. A Valentine Mott or a Willard Parker rises up eminent in the medical profession; but what an unlimited sweep would pneumonia and diphtheria and scarlet fever have in the world if it were not for ten thousand common doctors! The old physician in his gig, driving up the lane of the farm-house, or riding on horseback, his medicines in the saddle-bags, arriving on the ninth day of the fever, and coming in to take hold of the pulse of the patient, while the family, pale with anxiety, and looking on and waiting for his decision in regard to the patient, and hearing him say, "Thank God, I have mastered the case; he is getting well!" excites in me an admiration quite equal to the mention of the names of the great metropolitan doctors of the past or the illustrious living men of the present.

Yet what do we see in all departments? People not satisfied with ordinary spheres of work and ordinary duties. Instead of trying to see what they can do with a hand of five fingers, they want six. Instead of usual endowment of twenty manual and pedal addenda, they want twenty-four. A certain amount of money for livelihood, and for the supply of those whom we leave behind us after we have departed this life, is important, for we have the best authority for saying, "He that provideth not for his own, and especially those of his own household, is worse than an infidel;" but the large and fabulous sums for which many struggle, if obtained, would be a hindrance rather than an advantage.

The anxieties and annoyances of those whose estates have become plethoric can only be told by those who possess them. It will be a good thing when, through your industry and prosperity, you can own the house in which you live. But suppose you own fifty houses, and you have all those rents to collect, and all those tenants to please. Suppose you have branched out in business successes until in almost every direction you have investments. The fire bell rings at night, you rush upstairs to look out of the window, to see if it is any of your mills. Epidemic of crime comes, and there are embezzlements and absconding in all directions, and you wonder whether any of your bookkeepers will prove recreant. A panic strikes the financial world, and you are like a hen under a sky full of hawks, and trying with anxious cluck to get your overgrown chickens safely under wing. After a certain stage of success has been reached, you have to trust so many important things to others that you are apt to become the prey of others, and you are swindled and defrauded, and the anxiety you had on your brow when you were earning your first thousand dollars is not equal to the anxiety on your brow now that you have won your three hundred thousand.

"Well," says somebody, "such overloaded persons ought to be pitied, for their worriments are real, and their insomnia and their nervous prostration are enough." I reply that they could get rid of the bothersome surplus by giving it away. If a man has more houses than he can carry without vexation, let him drop a few of them. If his estate is so great he cannot manage it without getting nervous dyspepsia from having too much, let him divide with those who have nervous dyspepsia because they cannot get enough. No! they guard their sixth finger with more care than they did the original five. They go limping with what they call gout, and know not that, like the giant of my text, they are lamed by a superfluous toe. A few of them by charities bleed themselves of this financial obesity and monetary plethora, but many of them hang on to the hindering superfluity till death; and then, as they are compelled to give the money up anyhow, in their last will and testament they generously give some of it to the Lord, expecting, no doubt, that he will feel very much obliged to them. Thank God that once in a while we have a Peter Cooper, who, owning an interest in the iron works at Trenton, said to Mr. Lester: "I do not feel quite easy about the amount we are making. Working under one of our patents, we have a monopoly which seems to me something wrong. Everybody has to come to us for it, and we are making money too fast." So they reduced the price, and this while our philanthropist was building Cooper Institute, which mothers a hundred institutes of kindness and mercy all over the land. But the world had to wait five thousand eight hundred years for Peter Cooper!

I am glad for the benevolent institutions that get a legacy from men who during their life were as stingy as death, but who in their last will and testament bestowed money on hospitals and missionary societies; but for such testators I have no respect. The probability is that if such a one in his last will by a donation to benevolent societies tries to atone for his lifetime close-fistedness, the heirs-at-law will try to break the will by proving that the old man was senile or crazy, and the expense of the litigation will about leave in the lawyer's hands what was meant for the Bible Society. O ye overweighted, successful business men, whether this sermon reach your ear or your eyes, let me say that if you are prostrated with anxieties about keeping or investing these tremendous fortunes, I can tell you how you can do more to get your health back and your spirits raised than by drinking gallons of bad-tasting water at Saratoga, Homburg or Carlsbad: Give to God, humanity, and the Bible ten per cent. of all your income, and it will make a new man of you, and from restless walking of the floor at night you shall have eight hours' sleep, without the help of bromide of potassium, and from no appetite you will hardly be able to wait for your regular meals, and your wan cheek will fill up, and when you die the blessings of those who but for you would have perished will bloom all over your grave.

Perhaps some of you will take this advice, but the most of you will not. And you will try to cure your swollen hand by getting on it more fingers, and your rheumatic foot by getting on it more toes, and there will be a sigh of relief when you are gone out of the world; and when over your remains the minister recites the words: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord," persons who have keen appreciation of the ludicrous will hardly be able to keep their faces straight. But whether in that direction my words do good or not, I am anxious that all who have only ordinary equipment be thankful for what they have and rightly employ it. I think you all have, figuratively as well as literally, fingers enough. Do not long for hindering superfluities. Standing in the presence of this fallen giant of my text, and in this post-mortem examination of him, let us learn how much better off we are with just the usual hand, the usual foot. You have thanked God for a thousand things, but I warrant you never thanked him for those two implements of work and locomotion, that no one but the Infinite and Omnipotent God could have ever planned or made—the hand and the foot. Only that soldier or that mechanic who in a battle, or through machinery, has lost them knows anything adequately about their value, and only the Christian scientist can have any appreciation of what divine masterpieces they are.

Sir Charles Bell was so impressed with the wondrous construction of the human hand that when the Earl of Bridgewater gave forty thousand dollars for essays on the wisdom and goodness of God, and eight books were written, Sir Charles Bell wrote his entire book on the wisdom and goodness of God as displayed in the human hand. The twenty-seven bones in the hand and wrist with cartilages, ligaments and phalanges of the fingers made just ready to knit, to sew, to [illegible] up, to pull down, to weave, to write, to plough, to pound, to wheel, to battle, to give friendly salutation. The tips of the fingers are so many telegraph offices, by reason of their sensitiveness of touch. The bridges, the tunnels, the cities of the whole earth are the victories of the hand. The hands are not dumb, but often speak as distinctly as the lips. With our hands we invite, we repel, we invoke, we entreat, we wring them in grief, or clap them in joy, or spread them abroad in benediction. The malformation of the giant's hand in my text glorifies the usual hand. Fashioned by God more exquisitely and wondrously than any human mechanism that was ever contrived, I charge you to use it for God and the lifting of the world out of its moral predicament. Employ it in the sublime work of Gospel hand-shaking. You can see the hand is just made for that. Four fingers just set right to take your neighbor's hand on one side, and your thumb set so as to clench it on the other side. By all its bones and joints and muscles and cartilages and ligaments the voice of Nature joins with the voice of God commanding you to shake hands.

Yea; the malformation of this giant's foot glorifies the ordinary foot which I fear you have never once thanked God. The twenty-six bones of the foot are the admiration of the anatomist. The arch of the foot fashioned with a grace and a poise that Trajan's arch, or Constantine's arch, or any other arch could not equal. Those arches stand where they were planted, but this arch of the foot is an adjustable arch, a yielding arch, a flying arch, and ready for movements innumerable. The human foot so fashioned as to enable a man to stand upright as no other creature, and leave the hands that would otherwise have to help in balancing the body free for anything it chooses. The foot of the camel fashioned for the sand, the foot of the bird fashioned for the tree-branch, the foot of the eagle fashioned for the slippery rock, the foot of the lion fashioned to rend its prey, the foot of the horse fashioned for the swift earth, but the foot of man made to climb the desert, or climb the tree, or walk the earth, or go anywhere he needs to go.

With that divine triumph of anatomy in your possession where do you walk? In what path of righteousness or what path of sin have you set it down? Where have you left the mark of your footstep? Amid the petrifactions in the rocks have been found the mark of the feet of bird and beast of thousands of years ago. But God can trace out all the footsteps of your lifetime, and those you made many years ago are as plain as those made in the last soft weather, all of them petrified for the Judgment Day. Oh, the foot! Give me the autobiography of your foot from the time you stepped out of the cradle until to-day, and I will tell your exact character now and what are your prospects for the world to come.

That is the most beautiful foot that goes about paths of greatest usefulness, and that the most beautiful hand that does the most to help others. I was reading of three women in rivalry about the appearance of the hand. And the first reddened her hand with berries, and said the beautiful tinge made hers the most beautiful. And another put her hand in the mountain brook, and said, as the waters dripped off, that her hand was the most beautiful. And another plucked flowers off the bank, and under the blossoms contended that her hand was the most attractive. Then a poor old woman appeared, and looking up in her decrepitude asked for alms. And a woman who had not taken part in the rivalry gave her alms. And all the women resolved to leave to this beggar the question as to which of all the hands present was the most attractive, and she said: "The most beautiful of them all is the one that gives relief to my necessities," and as she said her wrinkles and rags and her decrepitude and her body disappeared, and in place thereof stood the Christ, who long ago said: "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these, ye did it unto me!" and who to purchase the service of our hand and foot here on earth had his own hand and foot lacerated.

A NIQUE GOSPEL SETTLEMENT.

ro ss of the Work Founded by Mrs. Bi on the East-Side—A Christian Club-Hse for the Poor Tenement-Dwellers.

OUR readers will remember the announcement in this paper, nearly a year ago, of the opening of the "Gospel Settlement," 211 Clinton street, New r City, by Mrs. Sarah J. Bird, the der of the lost boys of the Bowery." nc that time the work has developed ea , has almost outgrown its quarters, bluntary workers are in increased m d. During the past summer, Mrs. rd nd her assistants, devoted their en- gi to fresh-air work, but with October e lustrial features of the Settlement l resumed with greater earnestness r ver.

T field which the Settlement occupies a ost promising one; the streets are v ed with children: there is a perfect of strange tongues, for one hears ry side the languages of Europe e Orient; and Syrians, Chinamen, li s, Greeks, Russians, Arabians, st and Americans jostle each other. el ws of foreign birth (and to whom a s of Jehovah are as strange as the ve Jesus), abound. Home and for- n missionary work are here ready to e nd of the worker.

O e, the writer carried to Mrs. Bird a er ess woman alone in the city, and ke where it was best to take her for e ght. Although the house was crowd- wh resident workers, a hospitable in- a n to spend the night there was t oming from the motherly hostess; fter a two-days' entertainment the w oman went forth clad in a comfort-le uit of neat, good garments. The e g of that visit the writer saw what Gospel Settlement meant in that neigh- orhood. It was filled with childish visitors: s w sat at supper, Mrs. Bird called to ev l wistful little maidens in the hall: "W you have some cake?" Of course he ould. When we went up from sup- er, little lassie was asked, with a moth- erly at on the head: "Do you want a at of peaches? Go in and ask Mrs. Ave." As we sat in the residents' parlor ps rs, the door-bell rang many times. On it announced a little girl, who came n t ee if they would help her trim a hat so ne had given her; another time the ou ul visitor wanted to be shown how to c a shirt waist out of a bit of cloth whi she brought along; again, a little ragg l boy asked with a quiver in his voic "Mrs. Bird, won't you send mamma a pi e of your cake. She's sick and can eat anything."

Rh el, a pretty little dark-eyed Hebrew mai n, brought the essay she was to read at r school-club over for criticism. Me ages came from the sick who desired a vi from the Settlement nurse. One of Mr Bird's rescued Bowery boys — a young blushing fellow—wanted a private word with her. His sweetheart—the true, good girl whom he had left behind in the country village, when he came to New York, with the purpose of "getting into business," but with the result of learning to drink and of getting into trouble—was coming to New York, and they would be married and go to live in the cosy little three-room home he had made for her since the turning-point came one night when, desperate, hungry and heart-broken, he had drifted into the Bowery Mission. She had urged him to write to the troubled girl, toward whom his sense of unworthiness had kept him silent; and now, he was asking if "Mary might come from the train to the Settlement and be married from there?"

Many times Mrs. Bird has been asked to do motherly and sisterly things for her boys' wives, mothers, and sisters; broken homes have been reunited through her agency. Every Sunday evening a number of her Bowery boys take supper at the Settlement—a good home supper, or dinner, of milk and bread and butter and coffee, roast and salad, pie and pudding; some of them bring their wives along — the happy women to whom they have been reunited through the agency of the Bowery Mission workers.

The original purpose of the Settlement, however, is a work for women and girls. The resident workers are all women. The clubs and classes are for women and girls. A particularly attractive feature is the music class. Missionary workers realize that through Gospel songs there is a royal way to the hearts of the slum children who are so ready to follow the sound of the organ-grinder, whithersoever it lead; and this knowledge is being turned to good account. In the Literary Club standard authors are studied; it is realized that an appetite for wholesome reading created, the reign of the dime novel and other meretricious literature is broken.

The Mothers' Meetings, the Health Talks, the Sewing Class, Dressmakers' Class, Cooking and Waitress' Classes are Mrs. Bird's particular pets. "We want to teach the East Side woman how to make and keep a home," she says, "and we want to train the girls up into good tidy housewives. You cannot realize how much such teaching is needed in tenement districts unless you live in them. The ill-kept home is the secret of so much sin and misery."

Mrs. Bird's plan in establishing this Settlement has been to combine the College Settlement and Gospel Settlement ideas; and through all the work the spiritual purpose of the founder is seen in the prominence given to prayer and song service, to Bible readings and other religious features.

A Noble Life Closed.

Rev. Dr. John Hall Passes Away While Visiting His Native Land—A Life Willingly Spent for Christ.

FEW men in the Protestant ministry were better known or more widely loved than the Rev. Dr. John Hall, of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, who passed from this life on Sept. 17, while on his annual visit to Europe. The end of this bright and memorable Christian career came peacefully, at his sister's residence in Bangor, Ireland, where Dr. Hall was surrounded by friends. His health had been impaired for some time past, but it was believed he would be able to undertake the ocean journey back to New York. This hope, however, was doomed to disappointment. Two days' of severe sickness was followed by heart-failure, and the venerable man of God, whose labors in the vineyard of the Gospel have been the means of bringing a multitude of souls into the kingdom, passed to his reward.

Dr. Hall's life story is a most interesting one. Irish by birth he came of Scottish parents whose ancestors had settled in the town of Armagh, Ireland, in the year 1600. He was born on July 31, 1829, in a house that had been occupied by his family for six generations. His early training was of a character that influenced his whole life, and at a very early age he had his mind firmly fixed upon the ministry as his future vocation. He entered Belfast College when he was only thirteen, and while there he was a frequent prizeman, distinguishing himself in many studies and more especially in Hebrew. He was only twenty, when after a brilliant academic career, he was licensed to preach. His first ministerial work was done in the rugged life of a missionary in the west of Ireland. Three years of devoted duty were given to this field, and then an invitation, which must have been encouraging to a young man, came to him, offering him the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church, of Armagh. During the six years of his pastorate in that church, the young minister labored zealously in pulpit and in pastoral duty, and the church prospered under his labors. In 1858, Dr. Hall was called to Dublin to occupy the pulpit of St. Mary's Abbey.

In 1867, the Presbyterian Assembly of Ireland decided to send a delegate to the Assembly of the United States, and Dr. John Hall was selected to carry the greetings to his brethren on this side the Atlantic. During his visit, he accepted an invitation to preach at the Presbyterian Church, which then stood on Nineteenth street and was without a pastor. So impressed was the church by the vigor and eloquence of the young preacher, that a call was sent to him by cable soon after his return to Dublin. He accepted it, and in November, 1867, began a long and successful pastorate, during which the church steadily grew in membership and influence. When it was decided to move uptown to more commodious quarters, the great edifice on Fifty-fifth street was erected at a cost of over $1,000,000, and it quickly became a centre of spiritual and philanthropic activity. It supported the Romeyn Chapel in Seventy-fourth street, the Alexander Chapel in King street, a mission chapel in Sixty-third street, a Chinese mission in Fifty-ninth street and a Children's Home at Atlantic Highlands, N. J. Besides these, the Sunday School, the Christian Endeavor Society and other agencies were in efficient work, and in all of them the pastor's energy and magnetism was moving and inspiring the workers. Dr. Hall led a busy life during these thirty years. Besides his regular labors as preacher and pastor, he was a regular contributor to the religious press. He was also identified with many other benevolent and philanthropic enterprises, and was a member of the Board of Directors of the Bowery Mission, from the time it passed under the management of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, until his death.

THE LATE REV. JOHN HALL, D.D.

During the thirty years or more of his pastorate, in New York City, Dr. Hall was, to his flock, a very dear friend, a spiritual confidant and counselor. Always thoroughly orthodox, his sermons were of a character to stir the spiritual activities and awaken the sympathies of his congregation. To the rich who flocked to his church, he was a fearless mentor, honest and outspoken in his characterization of sin, and kindly in his counsel. To the humble workers, he was as cordial as any man who ever preached the Gospel of Jesus, and they were not only welcomed at his church, but he gave them special attention and held services for them in the great edifice, visited them, and was as mindful of their needs as of those of the rich members of his flock. Under his ministry, it is said that the benefactions of his church averaged $100,000 a year.

Dr. Hall will long be remembered with deep affection in the city which has been the scene of his grand life-work. His death is a distinct loss to the Protestant pulpit of the United States, but the strong and beneficent influence of his spiritual life will not soon pass away.

JEHOSHAPHAT'S REIGN.

S. S. Lesson for Oct. 9. II. Chron. 17: 1-10. Golden Text, Prov. 3: 6.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

"IN all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." (Prov. 3: 6). Such was the Scriptural line on which Jehoshaphat began his reign. The son of Asa, who began so well, he was at first even an improvement on his father. The Lord was with Jehoshaphat because he walked in the first ways of his father and of David. Asa had strengthened himself against Israel and Jehoshaphat followed his example. Asa took away the strange altars and the high places and broke down the pillars, and hewed down the Asherim, and commanded Judah to seek the Lord, the God of their fathers, and to do the law and the commandment (II. Chron. 14: 3, 4) but Jehoshaphat did more—he sent both princes and Levites, and with them Elishama and Jehoram the priests, to teach in the cities of Judah. They were the right people—princes, Levites and priests—and they taught the right thing. "They taught in Judah, having the book of the law of the Lord with them: and they went about through all the cities of Judah and taught among the people."

No wonder Jehoshaphat prospered, for God had his way with him and with his people. No wonder that "the fear of the Lord fell upon the kingdoms of the lands that were round about Judah," when they saw that God's people made common cause with him, and he made common cause with them. Such a mighty Ally, the Omnipotent God, struck terror into the hearts of them who served him not and they dared not make war against Jehoshaphat.

"Some of the Philistines brought Jehoshaphat presents and silver for tribute." How easy it is for God to supply money when his children are fully in line with him! What a miserable thing it is to depend upon the uncertain will and uncertain power of human beings! The Arabians also brought him flocks—seven thousand seven hundred rams and seven thousand seven hundred he goats, and this without compulsion or solicitation, simply because he stood on God's side and believed that the Lord was on his side.

Now was the time of danger. Jehoshaphat was favored by God and feared by man, he stood on a pedestal, and "waxed great exceedingly." It is not said, as before, that his heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord, but that he waxed great. Oh how much safer it is to grow small than to wax great! Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven. The Lord Jesus was so small that he said, "I can of mine own self do nothing." But an Old Testament man had not the meek and lowly One to follow, and came with difficulty to learn his littleness. He was surrounded by mighty men, men of valor (verse 13, 14), but there was one man, as though an exception to the others, Amasiah, the son of Zichri; of whose might and valor we hear nothing, but he "willingly offered himself unto the Lord": and this counted with God and with Jehoshaphat.

The king had reached the zenith of his power; he "had riches and honor in abundance" (II. Chron. 18: 1). What should he do? Establish his own power, or place himself at God's disposal to serve him at any cost? Alas! this good king began to deteriorate, and chose the former. How many Christians have been true to God when in poverty and need, but when riches and honor multiplied they showed declension. What a temptation it has been to many to do something to keep up the position they had attained: they must consider what is due to society, to their family, etc., and so compromise began. It was a sad blot upon Jehoshaphat that "he joined affinity with Ahab," by marrying his son Jehoram to Ahab's daughter, Athaliah (II. Kings 8: 18; II. Chron. 21: 5, 6). From this time other considerations than the service of God took possession of Jehoshaphat, and the service of God, instead of being the glad, unfettered service which it had been when he had only God to please, partook of the miserable bondage of those who seek to serve God and mammon. Previously he had but one thing to do: to please God and to do that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and blessing was showered upon him. Now he had to think of how it would affect Ahab if he did such and such a thing to serve God, and how far God would be displeased if he pleased Ahab. Jehoshaphat had got himself into a net, and by his own act had complicated his life. Let us beware of alliances which may promise well, but which may involve principle. Family alliance led to political alliance; Ahab very naturally sought Jehoshaphat's help against the king of Syria, and probably thought by getting the king of Israel, who was a man of God, he would some way reap the benefit of Jehoshaphat's piety, and so bring success to his arms.

But God did not thus play into the hands of the wicked Ahab. Jehoshaphat found himself over persuaded by Ahab to go up to Ramoth-gilead, and took the ground of family friendship and political loyalty when he said to Ahab, "I am as thou art, my people as thy people, and we will be with thee in the war" (II. Chron. 18: 3). But a man of God has no right to put himself on a level with God's enemies and say, I am as thou art, or to dispose of himself and his belongings: he is the property of God. And Jehoshaphat's afterthought to enquire of a prophet of the Lord did not get him out of the tangle. He went with an uneasy conscience and nearly lost his life. Ahab was killed—the whole journey was disastrous. When he returned in peace to his home he was met with the stern rebuke of God through Jehu the son of Hanani, "Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? Therefore is wrath upon thee from before the Lord. Nevertheless, there are good things found in thee, in that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land, and has prepared thine heart to seek God" (II. Chron. 19: 2). The king felt the reproof; but he knew it was just and he humbled himself before God.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

ONE of the most prosperous reigns in the history of Judah was that of Jehoshaphat. He came to the throne about the year B. C. 876, and reigned twenty-five years. During the latter years of the preceding reign there appears to have been a religious decadence, due perhaps to the severe sickness of his father, Asa. The high-places and idolatrous altars, which the historian said had been destroyed, were again flourishing, and Jehoshaphat had to repeat the process of destruction. He had, however, the sense to see that he could not make people good by legislation alone. He sent a commission through the country to explain to the people his reason for the destruction of the false shrines, and to convince them of their duty to God. In the absence of religious literature, this course was essential to the permanence of reform, and perhaps if it had been adopted earlier there might not have been need for reform. The king also reformed the administration of justice and strengthened the frontier garrisons. Judah, under this clean and vigorous government, gained the respect of her neighbors and increased in wealth and power. It is a pity that the record does not end there. Jehoshaphat wisely suspended the fratricidal and long-continued hostilities with the northern kingdom, of which Ahab was then king; but he unwisely formed an alliance with Ahab, and negotiated a marriage between his son and Ahab's daughter, who was probably also the daughter of the wicked Jezebel. In both instances the close relationship had disastrous results. The political alliance came near costing Jehoshaphat his life (see 1. Kings 22: 2-23) and the family alliance nearly wrecked his dynasty (see II. Chron. 22: 10-12). He suffered a further loss from the alliance in the destruction of a costly navy which, in conjunction with Ahab's successor, he had prepared for a commercial expedition.

The one other important event that rendered memorable his brilliant reign was the invasion of his kingdom by a coalition of three powers on his eastern frontier—Moab, Ammon, and another power that cannot now be identified, but was probably a force of Bedouin Arabs. Though Jehoshaphat had a militia, said by the chronicler to number a million men, ut was probably overestimated, he fear to meet the enemy. The pious historia scribes the king as proclaiming a fast d offering prayer. The end was that e coalition of Judah's enemies fell to p es and each member of it turned upon e other in mutual destruction. Wit ut striking a blow, the army of Judah re ed rejoicing with the spoils of their e- mies.

TESTAMENTS IN THE TRENCHES.

Our Soldiers Clung to Their Precious Little Volumes, Even When Clothing was Thrown Away—Gospel Work at the Home Camps—The Peace Commission.

MUSTERING out is now the order of the day in the volunteer army, and the great military camps where many thousands of soldiers were quartered after their return from Cuba and Porto Rico will soon be memories of the past. Every day sees train-loads of soldiers leaving the remaining camps, some going to hospitals for further treatment, others packed for various homes and shelters that have been opened by generous citizens where they may rest and recuperate, and still others bound for their own homes. Sickness at the camps has greatly decreased since the advent of cool weather. But there are still so many of the men too weak from fevers and other disorders that the offers of the Women's National War Relief Association and other organizations, to care for the sick and provide homes where they can be built back to health and strength, have been gladly accepted by the army officials. At the present moment a large number of soldiers are being cared for in this manner.

The evangelistic work of the Christian Commission continues with unabated energy at the principal camps and military posts, both at home and abroad. Numerous testimonies have been given to prove the spiritual value of the work done at Camp Thomas, Ga. (where 40,000 troops have been stationed), the camps at Jacksonville, Panama Park and Fairfield, Fla. (at which three places nearly 30,000 men were stationed), Camp Merritt, Cal., Camp Godwin, Mo., and the camps at Charleston, S. C., Fernandina, Fla., Falls Church, Va., and elsewhere. At Camp Alger, the Sunday attendance at the tent meetings was sometimes as high as 2,000. At Camp Russell, Fort Macon, N. C. (a colored camp), 128 men professed conversion. At Camp McPherson, Ga., attendances ranged from 400 to 1,000. Spanish testaments and tracts were distributed among the Spanish prisoners at Portsmouth, N. H., and at Camp Barrett, Calif., Camp Cobb, Va., Camp Corbin, Va., and Camp Wikoff, N. Y., a most active evangelistic campaign has been conducted with gratifying results.

The Gospel at Camp Wikoff.

As an evidence of the character of the spiritual work at Camp Wikoff we give the following letter from Rev. A. C. Dixon, who has visited all the leading camps in turn having been identified with the Christian Commission since the beginning of its labors:

To the Christian Herald:

"I am again among the soldiers, to whom I had the pleasure of preaching for three weeks at Tampa, before they went to Cuba, and it is a joy to see so many familiar faces and to receive the cordial grasp of so many friendly hands. At our first meeting the largest Y. M. C. A. tent was packed, all standing room occupied, and the boys listened to the Gospel with the same eager interest that they showed at Tampa. Then they were looking forward to danger and probable death; now they are looking back with gratitude to God for deliverance and victory, and forward with hope and joy.

"I miss several faces that were present at nearly all the meetings in Tampa, and on inquiry I find that some were killed at Santiago, others died of fever, and others still like faithful Chaplain Bateman, have gone home to be nursed into health.

"The converts, so far as I can learn, have remained faithful, and are determined to serve God all their lives. One soldier tells me that he accepted Christ while in the trenches at Santiago, and took his first communion two days after the battle. Another says that his comrade died in the hospital rejoicing in Christ whom he began to love and serve at Tampa.

The Story of a Testament.

"Here lies before me, as I write, a little New Testament, which shows it has been water-soaked. On the fly-leaf is printed the words:

"'Tampa Headquarters, Army Christian Commission, Young Men's Christian Association.'

"And written over the page in ink are the words:

"'Trenches, San Juan Hill, morning after night attack, July 3d, 1898. This has been a great comfort to me. HENRY SCHLOBOHM.'

"It is said that, as the soldiers were on their forced march, and had to lighten their burdens, they threw away first their clothing, then their utensils, then their food, and, last of all, their Testaments. One earnest fellow, putting his hand on his breast, said to me, 'I did not throw away mine, but kept it in here through the whole campaign.' And it was plain that he had hidden its truth in his heart.

"Only eternity will reveal the results of the work that has been done among the soldiers during this war. The Y. M. C. A. have gone with their tents and supplied conveniences for writing, innocent games, places for social meetings, and religious services. One bright fellow said to me yesterday: 'When I get home I'm going to join the Y. M. C. A., and try to induce all my friends to do the same.' And the Army Christian Commission have gone with their evangelists and singers, preaching daily the Gospel that saves, and distributing thousands of Testaments and religious books. The Y. M. C. A. has been the institutional department, and its work has given the evangelists access to thousands who might not have been otherwise reached.

AN EARLY MORNING SCENE IN HAVANA.

Crowds watching the Spanish troops passing through Central Park. These troops are now being deported to Spain.

The Canteen and its Victims.

"The one foul spot in this fair place on Montauk Point, is the regimental saloon known as the 'Army Canteen.' Eight or ten of them are the centres of drunken brawls and gambling hells. By order of a certain major, one of these canteens is located next door to a Y. M. C. A. tent. Up to that time it was a quiet place and the services were not disturbed. On the first night after its establishment, the noise was disturbing, and a young soldier was brought into the tent with his head gashed and bleeding. It was estimated that there were not less than one thousand men intoxicated in the camps yesterday, and scores were beastly drunk. And Montauk Point is a local option district, so that the United States government is violating laws in running these saloons. Let there be an investigation as to who in Congress is responsible for this iniquity. It is a disgrace to our Christian civilization.

Hardships in Cuba.

"The soldiers, so far as I have talked with them, have no complaints to make of hardships in Cuba. Some of them were hungry for two or three days, while in the trenches at Santiago, because Spanish bullets kept away their supplies, and they had to eat raw bacon because it was dangerous to kindle fires; but they accepted that as a part of the price they were willing to pay for victory. As to the camp at Montauk Point, they speak in highest praise of everybody and everything. It is certainly an ideal location, beautiful for situation, and cool in hot weather. Their supplies have been abundant and well prepared. We ate this morning from the bill-of-fare provided for the 2nd Regiment of Infantry, and a hungry man does not want anything better. Indeed, one soldier told me that he never liked cooked bacon, but on the third day of the fast at Santiago raw bacon tasted better than beefsteak had ever tasted before. An open-air, roughing life does not demand dainty fare.

"There were doubtless incompetents in office who failed to do their duty, but let us believe that all did the best they could under the circumstances, while we press on with the work of regenerating Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

Camp Wikoff, A. C. DIXON.

Montauk Point, Long Island, Sept. 15th, 1898."

An Appeal From Porto Rico.

One of our "soldier boys" in Porto Rico sends us this letter:

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,
SIXTH REGT. MASS. VOLUNTEERS.
UTUADO, PORTO RICO, Sept. 1st, 1898.

The Christian Herald:

One of our boys this morning handed me a CHRISTIAN HERALD of July 27th. In it I see a list of Association army tents, and the statement that the HERALD is sent weekly to these tents. I see there no mention of any headquarters in Porto Rico. Perhaps you may be interested to know that the first expedition sailing for the West Indies with tent and equipment was that sent by the Massachusetts State Committee with the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment, which embarked at Charleston, July 8th, on the U. S. cruiser Yale. General Miles and his staff were, as you remember, on the Yale. As the regiment was in the lead of the invading forces, very little of their tentage was landed. They have been constantly on the move until this place was reached, so we have had no opportunity to pitch our tent, and here all our tentage, provisions, etc., have to be packed over the mountains on mules, so we do not expect to see our big tent until we reach either Aricebo or San Juan. In the meantime without tent and a large part of our equipment we are trying to do the best we can, and have, since landing, always kept stationary to supply all demands from the regiment besides conducting the religious services.

Reading matter is at a premium and I would be glad to have copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sent weekly. Your readers would be conferring great favors on these boys shut up here, with time hanging on their hands, if they will mail me good reading matter. A lady sent me a package which reached here to-day, enclosing In His Steps and Robert Hardy's Seven Days. May others do likewise! I say send by mail because that is the only way by which we have any assurance of getting them.

You at home have no idea how long and lonely the days here are to some of the boys, especially the sick; and they are many. One day this week, over one-fourth of the regiment were on the sick list. Most of the cases, happily, are not serious, but the men are excused from duty, and lie around in their quarters. I constantly have to answer in the negative the query, "Haven't you got anything to read?" No matter how old. Good, wholesome literature will have such an eager reading here as to repay any who may send it.

It fell upon me to conduct the service at the burial of one of the Sixth Illinois Regiment, and also of Charles W. Robinson, of the cavalry. I am told that Robinson was a Salvation Army worker in Denver, Col. It seems hard to leave our dear boys so far from home, but I do hope it will impress us all with the nearness of him who has said: "I will not leave thee nor forsake thee"; and that we may learn so to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

DWIGHT LEETE ROGERS.

Young Men's Christian Association, Sixth Regt. Mass. Volunteers, Porto Rico.

One hundred copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have been sent to Mr Rogers at Porto Rico for distribution among the men in camp.

THE PEACE COMMISSION.

Now that our Peace Commissioners are ready for work, all eyes are naturally directed to Paris, where the sessions of the Joint Commission are to be held. Spain's Commissioners, whose appointment has just been announced, are Senor Montero Rios, President of the Senate; Senor Abarzuza, Senor Villarrutia, the Spanish Minister to Belgium, and Gen. Cerero. The selection of the fifth member is left to Senor Montero Rios, the Government stipulating that he must be versed in finance in order to deal with the question of the Cuban debt.

It is believed that surprises may be in store for those who have been professing for some time past to know the purposes of the Administration in regard to the terms to be proposed to Spain. As the Madrid Government has voted for peace by a large majority in the Cortes, and sanctioned the signing of the Peace Protocol, it is not considered likely that Spain will instruct her Commissioners to place any serious obstacles in the way of an agreement. It is even asserted that there has been a marked change of opinion among Spanish statesmen regarding the Philippines, and that rather than lose the richest part and be held to a strict accountability for improved administration in the rest, they would prefer that we should take the entire group, and accept full responsibility for all. There are various rumors current on this point, one being that we will retain the important island of Luzon only, and return the remainder to Spain, upon condition that certain improvements in Government be inaugurated; that there be a total severance of Church and State; that we have full trade privileges among all the islands, and that Spain shall not transfer them to any other power without our consent. Another report is that our Peace Commissioners go practically uninstructed, and are expected to act according to their best judgment, having first heard Spain's claims, and informed themselves of the views of other governments interested in the question. It is understood that both Britain and Japan have intimated that they would prefer to see the United States in full possession of the entire group. The necessity of doing justice to the misgoverned Filipinos, and of opening for them a future bright with the promise of a Christian civilization, will probably weigh more with our Commissioners than all other considerations together. It is, therefore, not improbable that the archipelago may be retained for a time, at least, in American control.

Evacuation in Progress.

Evacuation is proceeding rapidly in Cuba and Porto Rico, and within a very short time there will not be a Spanish soldier nor Government official left on these islands. Troops from Havana and San Juan are leaving for Spain, but as there were over 150,000 Spanish troops in Cuba alone, the work of deportation will occupy some time. The insurgents have quieted down in both islands. In Cuba, especially it is noticeable that the insurgent leaders have exerted themselves to keep their people quiet lest by interfering with the peaceful evacuation by the Spaniards they postpone still further the day when the people of Cuba shall have a government of its own.

John Hall Ascended.

[Rev. Dr. Talmage, who is now in the West, on receiving the news of the death of that distinguished laborer in the Lord's vineyard, Rev. Dr. John Hall, immediately telegraphed the following editorial from San Francisco for this week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD]:

THE Christian world is in mourning at the departure of the faithful pastor and illustrious preacher. For nigh fifty years he has stood for everything good and grand and glorious. There have been abler propounders and more brilliant men in the American pulpit, but the century has produced no better rounded minister of the Gospel.

We borrowed him from the other side of the sea. He was one of that splendid group of men loaned us by Ireland, Scotland, England and Germany. Subtract from the American pulpit and the American court room and from American journalism the great Irishmen and Scotchmen and Englishmen and Germans who have adorned them, and you would take from them illimitable excellence and might.

Thank God for the preachers who have come from foreign shores to do the best of their life-work in America! Many of them still living, alas, the great number of them departed! But what a beautiful thing that Dr. Hall should have died in the land of his nativity! He will be carried to his grave by his schoolmates. He will sleep the last sleep with his Christian ancestry. But the number of those who in our country have been blessed by his prayers and sermons and noble example it would take an angel's arithmetic to calculate.

We extend our sympathies to his bereft household and to the church which he served until he had only strength enough left to die.

T. DEWITT TALMAGE.

AS FORESHADOWED in these columns, our Government has taken a firm stand in demanding from Turkey full reparation for the damages sustained by the American missions in Asia Minor during the disturbances of 1896. These losses were unquestionably caused by the riotous and destructive acts of the Turkish troops, and should be paid for by the Sultan's Government. Twice has the Porte refused to acknowledge liability, the first refusal having come at the beginning of our war with Spain, when Turkey, like certain other powers, hoped that the campaign would result adversely to the United States. The next refusal came, most dishonorably, after a solemn pledge had been made by Turkey that the claims would be paid. There is now, however, a probability that our Government will brook no more delays, but will bring the faithless and wily Turk to a prompt settlement. We should not hesitate to do this, and to take all necessary steps to secure the safety and freedom of our Christian missionaries in Moslem lands. This would be a proper and legitimate use of power, and not an abuse.

Editorial Correspondence.

IN all our flitting to and fro, we have seen nothing more profoundly interesting than the arrival of the Roanoke, from the Klondike regions, at Seattle, Washington, in August. We saw a large ship approaching the wharf, and went down to see its passengers landed. We found that the more than 400 passengers had been detained on board several hours, because about $24,000 had been stolen, and all the passengers were searched for the money. Pathetic thought was it that after months, and in one of the cases, years of hardship and exposure and fatigue, the owner of the money should come ashore penniless. About $2,000,000, and according to some accounts $4,000,000, were brought ashore. We saw the 400 passengers landed. All of them looked weather-beaten, and many of them looked disappointed. The fact is that of all the thousands who went into Alaska in the search of the gold, only about two per cent. came back richer than when they went. From conversation with those who returned on the Roanoke, and those who had come on other ships, and bankers and assayers we learned that at least ninety-eight per cent. of all the gold-hunters of the Klondike bring back with them empty pockets and broken-down health as their only share of the Alaskan treasure-seeking. Many of them took all the money they had laid up in savings-banks, and others mortgaged their property up to all it was worth, in order to get funds for this expedition. As the miners walked down the gang-plank of the Roanoke that morning, the dilapidated looks of many of them aroused the mirth of many who were looking on; but as for ourselves, we felt more like tears than laughter. We see no fun in the defeat of men who have made desperate attempts to support themselves and their families. We may be mistaken, but we believe that the large majority of those who went gold-hunting in Alaska were not reckless and wild, but honest and industrious men, who, for some reason, unable to earn a livelihood in ordinary spheres in the region of their nativity, started out to find a region where they might by hard work better the condition of themselves and their households. The Klondike regions have been battle-fields on which good men fought for bread. We congratulate the few who succeeded. We deeply sympathize with those who failed. What an awful struggle have the most of the world's inhabitants in the work of gaining food and shelter! On almost any street of any city you may see men and women walking past you with an anxious look upon their faces. The most of them are on the way either to Austerlitz or Waterloo, the battle of life that will yield them either victory or demolition.

The Blessing of Good Schools.

COMPARE the qualifications of teachers now with those who presided over our school-boy days. It is a wonder that we know anything. We were gadded, and boxed and pulled by the ears, and stood in the corner on one foot, and kept in after school, and given extra lessons to learn. Some of the teachers, no doubt, were well qualified, but others, we remember, were cross and petulant and impatient and revengeful, and ignorant and filthy. We remember our old teacher used to open the school with prayer, putting one foot on the chair, and his elbow on his knee, and his hand over his eyes, but his fingers wide enough apart to see what went on, and seemed more anxious to note the effect of the prayer in the school-room than the effect of his prayer in heaven. Then the school-house was unshaded in summer weather, and was caught between the loose clap-boards in the wintry blast. We all drank out of one tin cup, and sat on benches without backs. We have not one pleasant memory of all our school days, except that connected with recess and vacation.

Let us rejoice that the Protestant inquisition is ended, and that the educational opportunities of to-day are so far in advance of what they were in our childhood. Still the largest room in the world is the room for improvement, and we owe the grand men and women who preside as teachers in our schools better apartments in which to train and develop the young. Children are sometimes thought to be dull when they are only asphyxiated. An overcrowded school-room is a warm invitation to scarlet fever and measles and diphtheria. Money put in school-houses is money saved from penitentiaries. The best way to lessen our taxes is to pay more money for the intelligence of the people. There is a style of economy which is the worst extravagance. Good schools tend toward empty almshouses. Knowledge lifts. Ignorance depresses. It is no rare thing to find educated scoundrelism, but to the vast majority of the criminal classes, the writing of their own names is a difficult enterprise. When society knows more, it will behave better. The newspaper column which discusses the school question should be read by every citizen, patriot and Christian.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Church Missionary Society is already prepared to commence work in the Soudan, as soon as it can be done with safety. Funds have been subscribed and missionaries have volunteered for service.

It is said that many miners in the Klondike have become insane, owing to their failure to realize their expectations of wealth in the gold-fields. Over twenty cases of insanity, caused by disappointment, have occurred since August 1.

A large delegation of members of the Order of St. Andrew is expected at the national convention which assembles to-day at Baltimore, Md. Enthusiastic meetings of local assemblies have been held in all the dioceses and many members expressed their desire to attend.

The death has just occurred of the Rev. J. B. Stair, one of the first evangelists despatched by the London Missionary Society to the Islands of the Pacific. He accompanied, in 1838, the band that included the heroic John Williams, the martyred missionary of Erromanga.

The liquor saloons in the poorer quarters of East London were watched recently on three successive Sundays during the hours in which they were open. Out of 8,980 customers who entered them, 2,898 were children, who presumably were sent to get beer and liquors to carry home.

Dr. John Clifford, of the Westbourne Park Baptist Church in London, one of the most eminent of English Baptist ministers, has had a warm welcome at Tremont Temple, Boston, large congregations crowding the church. Dr. Clifford is chairman of the English Free Church Federation, one of the most important religious movements this generation has witnessed.

If the friends of young men or young women in other cities who are coming to settle in the city of New York will write to Dr. Asa Blackburn, pastor of the Church of the Strangers, 300 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York, he will take care that young members of his church shall wait on the newcomers, with an invitation to the church and a friendly effort to make them acquainted with religious friends.

The American Institute of Sacred Literature has chosen for its subject for this year "The Foreshadowings of the Christ." Beginning with Genesis, the whole field of prophecy, poetry and history will be shown to contain these foreshadowings. The subject is particularly interesting to members of young people's societies. Persons wishing to join in the study should write to the American Institute of Sacred History, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill.

Inquiries as to the cause of the prohibition of Jewish emigration to Palestine have elicited important information. In 1856 the number of inhabitants of Palestine was stated at 1,200,000 and the population at that time was considered stationary. The census of 1896, however, showed an increase to 2,711,000, chiefly Jewish. This was believed to be due to the Russian persecution. The population of Jaffa, the ancient Joppa had increased from 15,000 to 60,000. The population of Jerusalem is now estimated at 41,000.

o Find the South Pole.

FORMAL farewell and godspeed has been said to the daring explorer, Mr. Borchgrevink, who has sailed for the unknown shores of the South Polar continent in pe of reaching the Pole itself. As outhern Cross, the steam-barque, on Mr. Borchgrevink sailed, left her in London, and, gay with bunting, ed down the Thames, there was a of considerable excitement, as every ithin reach wished the explorers a oyage and success. e's Self-Sacrifice.

Able dispatch to the New York Sun s a splendid deed of heroism in ction with another of the many ties of Alpine climbing which have ed this season. It appears that Nasse, well known in Berlin as the nt of Prof. Bergmann, and Dr. ardt, with two guides, the four men together, were crossing the Piz over a snow bridge, which was ered safe by the guides. The bridge way, and the leading guide and Prof. Nas fell into a crevasse. Nasse had pe around his chest and hung in r. For nearly half an hour the two hung over the precipice, while Dr. ardt and the other guide vainly tried them up. Meanwhile the weight first guide was drawing the rope tight Prof. Nasse's chest and almost ing his breathing. At last the leading guide, realizing that there was no hope of being drawn up, cut the rope between himself and Prof. Nasse and disappeared into the depths. The other guide and Dr. Borchardt were then able to pull Prof. Nasse up, but he was dead. It is cheering to know that the guide who so willingly offered his life was not killed, but was found unhurt by the rescue party. Every one must admire the heroism which the guide displayed in cutting the rope that the other man might be saved, but how many hear without emotion of him who really did give his life that others might have eternal life.

He saved others, himself he cannot save (Matt. 27:42).

Celestial Dust.

A scientific journal calls attention to the confirmation found by recent research of Nordenskjold's theory of the celestial dust. The great explorer found on the snow and ice of Greenland in various places quantities of a black powder containing metallic iron and occasionally cobalt and nickel. There is no volcano which could have emitted it, and Nordenskjold believes that it comes from shooting stars and other heavenly bodies. He says that it probably falls on other parts of the earth but is not detected so easily as when it falls on snow or ice. If it falls in the same proportion on other parts as in Greenland, the explorer believes that not less than half a million tons of this strange soil reach the earth in a year. The idea is a novel one, but scientific men are not now treating it with the incredulity they did when it was first broached. Perhaps the time is not far distant when they will recognize the truth proclaimed eighteen centuries ago and most devoutly believed by Christians:

The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven and giveth life unto the world (John 6:33).

When the Tears Came.

There was a scene in a Brooklyn hospital a few days ago which will not soon be forgotten by any who witnessed it. Among the visitors to Montauk Point, N. Y., while the camp was at its fullest, were a mother and daughter who had come from the far west searching for a young soldier. The mother said her son had been at Santiago and she understood he had been brought home sick. Finally after two days in the camp she learned that he had been sent to some hospital in New York or Brooklyn, but no one could tell her which. She and her daughter took a lodging in New York, and the mother being exhausted with travel and anxiety, the daughter went alone to every hospital in the city. There was no record of the soldier, but the girl said she thought her brother might have been too sick to give his right name, so she went from ward to ward, scrutinizing the face in every cot. Her search had almost ended in despair, when standing at a window of a Brooklyn hospital, overlooking the yard in which some convalescent soldiers were sitting, she exclaimed, "there's Tom, now!" There were no stairs near, so the girl climbed out of the window, but was lifted back and taken down in the elevator. In a moment there was a joyful meeting. The convalescent soldier and his sister were equally overcome. The other soldiers looked on sympathetically, and more than one wiped some moisture from their eyes. One man, however, sneered at the others and wanted to know what they could see to be so much moved about. "Ain't you got a mother or a sister?" he was asked. He replied that he had not. After that none of the men seemed to care to talk with him. The man felt the slight, and, after a few hours, said: "Say, you fellows, I didn't mean anything by what I said. I had a mother once." He could not say any more for his voice was choked with tears. It was astonishing to see how after his confession the others drew to him, especially some who had lost a mother, too. There is nothing so likely to induce sympathy or fellow feeling than companionship in sorrow. Even our Lord was prepared for his high-priesthood by suffering.

EXPLORER BORCHGREVINK AND HIS VESSEL, "THE SOUTHERN CROSS."

It became him in bringing many souls unto glory to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings (Heb. 2:10).

Alive After Centuries.

A remarkable story is told of a fine patch of corn now harvested from a farm at Harrodsburg, Ky. A journal of that town says that the corn has all grown from seed that lay hidden for several centuries. It appears that some time ago a field in Arkansas was being levelled, when the laborers came upon an Indian mound. On the top a large tree, four feet in diameter, was growing. The tree was cut down and the roots excavated. Underneath was an earthen jar, hermetically sealed, full of corn. How long the jar had been there no man could tell, but it must have been buried before the tree took root. Experts in the age of trees believe that the tree could not have attained its girth under several centuries. Whether that is so or not, many years must have elapsed before the corn came to light. It was then sown, and the result is this year a yield of many bushels. The corn which had retained its life so long is now lost, but in its place is the harvest that sprang from it. Thus it is with the human race. It is from the lives laid down and lost to the world that the great harvest comes, which Christ will gather into his garner.

That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die (1. Cor. 15:36).

A Daring Rescue.

How the crew of a coasting vessel bound for Boston, Mass., were rescued in a howling gale from a sinking vessel is told by "Scribner's Magazine." The vessel was being driven ashore at Pigeon Cove, and it was evident that in spite of the anchor she had cast out that it would be only a short time before she struck on the breakwater. Two men, who were watching her, started for Rockport to get the lifeboat to rescue the crew. But three fishermen, who were standing on the beach, saw that long before the lifeboat could reach the cove the vessel would go to pieces. A schooner was tied safely up at the wharf and to her the fishermen went and borrowed a boat. They rowed out to the distressed vessel, and after almost superhuman effort reached her side. She was then bows under and drifting rapidly. It was dangerous to approach her, but the men on board jumped off and every one was picked up. Then there was a critical minute while the boat turned. It was done safely and the fishermen pulled for shore. By the time they had their men safe on land the vessel was breaking into kindling-wood on the rocks, and in the far-distance the lifeboat could be seen struggling to reach the scene. Its crew had worked hard and bravely, but had been too far away to get there in time. But for the prompt and daring action of the fishermen every man would have been lost. It was well that they did not wait for the men whose business it was to save lives. Sometimes Christians are not so ready in the saving of souls. When they see a soul drifting to destruction, they are apt to leave its rescue to a minister, or church officer, instead of doing their utmost to save it themselves, though the reward which God promises to all who succeed in this glorious work is not limited to any class:

Let him know that he who converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins (James 5:20).

Killed by the Sunshine.

Some weeks ago the story was told in these columns of a boy who had spent three years in a cellar. He was the son of a doctor, whose strange treatment had saved his life. The boy suffered from spinal meningitis, and seemed when his father began to treat him to be on the verge of the grave. He fitted up the cellar under his house with all kinds of comforts, and had it lighted with electricity. The boy remained there night and day, seeing no one but his father. He grew strong and healthy, and became as intelligent and cheerful as other boys. The father, believing him cured, brought him out of his cellar this spring and gradually introduced him to outdoor life. The boy did not thrive under the change, but the father thought that he might improve in a different air. He therefore took him from the city to Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., where he could have pure air and sunshine. After a few hours the boy showed extraordinary nervousness, and in a short time he fell down in a fit. One fit succeeded another through the day, and before sunset he died. It is singular that the conditions which usually bring life and health should have brought death to him. It shows that the father was wise in his former treatment. There are some Christians whose circumstances are dark and dreary, who long for the sunshine of prosperity, but who might lose all their spiritual vitality if their heavenly Father granted them their desire.

They were filled, and their heart was exalted, therefore have they forgotten me (Hosea 13:6).

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

THE BEAUTY OF COMMON THINGS.

Home-makers—The World's Most Helpful Artists—A Breton Maiden's Life.

ONLY two peasants working in a field. A bell rings out, they bow their heads in prayer—a common-place scene witnessed in the Old World at every set of sun. Yet, one day, an artist seeing it, found beauty in the common-place, transferred it to canvas, and gave the world the lovely painting called "The Angelus."

The picture on this page is only that of a kitchen-scene—of a barefoot lassie at her task of paring vegetables. The artist found beauty and gives it to us in just such common-place things as pots and pans, an old broom and a basket of vegetables. This is the way we should take life—find beauty in the common-place, give beauty out of the common-place. It is no great credit to make a home beautiful if we have unlimited means at our command; to keep a home in perfect order if we can hire all the servants we want; it is no credit to make people happy if we have money to give all we wish, to do all we will. But out of nothing to give something; with limited means to make home so full of the radiance of a beautiful spirit that the rich might covet to dwell therein; this is really worth while. Of course a musician, a poet, a sculptor, a painter, a great writer, a great preacher, can give pleasure and do good—extraordinary gifts make it an easy task. But one cannot be listening to music, or seeing pictures or reading books all the time, while one must be living all the time. So, our world's most necessary, most useful, most blessed artists are those who fill common-place, every-day home-life with comfort and beauty. The well-made beds, the tidy parlor and the tidy kitchen, the flowers and the sweet, light bread on the table; above all the love that blesses the dinner of herbs, the smile that makes the humblest feast royal, the dear every-day patience that converts uncongenial tasks, hard trials, and even bitter sorrows, into ministers of grace—these are the masterpieces of thousands of artists who seek no fame, but except for whom the most beautiful thing in the world, true home-life, could not exist. "Whatsoever ye do, do it as unto the Lord," is a motto that will elevate the lowliest occupation into a dignity commanding recognition.

A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as by thy laws,
Makes that and the action fine.

IN AN OLD-WORLD KITCHEN

Artists have found in out-of-the-way places in Holland, Germany and Brittany, particularly pleasing subjects; for the hurry of the great world has not reached them, and the peasant's simple home-life is unruffled by outside influences. Perhaps, our Breton maiden is listening to the droning of the bees in the yard, in Brittany, everybody keeps bees, and the peasants regard them with something like affection. They have excellent pastures in Brittany, and later in the day she will milk some fine cows, the dairy industry is of large importance. When night comes she will spin flax and tell fairy tales to her little brothers and sisters; Brittany is rich in fairy-lore.

At a Persian Dinner.

Every one of the guests and their maids took part in the concert. Those who were sitting, held the back of the left hand in the right hand and semi-flexed a little, producing a peculiar slapping sound with the fingers and hands. The sounds, produced in concert, were fast or slow, according to the music. The guests seemed so entranced with the music that they forgot the time and themselves.

One of the hardest things for a European to know is how and when to rise. There are five or six kinds and degrees of rising on the entrance and the departure of guests. On certain occasions one should arise and stand up; again, one should only arise, then resume one's seat; there are also times when one should rise only a few inches from the ground. When the dishes are being handed around, those present, if used to society and its rules, will never accept first, but will say, with a bow of the head and inclination of the body: "Let your excellency be first served."

A Word to Farmers' Wives.

"No wise woman," writes a farmer's wife, "will stay all day indoors cooking, sewing, scrubbing and fretting. If the work must be done by your hands, go out under the trees a few moments every hour. Listen to the sweetest music on earth, gather a few flowers for your belt and hair and a bouquet for the table and you will go back rested and refreshed. By all means have flowers and flowers. We all love them, and in their care the children learn many a valuable lesson of industry, patience and refinement. Our men and children always bring me bouquets from field or roadside from the first violet to the golden-rod. It pleases me so much and shows not only their love for the beautiful, but their loving thoughtfulness for another."

The Considerate Daughter.

The considerate daughter never gets family finances into a snarl by expressing unreasonable wishes; she will not hold idle hands while mother's task grows heavier; and she will feel that, in a certain sense, she is a second mother to the little brothers and sisters growing up around her; her gentle influence can do much towards changing tears to smiles and in keeping quarrels out of the little company, who look to her as an example and for guidance. In the well-regulated home, be it rich or poor, love is the oil which keeps the machinery running so smoothly that everybody helps, and burdens fall heavily on none.

Work of the S. P. C. A.

During the late hot season in New York, our dumb friends, the horses, suffered greatly. Plodding along, drawing their burdens faithfully and patiently, they would drop prostrated with the heat. During this time the good work done by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was a comfort to everybody interested in the welfare and sufferings of our mute servants and helpers. The red wagons and ambulances of the Society were seen everywhere, working as hard for the beasts as hospitals do for man. Under the leadership of President Haines, the Society has reached a high degree of efficiency. In a certain sense work for the beasts is work for man—for man is the loser when he permits them to suffer.

In Autumn.

The shepherd winds are driving
Along the ways on high,
A merry flock of cloudland sheep
To meadows in the sky.

Robert Loveman, in Poems. Lippincott, Phil.

A LITTLE FENCE.*

MAKE a little fence of trust
Around to-day;
Fill the space with loving words,
And therein stay.

Look not through the sheltering bars
Upon to-morrow.
God will help thee bear what comes
Of joy or sorrow.

A New Order.

THE Austrian Monarch lately cr[illegible] a new order for women, calle[illegible] Order of St. Elizabeth, after I[illegible] beth Landgravine of Thuring[illegible] princess of long ago, famous for he[illegible] tleness and good works. Pretty st[illegible] (many doubtless legendary) surroun[illegible] life: certain it is she was so pitiful[illegible] generous to the poor, and gave h[illegible] and her money so freely in ministry, her brother-in-law deprived her of t[illegible] gency on the ground that she was wa[illegible] her estate in alms, and with[illegible] three infant children she was [illegible] en from home without the b[illegible] necessaries of life. Her pro[illegible] was restored, her son dec[illegible] heir, but renouncing powe[illegible] herself, she devoted her wealth[illegible] her life to the relief of suff[illegible] humanity, ministering chiefl[illegible] those afflicted with loathsome[illegible] eases. A pope canonized her [illegible] her death, miracles are said [illegible] performed at her tomb; but [illegible] all the mirage of superstition [illegible] hide the loveliness of a char[illegible] which bloomed so fair in the [illegible] teenth century — that centur[illegible] which the Inquisition began t[illegible] its ugly head in France. The [illegible] will be conferred upon wo[illegible] noted for charitable gifts, for [illegible] cating children, caring for [illegible] sick, and for valuable researc[illegible] art and science. The pictur[illegible] Elizabeth on a cross, wrea[illegible] with garlands of roses, is th[illegible] sign. A story is told of bread [illegible] turned into roses when she [illegible] forth to feed her poor, and as [illegible] tracked by her enemies and a[illegible] to show what she carried: she [illegible] and lo! in place of bread t[illegible] were only fragrant roses. Our [illegible] erican women do not need d[illegible] ations to stimulate them in [illegible] works, but the Austrian Emp[illegible] has done a very pretty thing [illegible] the same.

India's New Vicerine.

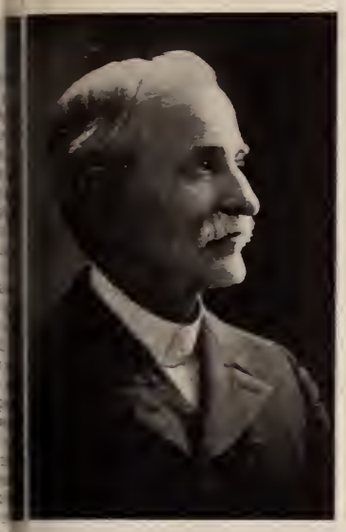
This lady, Mrs. Curzon (for [illegible] ly Miss Leiter, and an Amer[illegible] girl), is a remarkable linguist, d[illegible] is possessed of great beauty [illegible] wit. She was very popular in [illegible] York, Newport and Washing[illegible]n. In the capitol she was one of [illegible]e bright particular stars" of [illegible]ss Bayard's receptions (Mr. Ba[illegible] was then Secretary of State). It was observed at one of these [illegible]at in the circle around her were [illegible] resentatives of four natio[illegible] — French, Spanish, Italian and [illegible] man—and that, in the conversa[illegible]n, which was of a literary na[illegible]e, Miss Leiter was using with per[illegible]t fluency the language of each. [illegible] of the best things told of he[illegible]s the blow she gave to gossip is this [illegible]: Three sisters, brilliant but unscrupul[illegible]s, noted for their witty, mischievous tong[illegible]s, had a way of making up stories and [illegible]taching them to anyone who chance [illegible] offend them. One of these malic[illegible]s stories was being rehearsed in Miss [illegible]'s presence, and fair names were al[illegible]t to be blackened. "Did the Misses— [illegible] say that?" she asked. The narrator [illegible]mitted them as her authority. Miss [illegible]ter sighed, and said slowly: "Ba[illegible], murder and sudden death." From [illegible] day to this, the girls composing the [illegible]chievous trio have been known as "[illegible]tle," "Murder," and "Sudden Death."

The punishment — one which any[illegible] would feel, for no one would like to [illegible] known by such terrible names—was [illegible] served. The malicious talker is a men[illegible]e to what one values more than life; [illegible] idle talker often does quite as much ha[illegible]. Ill words are as cruel as blows.

To Save the Working Girls.

A Christian Home Opened for them in Pittsburg, Where Refuge is Afforded.

PITTSBURG, like every other large city, has a very large class of reputable girls, who work at an endless variety of occupations. They are working for honor as well as for a livelihood.



SHOWERS, MANAGER OF THE HOME.

or of them support, wholly or in part, dependent families. A large number of however, board. When they are employment comes a crisis in their Idleness adds largely to the pres- or needed money them astray. They too honorable to if they were per- to do so, when cannot pay their promptly, and soon to drift. When an virtuous girl be- drift is just the she needs a little such as she could at a Working Home.

In a large class of working girls work hard and long hours mere pittance for This drudgery and ceaseless grinds on them, they can bear these they can, during the look forward to a pleasant and comfortable for meals, lodging which to spend the ing. Here is the be- ning of many a down- their wages will not of any such conditions, and they take the cheapest and poorest lodg- which are usually surrounded and filled with all forms of vice. How girls have been unable to keep up unequal struggle and have at last a life of shame, with its attendant misery and deprivation!

People whose circumstances in life are such that they have never been through can best may say: "Yes, it does seem without they ought to endure it, and re- temptation." That will do very well talked of, but we see the girl's great fall. We feel that she can be saved how a hundred-fold easier than she can be rescued after she has fallen. If this working girl, during her long, weary hours of drudgery, could look for- ward to a Christian home, an appetizing supper, a cozy and pleasant room with cheerful and elevating surroundings, at a small cost, how much more easily could she resist the enticements to evil—how much less inclined to envy the finery, dress and idleness of the girls who pa- rade the streets!

A large class of working girls come from the country. They are entirely un- accustomed to city life. They come to the city expecting to find immediate em- ployment. They have no friends, but little money and no experience. They do not find immediate employment, and in some way, by deceit, fraud, or force, many are ruined.

The old Pittsburg Female College building on Eighth street has been secured as a home for these workers. It contains one hundred large rooms, and can comfortably accommodate over two hundred girls. There is a library, which formerly belonged to the college, a reading-room, a large room suitable for a sewing-room and a private writing-room, which give the place an air of home life and elevates intellectually and morally those under its care. The special design is to reach girls who earn very small wages, and give them a room and board in the "Home" at nominal rates. The girls are not made to feel that it is a charitable institution, but have a realizing sense that they are in the hands of friends who are doing them a kindness.

The Home is under the auspices of Hope Mission, of which Rev. E. M. Sandys is Superintendent. This Mission, with its several branches is doing a great and growing Christian work among the lower classes of Pittsburg and adjacent cities. Superintendent Sandys will answer all inquiries concerning the Working Girls' Home that may be addressed to him by any interested reader of this journal.

THE PITTSBURG WORKING GIRLS' HOME.

American Relics in Madrid.

Edmonde De Amici, speaking of the "Cabinet of Discoveries" (a room in the Naval Museum at Madrid), says: "One is no longer in Europe, nor in the century; one is in America of the fifteenth century. In the middle is a high trophy of the arms taken from the Indians of that newly-discovered land—shields covered with the skins of wild beasts, arrows of cane with feathered notches, wooden swords with sheaths woven of twigs, with hilts ornamented with horsehair, and scalp-locks falling in long streamers; clubs, spears, enormous axes, great swords with teeth like those of a saw, shapeless sceptres, gigantic quivers, garments of monkey skin, dirks of kings and executioners, arms of the savages from Cuba, Mexico, New Caledonia, the Carolines, and the most distant islands of the Pacific. There are pictures and memorials of the conquerors; the portrait of Columbus, of Pizarro, and of Hernando Cortez; on one of the walls the map of America by Juan de la Cosa; also models of canoes, boats and rafts used by the natives.

FAR FROM THE FOLD.

FAR from the fold, the bitter cold
North wind was moaning,
Out on the moor starving, my poor
Pet lamb was roaming;
I saw its need and begged to feed
It in the morning;
Harsh words were said to me instead
Of taking warning.

My lamb I found on the cold ground
By its dead mother.
I longed to save it from the grave
Wrong of another;
I had no home, but I have known
No grief so galling;
For cruel might conquering right
Made wrong appalling.

O! mother dear! Do you live near
The cross a-praying?
That he may seek and ever keep
Your lambs from straying.
If grief like mine lives through all time,
What is his sorrow?
To find them cold, far from the fold,
Upon the morrow.

Sad Tales from the Klondike.

Sorrowful stories are coming back from the Klondike. One returned Klondiker, a well-known inventor, Jacob H. Myers, has this to say of the gloomy side of gold seeking in the Alaskan mining country:

Little is said about the ninety and nine unfortunates. Only the large gold sacks of the few rich-paying mines, together with the aggregate product of the very many producing, but non-paying small mines, are extolled. For example, I might have in self-laudation added my little gold sack to the general list on the arrival of our ocean steamer and failed to say I had expended nearly double its value in its procurement, but it would have been acting a lie and helping to injure and deceive my fellow-men.

It is truly claimed that in the Klondike or any other gold-bearing region, not more than one man out of a hundred is fortunate. The ninety-nine unfortunates expend as much money and endure the same hardships and extortions as the lucky man. The miners say that in their opinion $5 is spent for every dollar taken out by the lucky ones. The great mass either die or return dead broke. The privations of the miner along the Yukon are terrible. Exposure and constant unremitting drudgery are his lot. No roads are provided, and all his supplies, firewood, and other necessaries must be packed on his back and carried for long distances. Swamps and bogs on mountains must be struggled through, and most of them who do not die are broken down in health.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Sorrow on the Sea—A Word About Flannels—Morbid Fears of Paralysis—As to Growing Stout, &c.

AMONG the saddest of recent events have been the death by drowning off Montauk Point, of General Wheeler's young son, Thomas, and his friend Lieutenant Kirkpatrick, of Lexington, Va. It was just at the end of our terrible September hot wave, and a change with wild wind and fierce thunder came suddenly, and it may be that in the roughness of the water, and the furtive stealing on of the "sea-puss" in the undertow, even strong swimmers could not have held their own. That expression, "sea-puss," is very striking: you think of the feline approach as of all the tiger tribe, the claws sheathed in velvet, then extended, and in an instant the victim pounced on and drawn into the deadly embrace. God help the man who falls into the clutches of the fatal "sea-puss."

Death by drowning is said to be an easy one: at least persons who have been almost gone into the other life and then drawn back into this, have so reported it; their sensations after the first shock, and the first vivid flashing into memory of all they have ever known, having been pleasurable, rather than painful. But to the survivors, few forms of death are so hard to bear. Imagination dwells on the scene, on its possibilities of agony, and the helplessness of the victims, and a mother's heart, nor, for that matter, a father's, is never the same after a dear child has been snatched from it by the fatal spell of the waters.

During our war many men have died and been buried at sea, another heart-breaking experience for the dear ones at home. To part with the loved ones is excruciating—and all we can do is to wish for all who go through this trial, the comforting sense of God's presence. There is coming a day when there shall be no more sea. No more moaning of the waves. No more dashing of the surf. No more tempests gathering blackness. No more going down of ships. No more collisions in the fog. No more sorrow on the sea.

A GOOD many of my friends write to ask what I think about the second coming of our Lord. In common with a great multitude of believers, I hope and watch and wait for that triumphant return of Immanuel, to right every wrong, to set his people free, to bring order out of confusion. But of that day and that hour knoweth no man. Said good, old Matthew Henry, "Our looking at Christ's coming as at a distance is the cause of all those irregularities which render the thought of it terrible to us." The late Doctor A. J. Gordon, in his thoughtful book entitled "Ecce Venit," has some practical words to say on this theme, words which I quote for those who are interested, a great and growing company of Christian men and women:

"There is enough of certainty on this subject to feed the lamp of our faith; and enough of uncertainty to make us very careful and solicitous lest when the Bridegroom comes we be found among the foolish virgins, saying, 'Our lamps are gone out.' The chief point is that this hope have a living and abiding-place in our affections and our thoughts. 'Thought,' says a Christian father, 'is the sleepless lamp of our soul.' It is a lamp, indeed, that burns with varying brightness, flaming up in moments of intense study and utterance, and dying down in sleep, till there is only the pale glimmer that remains in dreams. But it is a lamp that is never really quenched, for however profound the slumber, it only requires a word to wake us, and to bring all our mental powers into instant activity. Thus must it be with the holy lamp of watchfulness, always trimmed and burning, but not of necessity always shining in full strength. That is to say we need not be every moment thinking of Christ's return, talking of it, and preaching it. This hope should rather minister to us, than be ministered to by us. Instead of perpetually dwelling on it and reiterating it, we should be lighted by it in our busy toil of gathering the guests for the marriage feast, and doing the work which our absent Lord has committed to us."

These are very sensible words, which those of us who are waiting "till he come," may take into our very hearts.

I AM under great obligations to very many correspondents for their kindness in answering my recent inquiry about the washing of flannels. I have collated the various letters, and they will be of great use to me, not only in the matter of personal use in my housekeeping, but they will also help me in my public work. I will give you one or two of the recipes. As I have a great many, you will understand that I cannot publish all, nor did you intend this. The dear ladies who have written have made it plain that they did so from pure friendliness to me, and I only wish I could send every one of them a letter of thanks. As it is, dear friends, please believe that whenever and wherever I may meet you in days to come, we shall not need to be introduced. One of my correspondents says that her way to wash flannels is to shave some good white soap fine and dissolve it in a little hot water. With this, make a suds of cold water, adding to every pailful one tablespoonful of ammonia. Let the flannels soak in this for ten or fifteen minutes, no longer; then wash, rubbing with the hands, and avoiding the wash-board if possible. Never rub soap on flannels. Rinse in cold water; wring as dry as possible through a wringer; shake and pull the garment into shape and dry as quickly as possible, in summer in the sun. Never let flannels freeze, and never iron them; both these processes will shrink them. I notice that some friends speak of ammonia soap; others advise tepid water; all unite in saying that the process must be one of thought and care, and that flannels cannot be left in the hands of careless and ignorant hirelings. The directions, however, all concur in this—that it is best not to use any sort of washing soda, washing-powder or such thing; that woolen garments should always be washed separately, and not put in with the rest of the household clothing. One excellent method, furnished by a company which deals in woolen wear, is this: Cover the clothes well; after an hour's soaking, wash out by drawing through the hand; refrain from rubbing or kneading the fabric. Very dirty spots should be brushed with a soft brush. To thoroughly remove the soap, rinse twice in water, hanging clothes up lengthwise to dry. Iron while still damp, stretching the article to the necessary length and width. The iron should not be unnecessarily hot. A number of friends, however, unite in advising that the housekeeper dispense with ironing, and I myself think this very sensible. Also a large number of correspondents say that the rinsing should be in soapy water rather than in clear water. I am especially thankful to one or two dear old ladies who have written to me, and I will try several methods before I decide on the one which I shall adopt.

DO not be afraid, dear Madam K., that you are threatened with paralysis. Above all things, cease to be afraid of any coming disease. A physician will give you remedies which will make you more comfortable and reduce your present nervousness, which, I fancy, is due to fatigue. You have been overworked and have had a great deal of care and anxiety for a long time. Try to take life less seriously. All work and no play is bad for any of us, and breaks down even the toughest constitution. Perhaps your food is not nourishing in its particular adaptedness to you. The doctor will tell you what diet you should have. I don't believe you are in the slightest danger, judging from your letter, of becoming a confirmed invalid.

ABOUT taking on too much flesh, dear Priscilla K., I am sure a number of friends can sympathize with you. It is a trial to discover that one's graceful slimness is vanishing, that one's proportions are no longer symmetrical, that one's abdomen is absurdly prominent. There are ways of moving, sitting and standing, which keep women from looking clumsy, and assist them in carrying the too ample endowment of flesh, which is the frequent portion of middle age. Sit well back in your chair and sit up straight. Stand with shoulders back and stomach well held in. Wear, if you choose, broad elastic garters, like stocking supporters, over your abdomen, attaching them at the top to your corset, and at the bottom to your stockings. These are comfortable adjuncts to the toilet of the stout woman. Have your gowns made long in front—not so long as to make you stumble—but really long; a dress too short in front ruins the effect of any costume, and is most undesirable for a woman when, for any reason, temporary or otherwise, she is inclined to stoutness. Stoop down and pick up pins whenever you can find the time. This has an excellent effect on the abdominal muscles. And take to yourself, dear stout friend, the comfort of thinking that it is far better to be stout than to be scrawny.

TWO REMARKABLE CONVERSIONS.

Divine Grace as Exemplified in the Transformation of Two Very Different Lives.

The Conversion of Captain John Morton.

CAPT. JOHN MORTON had been for almost fifty years a leading dealer in brick and other building material in Brooklyn, N. Y. He was widely known and universally respected. He had for many years been a regular attendant of the Simpson Methodist Church in Brooklyn, and had contributed generously to its support. Though the symbol of righteousness, he had never professed faith in Christ, nor united with the church. During the winter of this year, on one afternoon, I called as a pastor, on Mr. Morton. After a pleasant chat I took an old book which contained a family record, from the table, and said: "This must be a heir-loom, sweet with earthly memories as well as full of divine inspiration." Then I read out of the book about Christ and salvation on and heaven. Tears came to his eyes, and I pushed upon his attention the question of his personal responsibility to God. He said he was not a Christian—had never been one. I asked him if he did not want to find Christ. Weeping like a child, he said, "I would." With the Cross full in view, we prayed earnestly together, and then and there found Christ as his personal Redeemer. He then gave me his name as a probationer in the church. He said: "I should like to be baptized."

An appointment was made for an evening, and when I came to the house to baptize Brother Morton. I found his two grown sons and two loyal daughters also desirous of receiving the sacrament of baptism. The whole family kneeled around the newly erected family altar, and were dedicated to God in baptism. It was thought that his usual sojourn at his summer home at Shelter Island would restore his health, but a change came over him for the worse, and he faded away until he fell asleep in the arms of his family and on the bosom of his Saviour. He was buried from his lovely home, 181 Washington Park, Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. Theodore S. Henderson, assisted by the writer, officiating. His body rests in Greenwood by the side of his wife who preceded him to the better land by thirty years ago.

(Rev.) FERDINAND C. IGLEHART.

The Gambler's Test of Religion.

Near the front of an eager crowd of listeners sat the most noted gambler and saloonist in Dyea, noted for its gambling and vice of all kinds. For the first time in its existence of a few short months, there was to hear a sermon from a Christian minister. The few Christian people were so anxious to hear the good man himself that they had gathered early, knowing the hall would be filled with the many who were ever seeking for something new. The newest thing just now was the coming preacher who had come so far into the frozen country, not for gold, not for the riches of earth that perish in a day, but that he might help these seekers after wealth to find the best of all riches—the love of God. As he opened the Book of God, he asked God to guide him to the passage that would fit his congregation. As he looked, foremost among them all he seemed to rise the face of Jim Crawford, the gambler. He had purposely seated himself directly in front of the preacher, so that he could look him in the eyes, because as he told the men before leaving the saloon, "I'm going to see what kind of a chap that fellow is, and if he is the right kind, I'll dig up, and I'll make you fellows dig up, too." Crawford was tall, and as head and shoulders above those around him, and his keen eye never wavered as he studied the man before him.

God makes no mistakes, and the passage which the preacher turned was this: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." After the reading of a few more verses and a short, earnest prayer for a blessing upon the Word, and upon the mother's boys who had gathered there, for in the crowd were only few women, the minister sang the second hat of all other songs most touches the hearts of wayward boys all over the land, "Where is My Wandering Boy To-night?" Before the song was ended many a tear was furtively wiped away by the sturdy men, and Jim, though he would not have owned it, felt as if just then he would have given all the dollars he had made if he could once more see that old mother away back there in the east. The minister took for his text the story of the Prodigal Son. When service was closed the first one to grasp his hand was the gambler, whose heart had been touched and who earnestly said: "If you will stay we will build you a church in three weeks." "I'll think about it," said the preacher quietly.

The game had somehow lost interest for Crawford. He wandered off alone into the woods. "He knows I'm a gambler," he reflected, "and that I am the one who will build a church for him if he will stay. I'll see whether he will be willing to lose so big a fish as I am in defence of the truth. I'll ask him the question and have him answer to-night: 'Is gambling wrong?' and if he doesn't give a straight, plain answer, I shall know he is trying to hold on to his fish at the sacrifice of principle, and I'll drop him." So thinking, he went back to his room and wrote the question, and got a boy to take it to the minister, telling him not to tell who wrote it.

At night a larger crowd gathered than in the morning, and in the same place was Jim Crawford, waiting with some anxiety to hear the answer to his question. He did not have to wait long, because the minister, as if it were an unpleasant duty that he wished off his mind, took the slip of paper, and reading the question aloud, said: "I did not come here to make enemies, and if I had had my choice, I should not have spoken of gambling to-night on my first Sunday among you, because I know a number of you make your living in this way. But after praying much over the matter, I feel I cannot do otherwise than blow my trumpet with no uncertain sound, and leave results with God. Gambling is wrong—wrong because it robs wives and children of food and clothing; wrong because it makes no adequate return for what it takes, therefore it is swindling. The Bible says, 'Love your neighbor as yourself.' You cannot do it and gamble. Brother, whoever you may be who has asked this question, God loves you, but he cannot love your sin. Forsake it and follow your mother's God in the paths of righteousness. There you will find peace and rest to your troubled soul."

The man of God had stood the test. At the close of the service the gambler told him how he had tried him, and the minister's heart was raised in thankfulness to God that he had followed divine guidance and had been bold to speak the truth.

Jim Crawford was as good as his word, and stood by the preacher. The church was built and paid for through the earnest effort of Crawford and others. God honors those who honor him and his Word. The gambler will yet be as a trophy to God's power to save to the uttermost.

Aiding the Gospel Settlement.

This letter of acknowledgment from one who is well known to our readers speaks for itself:

NEW YORK, September 5, 1898.

Editor "The Christian Herald":

While we have many times this summer had cause to thank THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for Mont Lawn, this is not the only fresh-air work which has been going on through its columns; for money sent to our Gospel Settlement at 211 Clinton street, New York, by its readers, has made it possible for us to take to the sea air many hundreds of children for a day's outing. One of our workers has paid over three hundred visits among our tenement neighbors, seeking for such as need the fresh air the most. The cheap transportation to the sea air is indeed a great blessing. A day of breathing salt air, and a plunge for the children in the wild waves, strengthens happy hearts to again renew the struggle of a life on the East-side. While thanking your readers for these gifts, I must not forget to say that the flowers sent us are often found held tightly in the hand of our sick ones. We have distributed over sixteen hundred bouquets the last two months, mostly from your readers. SARAH J. BIRD.

The brilliancy of those pretty things, dainty women make and like to have about them, perishes miserably in the hot suds of a strong soap. Ivory Soap because of its mildness and purity if used in warm (not hot) water will brighten them after soiling, until they are equal to new.

The Peace Conference.

A Secular Journal Points Out the One Essential to Permanent Peace.

VARIED feelings have been evoked by the Czar's proposal of a peace conference. France alone has given it an absolutely unfavorable reception, but in other nations it has been received with more or less suspicion. It seems probable, however, that the conference will eventually be held. The object of it, as stated by Count Muravieff, is by no means radical. The Czar's hope appears to be limited to a suspension of competition. At present, if Russia, or France, or any other power, increases its army or navy, the other powers feel it incumbent upon them to make a similar increase.

Obviously much would be gained if each power pledged itself for a given time to make no addition to its fighting strength. A check would thus be administered to the growth of the evil that is becoming well-nigh intolerable. But a conference which could do so much, might do more. It might arrange a scheme for the reduction of armaments, which would leave the various powers in the same relative condition that they are now in. If such a result were achieved the way would be prepared for still more radical application of the principle. It is conceivable that having learned the benefits of reduced armaments, the nations might agree to get rid of them altogether, retaining only such a force as would suffice for the maintenance of order within their own borders. This, however, would involve the extinction of mutual jealousy and for France the abandonment of her cherished hope of recovering her lost provinces.

These are serious obstacles and they may prove insurmountable. But it is significant that the proposal should have been made and it reflects honor on the young potentate who has dared to suggest it. It shows that the horror of war and the desire to avoid it has found a place in the heart of at least one member of the royal circle.

Whatever may be the result of the proposed conference, there can be no doubt in the mind of any Bible-reading Christian that this groaning world will eventually enjoy a period of universal peace. It may not come in the way proposed; but it will come. It is significant that a secular journal, remarkable for its clear views of public affairs, should have pointed out the way in which this golden era will ultimately be ushered in. Commenting on the Czar's proposal, the New York Sun expresses doubts as to its feasibility. It compares the agreement that would be necessary to the schemes which railroad presidents have made to avoid the competition of rival roads and points out the uniform failure of all such efforts. It says:

"The records of business show that it is impossible to give the stability and prosperity of peace to any set of competitors until they are all actually unified under one absolutely controlling head. And so it will be of the nations. Universal peace will come when the globe has one ruler. Possibly the Czar might make a very successful general ruler; but for the present the United States will prefer to have American affairs managed under the supervision of Congress and the President."

Evidently the Sun does not entertain the idea that the globe will ever be under one ruler. But that is a hope distinctly encouraged in God's Word. The poets and prophets foresaw the day when Christ would reign, "and when the battle-bow shall be cut off: and he shall speak peace unto the heathen, and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth." Then, if not before, peace will be universal. The nations will learn war no more, and all will bow to the Prince of Peace.

Twenty Funny Stories of MARK TWAIN

They relate to Mark Twain's eccentricities, and his aptness in making the most ordinary episodes appear ludicrous. The stories are brimful of fun.

When I Stood Face to Face With Death

General A. W. Greely, the great Arctic explorer, tells here, for the first time in print, the graphic story of his fearful exile of 278 days at the North Pole, when his comrades daily dropped dead at his side, and when all waited day by day for death to come.

Miss Wilkins in Her New England Home

An entire photographic page will show the author of "Jerome" and "Pembroke" as she is at home: her friends as they grouped around her; going out to walk with her dog; with her favorite cat; and in an evening gown ready for a reception.

PATRIOTISM.

How the Christian May Prove his Love for his Country. Ps. 33: 1-22.

There are many ways of showing our patriotism. The commonest way and the easiest is the Fourth of July celebration, which can be done with a few firecrackers, the raising of a flag, perhaps a "spread eagle" speech at some political meeting. A more trying test has just occurred in responding to the President's call for troops. It is marvelous how quickly and enthusiastically the response came, and even allowing for the motives which doubtless caused men to volunteer, there must have been underlying all, a noble and sincere love of country. But there is another way in which patriotism may be displayed which will serve the country much better than this. It is the stand the Christian may take for truth and righteousness. There are some of our States in which such a stand sadly needs to be taken. It is inconceivable that men such as are now at the head of affairs could be elected, if the Christian men of the community stood together and worked together for the right. There are, we admit, cities and States in which our system of manhood suffrage puts the power in the hands of the worst element of the population, but even in these the protest of disinterested, conscientious men is frequently heeded and the influence is felt. The political parties in other States are so evenly balanced that a compact body of Christian men acting and working together, could hold the balance of power and dictate and get nominations if they could be persuaded to act in independence of party. We are justly proud of our country. No men on earth has a record like ours and no land in which there are such possibilities of future greatness, but we have need to remember that it is righteousness which exalts a nation, while sin is a disgrace to any people.

THE VICTORY OF ISRAEL.

The Turning-Point in Jacob's Life and the Lesson he Learned. Gen. 32: 24-29.

It is difficult to understand in all its solemn purport the turning-point in this night of Jacob's history. He was evidently in sore trouble. The wrong he had done his brother seemed to be bringing its retribution. Jacob's conscience smote him, but he is still the same scheming Jacob he had ever been. He knows his brother's nature, and with his old confidence in his own management he proceeds to deal with it. He arranges a series of presents and sends them forward with the conviction that before Esau reaches him and his best beloved ones, his wrath will be disarmed. Then in the darkness he goes forward to meet that as in other crises of his life craft and dexterity will save him. But not so is he to enter on his inheritance of the promised land. Another antagonist must meet him. Jacob, with his old self-confidence, wrestles with him. He would go forward in his own strength. So, many a man begins the Christian life; so, he goes forward to wrestle with temptation. Jacob learns a lesson that has been learned since time in tears and bitter woe. He seems to succeed during the hours of darkness, during which the struggle lasts; but with the first faint streaks of dawn the antagonist touches the muscle in Jacob's thigh, on which all his wrestling power depends, and it shrivels, showing him how easily he might have been overcome at the beginning of the struggle, and how vain is all self-confidence in conflict with such an antagonist. He must plead now and receive entrance, as a favor. He wants a blessing. That is the attitude in which alone a blessing can come. Self-confidence must be abandoned. So he prevails with God, as other men prevail when they take God's way. He could wrestle no longer, but he could cling and obtain that the blessing he could not win by strength. Jacob was a new man after that night. The old trickery and craft were abandoned, and in humble confidence in God he gained new power.

THE STORY OF CONSUMPTION

How Its True Nature Was Discovered and Established—The First Authenticated Cases of Its Cure—Progress of Medical Science in Antiseptic Medicated Air Treatment—Lecture by Robert Hunter, M.D.

In 1851—forty-seven years ago, while engaged in general practice—I was suddenly attacked by hemorrhage from the lungs, followed by the usual symptoms of consumption—cough, purulent expectorations, loss of flesh, hectic fever and night sweats.

Before that I had been for months troubled with a bad cold, which, instead of wearing itself out, as I had hoped, gradually developed into tuberculosis, and brought me face to face with the most dreaded of all human diseases.

Realizing that I could not cure myself, and knowing if something more than I then knew of was not done to arrest its progress that my life was soon to end, I naturally turned to my college for help. Dr. John H. Swett, author of a learned book on lung diseases, professor of theory and practice in the New York University, etc., etc., had been my preceptor in my student days, and I appealed to him as my first hope. But, alas! he confessed his inability to cure me, said I "knew all he knew about consumption, and no remedy or mode of treatment was known to the profession by which it could be arrested." He, however, suggested that I consult the famous French physician, Baron Louis of Paris, who had a world-wide reputation, and might have found out something new.

I went to Europe to obtain his advice, and all I gained for the fatigue of seven thousand miles of travel was a few kind words of sympathy, coupled with the assurance that there was no remedy within his knowledge for my disease. Leaving Paris I went to London and consulted Drs. Carswell, Walshe and Williams, three of the most noted English physicians of that day; but it proved all in vain. I then, for the first time, clearly understood the utter inefficacy of the usual treatment of lung disease. The highest medical experience could not, by it, hold out to me one ray of hope. I said to myself: "If the doctrines taught by our medical colleges and held by all practising physicians are true, and treating the lungs through the stomach is the best that can be done for me, my state is hopeless indeed."

But the instinct of self-preservation, and my natural love of life, made me question whether consumption was really "an inherited taint of the blood and general system which no known medicine could reach or remedy," as I had been taught and all physicians then believed. To resolve my doubts I went to the Library of the British Museum, where I could consult all ancient and modern works bearing on my disease, and began an exhaustive examination of everything written on the origin, history and nature of consumption. Commencing with the works of the father of medicine, Hippocrates, who wrote 343 years before the birth of Christ, I traced the course of consumption down through all succeeding ages to 1850—a period of more than 2,000 years—carefully comparing the doctrines taught at different periods with the accounts given of its symptoms, the manner in which it began in the cases described, the practices of the different writers, and their opinions regarding its best treatment and the possibility of its cure.

In this vast field of medical research I gathered a mighty array of facts, which dissolved the flimsy doctrine taught by the medical schools into thin air, proved it false and untenable, and the treatment based upon it to be a worthless empiricism, which doomed to death every one subjected to it. I traced hundreds of cases of consumption through all their stages without finding one case that could be charged to blood taint or transmission by inheritance. The history of the cases showed that they all began in colds and congestions of the bronchial tubes, which developed later into inflammation, causing abrasions of the epithelium. A raw surface was thus exposed to the germs of the air, which those deadly parasites fastened upon and transformed what was only a bronchial cold into confirmed consumption. This shows you why consumption never was and could not possibly be cured by the stomach treatment then employed by physicians. Their remedies neither reached the seat of the disease, nor acted on the malignant germs, which caused and kept it up.

Consumption is a local disease of the lungs, and no local disease was ever cured, except by applying remedies directly to the part affected. This axiom of medical science is true of all diseases and all organs of the body. When the lungs are sick, the only curative course is to apply remedies directly to them. If curative remedies so applied fail to cure, you may be sure no roundabout and indirect application of such remedies could possibly succeed.

When I had reached these satisfactory conclusions about consumption the first ray of rational hope dawned on my mind, and I resolved at once to apply a local treatment to my own case. I knew there was only one way in which local treatment could be applied to the lungs, and that there were no instruments for reducing liquids to a gaseous state, or experience of their action when so administered to guide me. I had to invent the first inhaling instrument ever employed for the cure of the lungs, and began to treat myself by inhalation, guided by my knowledge of chemistry, the properties of medicine and of the nature of the disease as I then understood it. When I found any medicines too strong, or too harsh in their action, I changed them for others and went on step by step until I had tried every agent of the Materia Medica which had healing, antiseptic or germicidal properties. The feelings of greater relief and benefit experienced from some medicines over others finally enabled me to decide on definite prescriptions, applicable to the varying conditions of the lungs. Under this treatment all my symptoms were ameliorated; the spitting of blood ceased, expectoration became freer and without those racking fits of coughing which previously attended it. My flesh and strength came back, and within a year I had climbed up out of the valley of the shadow of death and stood again upon the plain of assured health. I got well in defiance of the predictions of my medical friends and those wise professors who had so confidently pronounced my doom.

Shortly after I began with medicated air inhalations, and before I could form any sure judgment of their curative effects, a gentleman, Mr. Frederick T. Andrews, came to me from Canada, on his way to Baltimore to visit a sister supposed to be dying of consumption. I was interested in his account of her condition, and explained to him what I was doing for myself. He became greatly excited and entreated me to accompany him to Baltimore, saying he felt God had guided him to me, and that if I would only go with him his sister would be saved. I shall never forget the spectacle that greeted us as we entered the sick chamber of that little home on Eutaw Street, Baltimore. There bolstered up in bed, with a wash basin apparently half full of blood by her side, lay a beautiful girl of eighteen, white as marble, a cold clammy sweat standing on her forehead, and what appeared the imprint of death in every lineament of her features. It was not possible to believe she could last more than a few days; but, at their earnest entreaties, I determined to make an effort to save her. I went to a tinsmith and had a rude inhaler made, which would lie on her pillow and enable her to breathe without the effort of sitting up. I got a chemist to put up the prescription I was using for myself; and, after giving instructions, left her, feeling no confidence that it could result in any permanent help. But she used it with immediate benefit, and in about ten months regained perfect health, returned to Canada, married shortly afterward, and is alive to-day, the mother of stalwart sons and daughters.

Another remarkable case was James Bynum's, of Brooklyn, who hearing of my treatment from his physician, came and begged me to receive him as a patient. He said he was the last of a consumptive family, two sisters and a brother having already died of consumption. He had been troubled with catarrh several years before his lungs became affected. From June to October he was treated by the late Prof. Swett, who pronounced his case hopeless. He had hemorrhages from the lungs, incessant cough, expectorated purulent matter; had a chill every morning, followed by raging fever in the afternoon, and was bathed at night in cold, clammy sweat, had lost in three months 27 lbs. in weight and was then so feeble from emaciation as to be barely able to stand. On examination I found a large cavity in the apex of his right lung, from which he was spitting up pus and softened tubercule, while around the diseased part the lung was dull and filling up. No one could be in a more distressing condition of apparently hopeless misery. I made my first prescription October 10, 1851, and continued to treat him through the winter and following summer. His progress was slow for a time and often interrupted by relapses. But in a little over 15 months from the commencement of the treatment he was so far recovered as to be able to return to business and by the following spring had regained within seven lbs. of his best weight before his sickness and lost every bad symptom.

These three cases—the cure of my own lungs after the highest authorities of the profession had pronounced me hopeless, the saving of the life of Miss Andrews, of Baltimore, and the healing of Bynum's lungs after he was abandoned as beyond the reach of human aid—confirmed the conviction of my mind that I had discovered the root of consumption and found a treatment by which it was as certainly curable as other serious diseases. (To be Continued.)

SINGER NATIONAL COSTUME SERIES.

THE American Volunteer, shipped to the Philippine Islands, almost half way round the world from our national capital, finds himself in a country where climate, vegetation, houses and people are entirely different from anything he ever saw. The cattle are only as large as goats, and the horse is almost a curiosity.

The population comprises about 200,000 creoles and Spanish half-breeds, with a few Europeans and Americans; the four million natives, divided into many tribes, each speaking a different language, are, in character and disposition, very like the southern negro. They are a peaceful, indolent people, working as field hands or day laborers when not occupied with cock-fighting. Women in the Philippine Islands are quite independent, retaining their maiden name, with the addition of "de" before the husband's name. A widow buries her husband's name with him and immediately is known again by her girlhood name.

A grown man and woman, natives of the islands, are shown above, each operating a Singer hand sewing-machine. The original photograph was taken on the island of Luzon by an agent of The Singer Manufacturing Co., whose offices have been established in this far-away country for several years.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

G. W. B. Baton Rouge, La. What was the famous prayer test proposed by Tyndall as mentioned in Dr. Talmage's recent sermon?

Prof. Tyndall proposed, so far as we can remember, that in two hospitals, or in two wards of the same hospital, patients should be gathered suffering from the same disease, and each group having as nearly as the physicians could tell, equal chances of death or recovery. Then, that all Christendom be requested to pray for the recovery of the members of one group and not pray for the other group, in order to see if prayer was answered. The test was so clearly unfair and the difficulties in the way so insurmountable, that it was never made.

S. A. T., Ferguson, Va. Were not Adam and Eve driven from the garden for fear they would eat of the tree of life and live forever?

Nothing is known of them beyond the meagre facts recorded in Genesis. The subject is not really of practical importance. Every man has his own fall and excludes himself from the garden of innocence; but he has the promise of access through Christ to the tree of life and the assurance that by faith in him he may have everlasting life. That being so, we need not speculate about Adam and Eve.

A Farmer's Daughter. I would like to enter a hospital to fit myself for a trained nurse. Will you kindly advise me how to apply? To what hospital would you recommend me?

Write to any hospital in any city, address the "superintendent," and state that you desire to take up nursing as a profession. You will receive an application blank, which you fill out and return. If this is satisfactory, it is accepted (you being notified) and filed away until your turn comes to be called "for duty." You cannot fail to get a good training at any general hospital. If living near New York City you might apply to St. Luke's, Bellevue, or the New York hospital.

B. B., Washington, N. J. 1. What is the origin of three cheers? 2. Why are twenty-one guns always fired as a national salute?

1. We do not know. Ordinary books of reference give no information upon the subject. 2. It is a matter of graduation. Thus, eleven guns is the salute for a commodore, thirteen for a rear admiral, seventeen for admiral, and so on, the guns fired increasing in a certain ratio for Secretary of the Navy, representatives of foreign governments, etc., until the maximum of twenty-one is reached in greeting the President of the United States or in any national salute.

Jessie F., Altoona, Pa. 1. What has the war with Spain cost our government from the beginning to date? 2. What was our loss of life?

Approximately $114,500,000, of which $78,500,000 was expended for the Army and $36,000,000 for the Navy. 2. The number of men killed in the Navy was very small, thirteen men and one officer having been killed in battle, and one man drowned and thirty-eight wounded. In the army 231 men and thirty-three officers were killed in battle. The number of officers and men wounded is estimated at 1,300.

B. K. C., Washington, Pa. If a man has a habit of any sort, binding, to quit which would cause him to become a Christian regardless of the habit? If he abandoned the habit, would he lose his opportunity to accept Christ.

It would be rash to answer the question so unconditionally. We can only state general principles. Christ accepts the sinner however contrite he may be. No matter what his habits may be, if he comes to him Christ if he comes to him earnestly and sincerely and repentantly, let Christ come to save his people from their sins. If the habit referred to is a sin, it will have to be abandoned. Christ cannot save us from the results of evil habits. He does save us from the habit. It may involve a struggle, but Christ expects that those whom he saves will put away everything that separates them from him. He that loses his life for his sake will find it eternal.

T. G. P., Ottawa, Ont. Does the belief that Christ will soon return the Millennium practically paralyze the efforts of the Church in soul winning?

No; there is the same reason for effort. The mission of the church is to preach the Gospel and gather out of the world a people prepared to receive him. If the Church thought that Christ would not come until the whole world was converted, it would have reason to despair of his coming. As a matter of fact, the most active and successful soul winners, such as Spurgeon, Moody and our leading evangelists, have been firm believers in the Premillennial coming of Christ. They did not find the belief paralyzing their efforts.

New York, Sept. 15, 1898. At different times your paper has with energy, efficiency and dispatch done a magnificent work in relieving the distress of starving Armenians and Cubans. Can you not now do something in the same line and immediately, for our sick and starving soldiers in camps, transports and railroad trains? Many young people and ladies are eager to contribute, but there exists no organized method by which they can do so, and we know that provisions fail to reach the men because there is no system of distribution. Later there will be time to fix and punish the neglectful officials. Now, it seems to us, is the time to relieve suffering. MISS W. AND MISS B.

There is already in full operation and doing excellent work of the character referred to by our correspondents, an organization known as the Women's National War Relief Association. Mrs. Walworth is the Managing Director and Miss Helen Gould the Associate Director. The Association has its headquarters at the Windsor Hotel, New York, and it has many branches throughout the State, and also in adjoining States. Far from forgetting the needs of our soldiers THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been aiding this relief work in every way, and very many of its readers are now gladly helping along the work of the Women's War Relief Association. Contributions should be sent to the Treasurer of the Association at the Windsor Hotel, N. Y. City.

Constant Reader, Harrisburg, Pa. Having seen one of the vest-pocket War Testaments issued by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I am very anxious to secure one of these unique little volumes as a souvenir of the war with Spain. Doubtless many others have the same desire, but, like myself, do not know where they can be purchased.

We have received a number of letters similar to that of our Harrisburg friend, inquiring about War Testaments. To meet this demand an extra supply has been ordered; but as the number is limited, we would suggest that any of our readers who desire copies should promptly send in their orders to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York. The Testaments will be mailed to any address, postage prepaid, for fifteen cents each, the rate per copy being the same whether one Testament or a dozen is ordered. This charge simply suffices to cover the cost of production, wrapping and postage.

This letter deals with the paramount topic which is engaging the attention of our statesmen at the present time—our new responsibilities, arising out of the recent war. The admonition it contains is a most timely one and will awake an echo in many hearts:

J. W. O., Lynchburg, Va. While we are rejoicing over our victories, and our national greatness, let us remember, and bear in mind, that the "Price of liberty is eternal vigilance." Where are the Republics of Greece and Rome? What caused their destruction? The answer is, not an outside enemy, but internal dissensions and corruption. They failed to recognize their duty and responsibility to God and humanity. When we look at Spain in her defeat and humiliation, we can but feel, in sadness, that another nation has proved recreant to its trust. We believe that the American Government was established under divine guidance and by divine sanction, but when we fail to fulfil our divine mission, when we cease to recognize our duty and responsibility to God and humanity, then the same chastisements that have been visited upon the nations of the past are in store for us. This is a divine law from which there is no appeal. It was Judge Story who said, "Heaven forbid that this Republic shall ever be added to the catalogue of republics, the inscription upon whose ruins is: 'They were but they are not.'" Let us add: God grant that it may be the mission of the American people to protect and foster the true rights and interests of humanity, till "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord," and "the earth shall be filled with his knowledge and glory as waters that cover the sea."

This distinguished head of the world's greatest municipality is preparing to visit the United States. Mr. Davies was once an apprentice boy, and is a friend of the poor, and interested in many charities.

I. H. C., Canisteo, N. Y. Several members of a Bible class with which I am connected claim that Solomon was not saved. How can that belief be reconciled with II. Samuel 7: 14, 15?

They may be able to tell you better than we. Why are you concerned about the man? You may be sure that in all cases God does right. It may be that at the close of his life he repented and sought pardon. There is a tradition to that effect. The sayings ascribed to him give the impression of a man disgusted with sin and dissatisfied with his own life, which are indications of a hopeful character. He appears never to have had the deep spirituality which characterized his father, but he had greater intellectual gifts.

PERSIA HUNGERS FOR THE GOSPEL.

Dr. Hannah Yoseph Tells of Religious Progress—Conversion of a Sheik—The Perils of Converts—How Persians Act at a Fire.

ONE of the most interesting cities of Persia is Maragha, from which I write you this letter. Even in Persia, where there is so much that is old, it is considered a very ancient city. Formerly it was larger than Tabriz, but it has now only 15,000 inhabitants, chiefly Mohammedans. There used to be a large number of Jews here, but a few years ago the Mohammedans almost exterminated them.

Maragha is beautifully situated. Though the thermometer registers ninety degrees in the day, the nights are cool and windy. A few miles northeast of the city, Mount Sahand proudly lifts its head and with its cooling breath refreshes the sweltering plain. Around the city are excellent natural springs of delicious water. The fruits of Maragha are famous throughout the empire. We have grapes, peaches, apricots, plums, pears, etc., in abundance, with plenty of milk and honey.

One of the most distressing spectacles around Maragha is that of the destitute lepers, who, sitting by the wayside, extend the hand, swollen to a shapeless mass by the disease, in an appeal for alms. Their cry is: "Ya Yaradan!" (O Creator) intended to remind the passer-by that the same great Being who fashioned his leprous body and gave him health and strength, ordained their lot. As they sit there they look mere heaps of rags, for they draw their tattered clothing over the head to hide their distorted features. The isolated village at which they live is at some distance from the city. I hope to visit it as soon as the condition of my patients will permit of my absence.

Since I have been here I have witnessed one of the largest fires that ever occurred in Persia. The first sign of it was a dense smoke which I noticed in the morning. I hurried to the roof of the house in which I was staying. The smoke was soon like a dense sheet over our heads. From the street below I could hear the cry: "Bazaar yanir! Bazaar yanir!" (The stores are on fire). The burning buildings were about a mile away and we could see distinctly the flames spreading from one store to another. The fire burned so fiercely that in little more than an hour and a-half over nine hundred stores and their contents were consumed. In the whole city all of the dry-goods stores, except four, were in ashes. So terrible was the scene that people thought the city was doomed and prepared to fly from it. Numbers of people were seen, half-clad and barefoot, hurrying in panic-stricken through the streets. The mayor did nothing to extinguish the fire. The Mohammedans cried: "Come O Moslem to the Musalia." This is the mosque, which is their favorite place of refuge in any crisis, whether it be the approach of an enemy, a political disturbance or some other agitating event. One of the Mollahs was heard reproving them in no measured terms. "You fools," he cried, "first put out the fire and save your homes and children. Then go to Musalia." It was strange to hear the stories of the disaster. One of the people, who stood near us, said he saw "the flame come like a fury, pass our house by and enter ing a store farther on, eat up everything in its way."

The characters of the people were revealed by the catastrophe. The Armenians not only showed energy, but neighborly kindness in fighting the fire. They ran to the Bazaar to help the men who had stores there and worked hard to subdue the flames. Others were intent on stealing and took everything they could lay their hands on. The men who in Persia answer to the occupation of express-men and district messengers with you, received numberless packages and valuables, which the owners directed them to take to the houses of friends for safety. Many of these never reached their destination but were carried off by the messengers to their own houses. Afterwards the government made a search of the houses and recovered some of the property and restored it to the owners. Hundreds of men who the previous night lay down content with their day's business and congratulating themselves on the possession of a comfortable competence are now in the direst poverty. Some of the sufferers committed suicide; some became insane; others frankly avowed their resolve never again to try to earn an honest livelihood, but to devote themselves in future to highway robbery as a more profitable business.

Theories of the origin of the fire are numerous. The most popular, especially among the Armenians, is that God sent the fire as a punishment on the Mohammedans, who are the principal sufferers, because of their persecution of the Armenians. Another theory that finds favor is that the store keepers were selling their goods too high and that is why God sent the fire from heaven to destroy their stocks. All seem to think the fire had a supernatural origin. There is some talk of a man with a cloak drawn over his face, pouring kerosene over the door of one of the stores, and afterwards applying a match, but that theory is not sufficiently supernatural to find acceptance.

A PERSIAN GOVERNOR AND HIS STAFF.

THREE OF THE MISSIONARY'S VISITORS.

The people are so ignorant and superstitious that they are liable to be imposed upon by any idle tale if it is sufficiently wonderful. Their prejudices, too, are easily excited. A missionary sent to Persia by the American Board has had to suffer all kinds of persecution. His patience and endurance have been wonderful. On one occasion he was summoned before a Mohammedan court for signing the marriage contract of a convert. The prosecution demanded that his hand be cut off as a punishment, and it was asserted that the judge had been bribed to pronounce the horrible penalty, but the Lord was with him and he was delivered. The missionary bears no enmity against his persecutors, and by his quiet, inoffensive, helpful life puts them to shame. The stories of his magnanimity are truly wonderful. He has been known to visit his worst enemies when they were sick and in need and to minister to them.

A very interesting convert has been made through this missionary's kindness and friendliness. It appears that he sheltered in his house a number of travelers who were in some temporary difficulty. He treated them kindly, supplied their needs, and while they remained in his house talked to them about Christ. They proved to be the servants of a powerful sheik, and when they went home, they told their master about the missionary. He wrote to thank him for his kindness to his servants and begged him to come to see him when he should travel near his home. He said he wanted to know more about the religion that the missionary had taught his servants. The missionary has been to pay a visit to the sheik and has been hospitably entertained. The sheik listened eagerly to the story of the Cross and was much affected. Since that time he has been converted and baptized. His wife, too, has declared herself a Christian. I understand that the sheik has thousands of followers who venerate him and kneel to him when he passes and beg his blessing. His conversion is not known among them, and I doubt whether he will have the courage to inform them. The consequences of an avowal of Christianity by such a man would be appalling.

A PERSIAN SHEIK.

Fanaticism has no limits here when a Mohammedan becomes a Christian. He may be killed with impunity on the spot, when he professes his faith. If he escapes that fate, he is liable to have his clothes torn from his back, his home and his business may be destroyed, and even his wife and children taken from him. Every channel of earning a livelihood is barred and starvation stares him in the face. Social ostracism, which is worse than death to these people, is carried to extremes. He is not allowed to enter the houses of his relatives and friends, even at weddings and funerals, which are occasions when ordinary quarrels are laid aside and all are welcome. It is no wonder that few Mohammedans have dared to confess Christ. There was one who had a woodyard and was fairly prosperous. After his conversion his woodyard was burned by his enemies. Another convert had to sell his house for a mere pittance. He could get no employment anywhere. He died in extreme poverty, and his family, after being cruelly beaten, are now scattered. I inquired about them but no one knew where they were. Truly in this land it costs much to follow Christ.

In spite of these persecutions, however, many precious jewels have been gathered in Persia for the Master's crown. Some already shine there, having sealed their testimony with their blood. Others still live and bear and suffer in patience. It is surprising that, knowing the penalty of becoming Christians, so many of the people will listen to the preaching. The women especially are eager to hear. It would not be considered decorous for them to appear at an open meeting led by a man, but I have seen them concealed behind a curtain, or behind a large wheat cabinet, which is usually about six feet high and twelve wide, listening eagerly. When a woman missionary comes, these poor women come to hear her, like a thirsty flock to a spring of water. Often the opposite roofs and windows are crowded with attentive hearers, besides the main congregation, which, for the greater part, is seated on the bare ground. They are very quiet except for an occasional "Wah, Wah," an expression of sorrowful surprise. At the end, the words "Khosha halina," meaning blessed news, are heard on all sides. Even at the house of the missionary I mentioned, the men gather in one room and the women in another. Through the open door the women can hear the missionary preaching to the men, though they cannot see his face. They strain their ears to catch the words of life and evidently have an intelligent interest in the Gospel message. There are more of them who can read than is generally known and these it is possible to reach with Testaments and tracts. Medical skill is a valuable help in reaching these women in their own homes. There is scarcely a home in this city that is not accessible to me and there are few in which it is not safe to speak to the women on the subject of Christ. What is greatly needed is a few sympathetic Christian women, who are capable of self-sacrifice and full of faith and love, to work for Christ in these Mohammedan homes. Another urgent need is a Christian school for the children. Since the lack of means compelled the Board to close its school, the children have been neglected, much to my sorrow, for in my opinion that is the most hopeful work.

CHARITY.

YE rich ones who last night were sleeping
Neath your covers of silken and down,
Give a thought to the poor that are weeping,
Without shelter, a bed, or a crown.

Ye fathers who came home at even,
To a home that is happy and bright;
There are others whose hearts are nigh broken,
Worn out with this world's bitter fight.

Ye mothers whose children are lying
In their snug beds, so cosy and warm—
Do you think of the little ones dying,
Exposed to the wind and the storm?

While you feast on the choicest of dainties,
And you laugh at the chill winter's blast;
There are thousands who're starving and fainting,
Ye favored, how long will it last?

And when at the end of life's journey,
We meet in that long-promised home,
Some soul you have helped with your money,
May lead you up nearer the throne.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

THE HOUNDED REINDEER.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Psalms 42: 1, ... } As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God.

DAVID, who must some time have seen a deer-hunt, points us here to a hunted stag making for the water. The fascinating animal called in my text the hart is the same animal that in sacred and profane literature is called the stag, the roebuck, the hind, the gazelle, the reindeer. In Central Syria, in Bible times, there were whole pasture-fields of them, as Solomon suggests when he says, "I charge you by the hinds of the field." Their antlers jutted from the long grass as they lay down. No hunter who has been long in "John Brown's tract" will wonder that in the Bible they were classed among clean animals, for the dews, the showers, the lakes washed them as clean as the sky. When Isaac, the patriarch, longed for venison, Esau shot and brought home a roebuck. Isaiah compares the sprightliness of the restored cripple of millennial times to the long and quick jump of the stag, saying, "The lame shall leap as the hart." Solomon expressed his disgust at a hunter who having shot a deer is too lazy to cook it, saying, "The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting."

But one day David, while far from the home from which he had been driven, and sitting near the mouth of a lonely cave where he had lodged, and on the banks of a pond or river, hears a pack of hounds in swift pursuit. Because of the previous silence of the forest the clangor startles him, and he says to himself: "I wonder what those dogs are after." Then there is a crackling in the brushwood, and the loud breathing of some rushing wonder of the woods, and the antlers of a deer rend the leaves of the thicket, and by an instinct which all hunters recognize the creature plunges into a pool or lake or river to cool its thirst, and at the same time by its capacity for swifter and longer swimming to get away from the foaming harriers. David says to himself: "Aha, that is myself! Saul after me, Absalom after me, enemies without number after me; I am chased; their bloody muzzles at my heels, barking at my good name, barking after my body, barking after my soul. Oh, the hounds, the hounds! But look there," says David to himself; "that reindeer has splashed into the water. It puts its hot lips and nostrils into the cool wave that washes its lathered flanks, and it swims away from the fiery canines, and it is free at last. Oh, that I might find in the deep, wide lake of God's mercy and consolation escape from my pursuers! Oh, for the waters of life and rescue! 'As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God.'"

The Adirondacks are now populous with hunters, and the deer are being slain by the score. Talking one summer with a hunter, I thought I would like to see whether my text was accurate in its allusion, and as I heard the dogs baying a little way off and supposed they were on the track of a deer, I said to one of the hunters in rough corduroy: "Do the deer always make for water when they are pursued?" He said: "Oh yes, Mister; you see they are a hot and thirsty animal, and they know where the water is, and when they hear dogs in the distance they lift their antlers and sniff the breeze and start for the Raquet or Loon or Saranac; and we get into our cedar shell boat or stand by the 'runaway' with rifle loaded and ready to blaze away."

My friends, that is one reason why I like the Bible so much—its allusions are so true to nature. Its partridges are real partridges, its ostriches real ostriches, and its reindeer real reindeer. I do not wonder that this altered glory of the text makes the hunter's eye sparkle and his cheek glow and his respiration quicken. To say nothing of its usefulness, although it is the most useful of all game, its flesh delicious, its skin turned into human apparel, its sinews fashioned into bow-strings, its antlers putting handles on cutlery, and the shavings of its horn used as a pungent restorative, the name taken from the hart and called hartshorn. But putting aside its usefulness, this enchanting creature seems made out of gracefulness and elasticity. What an eye, with a liquid brightness as if gathered up from a hundred lakes at sunset! The horns, a coronal branching into every possible curve, and after it seems complete ascending into other projections of exquisiteness, a tree of polished bone, uplifted in pride, or swung down for awful combat. The hart is velocity embodied. Timidity impersonated. The enchantment of the woods. Its eye lustrous in life and pathetic in death. The splendid animal a complete rhythm of muscle, and bone, and color, and attitude, and locomotion, whether couched in the grass among the shadows, or a living bolt shot through the forest, or turning at bay to attack the hounds, or rearing for its last fall under the buckshot of the trapper. It is a splendid appearance that the painter's pencil fails to sketch, and only a hunter's dream on a pillow of hemlock at the foot of St. Regis is able to picture. When, twenty miles from any settlement, it comes down at eventide to the lake's edge to drink among the lily pods and, with its sharp-edged hoof, shatters the crystal of Long Lake, it is very picturesque. But only when, after miles of pursuit, with heaving sides and lolling tongue and eyes swimming in death the stag leaps from the cliff into Upper Saranac, can you realize how much David had suffered from his troubles, and how much he wanted God when he expressed himself in the words of the text: "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God."

Well, now, let all those who have coming after them the lean hounds of poverty, or the black hounds of persecution, or the spotted hounds of vicissitude, or the pale hounds of death, or who are in any wise pursued, run to the wide, deep, glorious lake of divine solace and rescue. The most of the men and women whom I happened to know at different times, if not now, have had trouble after them, sharp-muzzled troubles, swift troubles, all-devouring troubles. Many of you have made the mistake of trying to fight them. Somebody meanly attacked you, and you attacked them; they depreciated you, you depreciated them; or they overreached you in a bargain, and you tried, in Wall Street parlance, to get a corner on them; or you have had a bereavement, and, instead of being submissive, you are fighting that bereavement; you charge on the doctors who failed to effect a cure; or you charge on the carelessness of the railroad company through which the accident occurred; or you are a chronic invalid, and you fret, and worry, and scold, and wonder why you cannot be well like other people, and you angrily blame the neuralgia, or the laryngitis, or the ague, or the sick headache. The fact is, you are a deer at bay. Instead of running to the waters of divine consolation, and slaking your thirst and cooling your body and soul in the good cheer of the Gospel, and swimming away into the mighty deeps of God's love, you are fighting a whole kennel of harriers.

I saw in the Adirondacks a dog lying across the road, and he seemed unable to get up, and I said to some hunters near by, "What is the matter with that dog?" They answered, "A deer hurt him." And I saw he had a great swollen paw and a battered head, showing where the antlers struck him. And the probability is that some of you might give a mighty clip to your pursuers, you might damage their business, you might worry them into ill-health, you might hurt them as much as they have hurt you, but, after all, it is not worth while. You only have hurt a hound. Better be off for the Upper Saranac, into which the mountains of God's eternal strength look down and moor their shadows. As for your physical disorders, the worst strychnine you can take is fretfulness, and the best medicine is religion. I know people who were only a little disordered, yet have fretted themselves into complete valetudinarianism, while others put their trust in God and come up from the very shadow of death, and have lived comfortably twenty-five years with only one lung. A man with one lung, but God with him, is better off than a godless man with two lungs. Some of you have been for a long time sailing around Cape Fear when you ought to have been sailing around Cape Good Hope. Do not turn back, but go ahead. The deer will accomplish more with its swift feet than with its horns.

I saw whole chains of lakes in the Adirondacks, and from one height you can see thirty, and there are said to be over eight hundred in the great wilderness of New York. So near are they to each other that your mountain guide picks up and carries the boat from lake to lake, the small distance between them for that reason called a "carry." And the realm of God's Word is one long chain of bright, refreshing lakes; each promise a lake, a very short carry between them, and though for ages the pursued have been drinking out of them, they are full up to the top of the green banks, and the same David describes them, and they seem so near together that in three different places he speaks of them as a continuous river, saying: "There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God;" "Thou shalt make them drink of the rivers of thy pleasures;" "Thou greatly enrichest it with the river of God, which is full of water."

But many of you have turned your back on that supply, and confront your trouble, and you are soured with your circumstances, and you are fighting society, and you are fighting a pursuing world, and troubles, instead of driving you into the cool lake of heavenly comfort, have made you stop and turn around and lower your head, and it is simply antler against tooth. I do not blame you. Probably under the same circumstances I would have done worse. But you are all wrong. You need to do as the reindeer does in February and March—it sheds its horns. The Rabbinical writers allude to this resignation of antlers by the stag when they say of a man who ventures his money in risky enterprises, he has hung it on the stag's horns; and a proverb in the far East tells a man who has foolishly lost his fortune to go and find where the deer sheds her horns. My brother, quit the antagonism of your circumstances, quit misanthrophy, quit complaint, quit pitching into your pursuers, be as wise as, next spring, will be all the deer of the Adirondacks. Shed your horns.

But very many of you who are wronged of the world—and if in any assembly between here and Golden Gate, San Francisco, it were asked that all those that had been sometimes badly treated should raise both their hands, and full response should be made, there would be twice as many hands lifted as persons present—I say many of you would declare: "We have always done the best we could and tried to be useful, and why we should become the victims of malignment, or invalidism, or mishap, is inscrutable." Why, do you know the finer a deer and the more elegant its proportions, and the more beautiful its bearing, the more anxious the hunters and the hounds are to capture it. So if there were no noble stuff in your make-up, if you were a bifurcated nothing, if you were a forlorn failure, you would be allowed to go undisturbed; but the fact that the whole pack is in full cry after you is proof positive that you are splendid game and worth capturing. Therefore sarcasm draws on you its "finest bead." Therefore the world goes gunning for you with its best Maynard breechloader. Highest compliment is it to your talent, or your virtue, or your usefulness. You will be assailed in proportion to your great achievements. The best and the mightiest Being the world ever saw had set after him all the hounds, terrestrial and diabolic, and they lapped his blood after the Calvarean massacre. The world paid nothing to its Redeemer but a bramble, four spikes and a cross. Many who have done their best to make the world better have had such a rough time of it that all their pleasure is in anticipation of the next world, and they could express their own feelings in the words of the Baroness of Nairn at the close of her long life, when asked if she would like to live her life over again:

> Would you be young again?
> So would not I;
> One tear of memory given,
> Onward I'll hie;
> Life's dark wave forded o'er,
> All but at rest on shore,
> Say, would you plunge once more,
> With home so nigh?
> If you might, would you now
> Retrace your way?
> Wander through stormy wilds,
> Faint and astray?
> Night's gloomy watches fled,
> Morning all beaming red,
> Hope's smile around us shed,
> Heavenward, away!

Yes, for some people in this world there seems no let-up. They are pursued from youth to manhood, and from manhood into old age. Very distinguished ... Lord Stafford's hounds, the Earl of ... borough's hounds, and the Duke of ... land's hounds, and Queen Victoria pays eight thousand five hundred dollars a year to her Master of Buckhounds. But all of them put together do not equal in number or speed, or power to hunt down, the great kennel of hounds of which sin and Trouble are owner and master.

But what is a relief for all this pursuit of trouble, and annoyance, and pain, and bereavement? My text gives it to you in a word of three letters, but each letter is a chariot if you would triumph, or a throne if you want to be crowned, or a lake if you would slake your thirst—yea, a chain of three lakes—G-O-D, the God for whom David longed, and the God whom David found. You might as well meet a stag which, after its sixth mile of running at the topmost speed through thicket and gorge, and with the breath of the dogs on its heels, has come in full sight of Scroon Lake, and try to cool its projecting and blistered tongue with a drop of dew from a blade of grass, as to attempt to satisfy an immortal soul, when flying from trouble and sin, with anything less deep and high, and broad, and immense, and infinite, and eternal than God. His comfort, why it embosoms all distress. His arm, it wrenches off all bondage. His hand, it wipes away all tears. His Christ, atonement, it makes us all right with the past, and all right with the future; all right with God, all right with man, all right forever. Lamartine tells us that King Nimrod said to his three sons, "Here are three vases, and one is of gold, another of amber, and another of glass. Choose now which you will have." The eldest son, having first choice, chose the vase of gold, on which was written the word "empire," and when opened it was found to contain human blood. The second son, making the next choice, chose the vase of amber, inscribed with the word "glory," and when opened it contained the ashes of those who were once called great. The third son took the vase of clay, and, opening it, found it empty, but on the bottom of it was inscribed the name of God. King Nimrod asked his courtiers which vase they thought weighed the most. The avaricious men of the court said the vase of gold. The politic said the one of amber. But the wise men said the empty vase, because the letter of the name of God outweighed the universe.

For him I thirst; for his grace I beg; in his promise I build my all. Without him I cannot be happy. I have tried the world, and it does well enough as far as it goes, but it is too uncertain a world, too evanescent a world. I am not a prejudiced witness. I have nothing against this world. I have been one of the most fortunate, or, to use a more Christian word, one of the most blessed of men—blessed in my parents, blessed in the place of my nativity, blessed in my health, blessed in my field of work, blessed in my natural temperament, blessed in my family, blessed in my opportunities, blessed in my comfortable livelihood, blessed in the hope that my soul will go to heaven through the pardoning mercy of God, and my body, unless it be lost at sea or cremated in some conflagration, will rest down in the gardens of Greenwood among my kindred and friends, some already gone and others to come after me. It is to many has been a disappointment, but to me it has been a pleasant surprise, and yet I declare that if I did not feel that God was now my Friend and ever-pres...

lp, I should be wretched and terror-ricken. But I want more of him. I ve thought over this text until with l the energies of my body, mind and ul, I can cry out, "As the hart panteth ter the water brooks, so panteth my ul after thee, O God."

Through Jesus Christ make this God ur God and you can withstand anything d everything, and that which affrights hers will inspire you. As in time of an rthquake when an old Christian woman as asked whether she was scared, an-ered: "No, I am glad that I have a d who can shake the world;" or, as in financial panic, when a Christian mer-ant was asked if he did not fear he uld break, answered: "Yes, I shall eak when the fiftieth Psalm breaks in e fifteenth verse: 'Call upon me in the y of trouble; I will deliver thee and u shalt glorify me.'" Oh, Christian n and women, pursued of annoyances d exasperations, remember that this nt, whether a still hunt or a hunt in l cry, will soon be over! If ever a elp looks ashamed and ready to slink t of sight it is when in the Adirondacks leer by one tremendous plunge into Big pper Lake gets away from him. The appointed canine swims in a little way, t defeated, swims out again and cringes h humiliated yawn at the feet of his mas-. And how abashed and ashamed will your earthly troubles be when you have shed into the river from under the one of God, and the heights and depths heaven are between you and your pur-ers! We are told in Revelation 22: 15: Without are dogs," by which I conclude re is a whole kennel of hounds outside gate of heaven, or, as when a master es in through a door, his dog lies on steps waiting for him to come out, so troubles of this life may follow us to shining door, but they cannot get in. The hart has reached the rnal water brooks, and the panting of long chase is quieted in still pastures, l "there shall nothing hurt or destroy in God's holy mountain."

Oh, when some of you get there it will like what a hunter tells of when push-his canoe far up north in the winter l amid the ice-floes, and a hundred miles, he thought, from any other human be-s! He was startled one day as he rd a stepping on the ice, and he cock-the rifle ready to meet anything that ne near. He found a man, barefooted t insane from long exposure, approach-him. Taking him into his canoe and dling fires to warm him, he restored n and found out where he had lived. l took him to his home, and found all village in great excitement. A hun-d men were searching for this lost rn, and his family and friends rushed to meet him; and, as had been agreed his first appearance, bells were rung, l guns were fired, and banquets spread, l the rescuer loaded with presents. ell, when some of you step out of this derness, where you have been chilled l torn and sometimes lost amid the ice-gs, into the warm greetings of all the ages of the glorified, and your friends h out to give you welcoming kiss, the rs that there is another soul for ever ed will call the caterers of heaven to ead the banquet, and the bell-men to hold of the rope in the tower, and ile the chalices click at the feast, and bells clang from the turrets, it will be ene so uplifting I pray God I may be re to take part in the celestial merri-nt. "Until the day break and the dows flee away, be thou like a roe or a ng hart upon the mountains of Bether."

AMONG THE ITALIAN VAUDOIS.

How the Religious Exiles are Laboring to Spread the Gospel in the Homes of the Italian Peasantry.

BY CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK.

NOW that the American people have made personal acquaintance with that exceedingly interesting people, the Waldenses, through their colony in North Carolina, which was described in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some months ago, it may be well to report what their fellow-countrymen are doing in their own home land. During my residence in Italy, I have seen a great deal of their noble work for God, and have watched with deep sympathy their patient toil in Christ's service. The same ingenious methods of winning the confidence of the people, the same gentle, persistent efforts to shed light in the dark souls around them, and the same self-sacrificing spirit which they displayed in past centuries are to be seen now in these humble, faithful Christians.

Few people know what Italy owes to the Waldenses. Their earnest, faithful work in propagating the Gospel among the peasantry has been lost sight of in the terrible story of the sufferings they endured in the Swiss valleys. But they are workers, as well as sufferers, and have ever been so. Their work has been so quiet, so unobtrusive, that to Christians in other lands the name of the Waldenses, or the Vaudois, as they are sometimes called, suggests only the brave fortitude of a people persecuted, but never crushed. To one, however, who has mingled with the Italian people, the name calls up associations of faithful service, pure Gospel teaching and kindly assistance to the poor in Christ's name, which will never be fully known in this world.

The past record of this little band of confessors is a history of heroism. From the years 1100 and 1120, the dates of the catechism and their confession of faith, down to 1848, when the statute giving them civil and religious liberty was granted by Carlo Alberto, they were subjected to prolonged and cruel persecutions by the Church of Rome. Again and again did fire and steel invade their valleys, and again and again were they repulsed by the sturdy mountaineers. Sometimes these seemed overwhelmed, crushed, destroyed, but the seed of their faith was always cherished by a few followers of Christ, and with each abatement of persecution the trampled flower of Protestantism again lifted its head. Even their actual expatriation from their Piedmontese homes in the seventeenth century and their exile into Switzerland and Wurtemburg did not destroy them. It was their hideous sufferings at that time which drew from the poet Milton his cry:

Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold;
Ev'n them who kept thy truth so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshiped stocks and stones,
Forget not; in thy book record their groans
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
Slain by the bloody Piedmontese that roll'd
Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans
The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
To Heav'n.

But even the intensity of their tortures would not loosen the hold of the Piedmontese upon their ancient creed, and this period of darkness was followed later by the "Glorieuse Rentree" to their own valleys under the leadership of Henri Arnaud.

This gleam of light was, however, of short duration. The Romish Church would not so readily yield up to what it called heresy any of those it considered its flock. More persecutions followed, and finally it seemed as if the work of extermination was nearly accomplished. Centuries of tyranny had crushed the hope from the sufferers. Their spirit was broken, their ancient courage was well nigh gone, and with expectation of freedom, desire had failed, their religious life had become dull and cold, and education was at a low ebb.

THE WALDENSIAN CHURCH HOUSE.

At this time, in 1827, two Englishmen, Dr. Gilly and General Beckwith, the latter a man of ample fortunes, and both possessed of great abilities, went among them, and having roused interest and raised money in Great Britain for the aid of the persecuted church, devoted themselves to elevating and educating the Waldenses to something like their former standing. For thirty years these two indefatigable workers labored among their chosen people, providing schools, founding a college, fitting pastors for service, and restoring churches. The two Englishmen always kept in view the possible emancipation of Italy, and the work that the Vaudois would then be able to do in carrying Protestant truth among the Italians. To fit the Waldensians for this missionary work, many of the theological students were sent to Florence to learn the Tuscan tongue, and on their return the language was introduced into the schools in the valleys.

As a result of this foresight, when the advanced policy of Carlo Alberto gave the statute of liberty to the people in 1848, it found the Vaudois ready to profit by their freedom. The Act for the emancipation of the Waldenses followed closely upon the statute, and then their work began in earnest. Its first-fruits was a fine church built in Turin; its next another in Genoa. In 1859 the opportunity came when the foreign rulers were driven from Lombardy, Tuscany and Parma, and the Bourbons from Naples, and at once the Waldenses pushed forward and established churches in Florence, in Milan, in Naples, in Leghorn and elsewhere. Again, in 1866, when Venice shook off the Austrian yoke, and in 1870, when the Italian troops entered Rome, the Vaudois were not slow to follow them. Ever since then their work has gone on. They have established schools, nurseries, dispensaries, Bible classes, churches, and have been indefatigable in their efforts to bring to the people of Italy the light of the Gospel.

A VAUDOIS VILLAGE IN THE ITALIAN ALPS.

In Italy a state of society exists that is almost incomprehensible to Americans. The tyranny which existed there for centuries has borne its legitimate fruit in impaired morals and debased intellects, and two or three decades of liberty have not sufficed to counteract the effect of centuries of despotism. Especially among the women the standard of intelligence is exceedingly low.

It has been difficult, up to the present time, to arouse in them any love for spiritual things, any interest in religious gatherings. In order to reach them in any way, the church must appeal to the lower side of their natures in the hope, by thus doing, that they may possibly touch the spiritual side.

THE TEMPLE REPAIRED.

S. S. Lesson for Oct. 16. II. Chron. 24: 4-13. Golden Text, II. Chron. 34: 12.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

JEHOSHAPHAT little knew what would be the consequences of his disloyalty to God in marrying his son Jehoram to the wicked daughter of the wicked Jezebel. The first act of Jehoram's reign was worthy of such a wife and such a mother-in-law. The son of the godly Jehoshaphat opened his reign with the murder of his own brothers (II. Chron. 21: 4)! "And he walked in the way of the kings of Israel as did the house of Ahab, for he had the daughter of Ahab to wife" (II. Chron. 21: 6). God rebuked him, first by causing the Edomites to revolt against him, because he had forsaken 'the Lord, and compelled Judah to grievous sins (ver. 11). And there came a writing to him from Elijah the prophet (written probably just before Elijah's translation), which was indeed an awful prophecy: "Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father, because thou hast not walked in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor in the ways of Asa, king of Judah, but hast walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, and hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thyself: behold, with a great plague will the Lord smite thy people, and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods. And thou shalt have great sickness by disease."

A more terrible fate to anticipate could not be imagined, and the wretched man could not run away from it. He died, a miserable, dishonored, cursed man, and the sad part of it is that his father's compromise with the world had in some measure been the cause of it. O better by far let our children marry godly wives and husbands, even though their earthly prospects may be poor, for the curse of God is more to be dreaded than anything which the world counts loss. Jehoram "departed without being desired," neither child nor friend mourning for him. One son only was left him, the youngest, Ahaziah, who had learned from father and mother to sin; for "h's mother was his counsellor to do wickedly" (II. Chron. 22: 3), and he did . . . as the house of Ahab, for they were his counsellors after the death of his father, and he with Jehoram of Israel, his brother-in-law, fell beneath the sword of Jehu, whom God had raised up to sweep the descendants of the wicked Ahab from the face of the earth.

One is not surprised that Athaliah, when her son was dead, should do what she had incited her husband Jehoram to do when he came to the throne. She had pulled the wires behind husband and son; now she saw a chance to have everything her own way, and the unnatural woman "arose and destroyed all the seed royal," among them undoubtedly her own children. Unknown to her, one child, Joash, was hidden away by his godly aunt; who although the sister of Ahaziah and step-daughter of Athaliah, had married the pious priest Jehoiada, whom God had raised up in these sad and troublous times. Joash was only one year old when he was rescued, perhaps drawn out from under a heap of the slain, and hidden away for six years in a chamber of the temple. Meanwhile the reign of Athaliah became more and more intolerable. Jehoiada watched his opportunity, and when he knew the right time was come, he disclosed his secret to the captains and officers, and took an oath of them in the house of the Lord, "and shewed them the king's son." Thus would not the Lord abandon his people to the enemy. During the worst days of Ahab's dynasty and the days of Jehoram, Ahaziah and Athaliah of Judah, he had his witnesses; Elijah, Elisha and Jehoiada, and thus the truth was kept alive and there was always a witness for God in the land. Through Jehoiada's influence, Athaliah was slain, and the child Joash was crowned king over Judah.

What cannot God do with a little child? Joash was only seven years old when he came to the throne, and he had the great blessing of Jehoiada's precepts and example in his early youth; and "he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all the days of Jehoiada the priest," who was his teacher (II. Kings 12: 2). It was probably through Jehoiada's influence that he was minded to repair the house of the Lord. The king gathered together the priests and Levites and commanded them to go into all the cities of Judah and gather of all Israel money to repair the house of God. But Joash found out that the money question in the work of the Lord was not an easy one. He had commanded the priests and Levites to hasten the matter, but he had entered upon the three and twentieth year of his reign before it was really set on foot. And now it was the king's turn to exhort Jehoiada, and to inquire of him why he had not required of the people the redemption which had been commanded by Moses. When the children of Israel were still in the wilderness, God spoke of it to Moses, Then the amount was fixed at half a shekel, and every one from twenty years old and above must give the redemption money to the Lord, the rich were not to give more nor the poor less; the money was to be used for the tabernacle (Ex. 30: 11).

But this command of God had fallen into disuse through the prevalent idolatry; "all the dedicated things of the house of the Lord did they [the sons of Athaliah] bestow upon Baalim" (II. Chron. 24: 7). It meant a thorough reform if the redemption money was brought in to its proper use, for it acknowledged that they were a redeemed people. God had given his blessing and the work prospered, and the house of the Lord was put in repair.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

FIFTY years of Judah's history intervene between this lesson and that of last week. Many efforts have been made to reconcile the statements in Kings and Chronicles as to the length of the various reigns, but it is impossible. The historians of that time were concerned with the spiritual lessons of the events they recorded, rather than with accuracy as to dates. The lessons of this half century were obvious and important. One wicked woman dominated the period, as Jezebel, the wife of King Ahab, who was probably her mother, had dominated the affairs of the northern kingdom. It was with the nation as it was, and is, with the individual. Disobedience of God's commands involved suffering. Such marriages as that between Ahab and Jezebel and between Jehoram and Athaliah were forbidden: but the prohibition was ignored, and the consequences were bitter. All the good that Jehoshaphat had done was undone during the reign of his son. The kingdom became idolatrous and corrupt, the dynasty came near extinction. A series of murders, for which the queen was directly and indirectly responsible, reduced the royal house to one frail infant life, which was preserved only by stratagem, and during six years the nation was subject to the villainous rule of the unscrupulous murderess. It was an evil day for Judah when Athaliah was brought to Jerusalem as the wife of the heir to the throne. Even after her death and her grandson's reformations, the evil influences of her life bore fruit in a national reaction, led by the court she had debauched. It may have seemed an unimportant thing to Jehoshaphat that the amity of the two nations should be cemented by a marriage, but it was seed from which came many years misery for the royal house and the nati All history teems with illustrations of lesson this event teaches, and shows far-reaching consequences of one sin.

CONVERSIONS IN THE CAMPS.

More Remarkable Attestations of the Saving Power of the Gospel—The Investigation Into the Camp Management—Evacuation Progressing Slowly.

EVERY day brings fresh evidence of the rich spiritual blessings that have been experienced in our home military camps, as the result of the earnest labors of the Christian Commission and its consecrated workers. To all who have aided and encouraged this grand movement to bring the soldiers to the Cross, by their contributions and their prayers, it must be a matter for sincere gratitude that the means provided for the use of the workers have thus been made instrumental in bringing about such results.

Some of the letters received from the Christian Commission workers in the camps during the past week, show the continued triumphs the Gospel is winning among the soldiers. Rev. Geo. L. Bitzer, of Huntsville, Ala., writes:

HUNTSVILLE, Ala.

Thank God for the Christian Commission! Mr. Frank Smith's work here is exactly what is wanted. We have 10,000 inhabitants, and about 8,000 soldiers on both sides of the town. The best place to reach soldiers appeared to be the First Methodist Church, right by the railroad square, which will seat 900. Incidentally the work promises to save our people in part from the frightful demoralization which is likely to sweep them away. Six pastors are heartily co-operating.

The pastors had already started a meeting for the soldiers at the Methodist church nearest the camp when Mr. Smith arrived. We put him in charge, and there were confessions of faith at every service. Then we had faith to enter upon the larger work in the square of the town; each meeting is more impressive than the preceding one. GEO. L. BITZER.

Pastor of Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Smith (referred to in the foregoing letter), writes these interesting details:

CAMP WHEELER, Huntsville.

Our work goes splendidly forward. If I had any doubts about the wisdom of opening the church downtown, they have been cleared away now. We are having delightful times. Soldiers are accepting Christ every day. We have two services each day; one at 10 and one at 7:15. I believe it the largest movement yet in the army work. Three chaplains are with us all the time and six pastors.

Yesterday afternoon the pastor of the Baptist Church was coming down the street, and a soldier hailed him and said: "I have just finished reading Mr. Moody's Way to God. I am wrong. Can you help me?" The pastor went to his church with him and the soldier accepted Christ, and was in the meeting last night, rejoicing in the new-found life.

Another regiment left to-day, and two more will leave during the week, and one more is booked to go next Monday. This will leave only two regiments here, so our work is to be short, and we are crowding it while we can. There are still seven regiments at Anniston, forty miles below here. There are also seven regiments at Knoxville and one at Lexington. FRED. B. SMITH.

Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, whose touching letter from the camps last week interested many readers, sends this note regarding his latest visit to Camp Wikoff:

CAMP WIKOFF, Montauk Point, L. I., N. Y.

I preached last night in the Y. M. C. A. tent packed with soldiers, and it was a joy to find among them so many whom I had seen at Tampa. The converts, so far as I can learn, have remained true. Some of them whose names and faces I remember were killed at San Juan ago or died of fever. One fellow who attended our meetings at Tampa, gave his heart to Christ in the trenches at Santiago, and took his first communion after the battle, and has been a faithful soul-winner ever since. The camp is breaking up this morning, and the papers say that all the men will be away by Saturday. But other camps will remain and the evangelistic work should be kept up. Will not go with the soldiers into Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines?

I have gone through the regiments it has been like visiting old friends, and last night several others accepted Christ and confessed him. It will add no little to the joy of living to meet these men again here and then in the future, and find that they have been faithful to Christ. A. C. DIXON.

Not only the preached, but the printed Word is contributing to the great spiritual transformation that is going on in the camps. Our vest-pocket War Testament is seen almost everywhere, and vast numbers of single Gospels, hymn books and other religious books and pamphlets have been circulated among the soldiers. This letter from a trooper to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, affords a glimpse of the attitude of many of our American soldiers on the question of religion:

MONTAUK POINT, N. Y.

I write to express my great gratitude to you for the New Testament and hymns of the Army and Navy editions. Most every young man in my regiment and troop (Third U. S. Cav., Troop L), has one. They not only have them in their tents, but in their pockets, as they go around about their every day duty. They are surely soldiers of God as well as of this great country of ours, for which we have so lately fought. I have noticed a great many of my comrades studying and reading from your Testaments as I have passed along the long lines or rows of tents. May the God of War and the God of Peace bless you all for your noble work; also the noble work of the Y. M. C. A.

I have one of your Testaments which I carried all through the battles and fevers in Cuba. It was given me by Mr. Bailey, the then Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. tent at Tampa, Fla., and God alone knows the good I derived from it while in battle and on my bed of pain. This morning Rev. Hall preached in No. 2. This afternoon Rev. Jones, the "Hustling Evangelist," will preach, and this evening the Rev. Ira D. Sankey will preach and sing in No. 2.

CHAS. SMITH,
Third U. S. Cav., Troop L.

Mr. H. A. Howell, a Y. M. C. A. worker, sends several beautiful incidents of the work. He says:

Let me give you here the contents of a letter received by one of the soldier boys from his father, when he wrote home and told him he had found Christ precious to his soul:

"Mr. James F. P——, Troop F, — Cav., Camp Wickoff, Montauk, L. I.:

MY DEAR SON:—Your letter dated Aug. 31st received, and I was glad to hear from you again and to hear that you were well, and more than glad to hear that you are a Christian, and I hope you will be faithful in the service of the Lord and never turn back to the world. Remember mamma is in heaven and I want us all to meet her around the throne. MORGAN P——."

This boy was led to Christ in one of our meetings. Let me give an extract of a letter written by one poor boy to his mother as he lay in a dying condition in one of the hospitals, but who had been led to Christ here:

"MY DEAR MOTHER:—I will try to write to you, though my strength is going fast. I am in the hospital here, but hope soon to see you and sister Mary again. When I left you I was a wayward boy, and the burden of your heart; but by the grace of God and the work of the Y. M. C. A. here in camp, your prayers have been answered, and your boy is a Christian."

This soldier boy never lived to see his loved ones at home, but rests in his grave on the little hill in the midst of Camp Wickoff.

One more scene: As I stood near one of the hospitals looking at them lead the poor sick boys in to take them to other hospitals, I stepped to the wagon where they had just placed a sick soldier who had been wasted away by disease till only the mere frame remained. I took his hand and asked him if he was glad to get away. In his poor, feeble way he said as he grasped my hand: "I am only going away to die somewhere else." "Are you ready to die?" I asked. "I am only waiting for the messenger of death to come and take me across the shining river," he replied. "One week ago I was not prepared to die, but one of your men came to me with the glorious light of salvation, and thank God it has shined in my poor heart." He could not say any more, as his strength was nearly gone. Tears streamed down his cheeks as he, by one great effort, exclaimed: "God bless your noble work."

These are only a few of the many instances that have come before the eyes of the workers.

At many home camps, the advent of cool weather has hastened changes that were already in progress. Tents have been abandoned at the Montauk camp, and the sick are all safely housed in more substantial quarters, while thousands of convalescents have been sent to their own homes. Last week, through the kindness of Major R. Dickinson Jewett, owner of Mont-Lawn, the buildings of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home were placed at the disposal of the Women's National War Relief Association for the reception of as many convalescent soldiers as could be comfortably accommodated there; but while the offer was received with gratitude, the change in the programme at the camps, under which the convalescents are now being rapidly forwarded to their own homes, made it unavailable for the purpose.

President McKinley's promised investigation of the management of the medical, quartermaster's and commissary's departments of the army, with especial reference to the charges of neglect of the sick soldiers, began on Sept. 24. All the nine members of the Investigating Commission were present at the first meeting, which was held in the Cabinet room at the White House. The proceedings were secret, but it is known to be the President's intention to make the inquiry thorough and unsparing. The heads of the several staff departments of the army have prepared statements for presentation to the Commission.

All the charges will be thoroughly sifted, including the complaints with respect to the alleged neglect of the sick; the inadequacy and poor quality of the food supply; the inefficiency of the medical staff and the failure to provide the necessary medicines; the unsanitary condition of the troopships; the choice of unhealthy camp sites; the concealment of the real situation from high official eyes, with the view of misleading the Government. These, and many other charges of like character, will be fully ventilated, and nothing will be left undone to make the investigation complete and satisfactory to the whole nation, whose sympathy has been deeply stirred in behalf of the suffering soldiers.

Owing to the condition of affairs in the Philippines—where there are still possibilities of further trouble — it has been deemed advisable to reinforce Admiral Dewey's fleet in Asiatic waters. Accordingly orders have been issued by our government for the despatch of the battleships Oregon and Iowa to Manila Bay. These fine warships have lately been overhauled at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and are now in condition for their long cruise and for any emergencies that may arise. When this issue reaches our readers, the battleships will already be on the way to the far East. There are various reports from Manila concerning the situation there. Aguinaldo is now represented as professing the warmest friendship for the United States and as repudiating all allegations of treachery; but it is known that the wily chief has been quietly augmenting his forces with a view to launching a new revolution, should the decision of the Peace Commission at Paris be adverse to his interests and ambitions. Still the general impression is that he would accept American control, but would never yield to come again under Spain's domination. Tropical diseases are committing great ravages at Manila. Over 600 Americans are in the general hospital and the sick list is growing daily. Many Spaniards are dying of typhoid fever.

Evacuation makes slow progress in Cuba and Porto Rico, the Spaniards making every effort to delay their final departure from these islands. Our Evacuation Commissioners at Havana are insistent in the demand that it begin not later than October 15th and be completed by December 31st, and arrangements are now fairly under way for the American occupation to begin next month. On the other hand, the Spanish officials are endeavoring to have evacuation deferred until February next, but no concession of the kind now seems probable. Very soon our army of occupation, some 60,000 strong, and all fresh, well-trained troops, will go to Cuba to take possession of the principal points which Spain is soon to vacate.

DEPARTURE OF THE S. S. "CAMPANIA" FROM NEW YORK, WITH OUR PEACE COMMISSIONERS ON BOARD.

The Commissioners, on reaching Liverpool, will proceed to London and take steamer to Paris without delay. They will accept no invitations of a social nature until the work of the Commission is finished. It is understood that their instructions from Washington are of an open character, and do not pledge them to a fixed policy on any of the important points to be brought before the Joint Commission.

THE DYING SOLDIERS.

THE ranks of those who fought our foes are thinning day by day,
The men who for a righteous cause flung thought of self away.
More ruthless than the hurtling gun which slaughtered heretofore,
Is fever; and, though peace has come, they perish by the score.

Yes, falling, falling by the score, beneath a ruthless hand
That spares not brave exponents of the honor of their land.
And score by score their souls are marching to the judgment seat.
How many, think you, stand in Christ before their God "complete"?

O God, give power to the message sounded in the camp!
That yonder boys be saved ere gathers on their brows the damp.
Give power to the preacher and the singer and the truth,
And hearing ears and hearts to gallant men and splendid youth.

O may the Gospel message be so spoken to the brave
That they who gave themselves an unknown populace to save,
May know themselves a Saviour who endured a deadly strife
That men who die in camp to-day may have a larger life.

Lesson of Assassination.

THERE is nothing in diabolism meaner or blacker or more damnable than that shown in the murder of the Empress of Austria. The deed manifests what anarchy is at heart. That there are in all countries such wretches as the one who stabbed the Empress in the back is a fact of national and international concern. What a suggestion that the Czar's manifesto of disarmament is timely! What a good thing it would be if, instead of great national armies to assail sister nations, governments would devote their armed attention to exterminating these scoundrels who, resolved that there is no God, and shall be no society, are ready with pistol or old file to put to death men like M. Carnot, President of France; Canovas del Castillo, of Spain, and women like the splendid Empress of Austria! A little of the ammunition now used by nation against nation, would be well employed in the obliteration of these murderous anarchists. The electric chair, and the hangman's halter are too good for such incarnate devils. Germany, Russia and the United States better than standing armies need more vigilance of police for these scoundrels, who hide behind trees, or rush through the crowds watching festal processions to strike down Prime Ministers and Kings and Queens and Presidents.

"MAY I get on with you?" I asked an engineer on the Pacific Railroad, at a station six or seven thousand feet above the level of the sea.

"Certainly," he said, "but hold fast tight, or you may fall off."

"Toot! toot!" went the whistle, and the long anaconda of a rail train first went crawling along the rocks, but soon took on fearful momentum. Sitting in "Pullman's Palace Car," looking out of the window the passenger gets no idea of the speed of the train, but close by the engineer, and feeling the nervous quiver and pimp of the iron courser, you see the mountains skip like rams, and the little hills like lambs."

The door of the locomotive furnace clangs open, and the flames rave as though they would leap out to devour, and the fireman jars the coal into the raging jaws of the monster. The engineer has his hand on the iron bit that controls the speed, and seems to use no more exertion than a doctor feeling the pulse of a child. Indeed, the locomotive, to the engineer, is not a mere machine, but animate. He talks to it, seems almost to pat it lovingly on the neck. He is proud of it. There is a warm understanding between the two, and in occasional spurts of steam the locomotive seems to take voice and answer its rider. An engine never hurts its master, save in the effort to throw the passengers.

But the engineer, though sitting so placid, is wide awake. He is kept on duty only four hours in the day, and all the energies of body and soul cluster in his vigilant eye and quick thumb. Two hundred lives hang on his wrist.

We plunge into a snow-shed with infinite clatter, every board and beam beating back the deafening roar of the Pacific express. As we rush on, the prairie-dogs skulk into their holes, or sit on their hind-quarters, with fore feet lifted, as much as to say, "What next!" The antelopes scamper over the plain. We ride unimpeded where a few years ago the buffaloes stopped the train as the herds stampeded across the track; and along here the savages careered on their ponies.

You see here and there groups of red men, with long hair, and cheeks dashed with war-paint, ringed ears, and a superfluity of dirt that buries your last romantic notion about the "noble red man of the forest." The air is laden with the breath of the cedar, madrona, manzanita and buckeye. Here we are passing through what seem the ruins of castles, and temples, and cities, and calling up to mind Petra, and Pompeii, and Nineveh, and Thebes; but these ruins on either side our track must have been vast abodes, where giants might have lived, till the Titans began here to play leap-frog and turn somersault.

Now the whistle lets off a wild scream; a cow and calf on the track. The cow we cut into halves, and the calf with broken legs tumbles over into the ditch. I wonder if that man just ahead will get off in time? Perhaps he is deaf! Perhaps he is crazy, and wants to be run over! Neither. In time to save himself he switches off and robs the coroner.

Hold your breath! Ravine a thousand feet deep on this side! Embankment a thousand feet up on the other! As we turn the curve the engineer pulls the steam-valve, and the silence that chiefly reigned here for six thousand years lets slip all its hounds of echo and reverberation.

Whew! how we fly. If a bolt break, or a truck fall, or a rock dislodge, we are in eternity! Innumerable varieties of flower break their alabaster at the feet of the cliffs; but yonder the mountain tops are blooming into the white lily of everlasting snow. Bridges, high, narrow, tremendous, that creak and tremble under the pressure of the train.

A tunnel! Ink-black, midnight doubled, dampness that never saw the sun; while far ahead is a hint of sunlight peering through a hole that looks about the size of the arch of a mouse-trap, but which widens till at last it is large enough to let a whole train escape into the golden day.

Out there is the old emigrant road, with occasionally the skeleton of a cow or horse, or the wreck of a wagon that hopelessly broke down on the way; and here a mound, and a rough stone at the head of it, that show where some worn traveler finished his journey in those times when in one year across these heights went five thousand wagons, pulled by seven thousand mules and thirty thousand yoke of oxen.

Now we come along by bluffs where the red men could not make a trail, and where laborers in constructing the rail track were held from the overhanging cliffs by ropes.

And now the night begins to fall, and the train goes ploughing through the darkness. The great burning eye of the locomotive peers through, and flashes far ahead upon the wild scene.

The grizzly bear, the panther, the night-hawk, the cormorant, the pelican, the grosbeak, the eagle, that kept aloof while the day shone, may venture nearer now, if they dare. Oh how we fly! The rush of the wind, the jamming of the car-coupling, the clang of the wheels, the steam hiss, the fierce shower of sparks that set the night on fire, the shooting past of rocks five hundred feet high, followed by a precipice a thousand feet deep, make the breath short, and the heart thump, and the very scalp lift.

How the shadows shuffle! How the crags shiver! How the echoes rave! An express train at night on the Rocky Mountains! The irresistible trampling the immovable! Yet the way smoothed down by human engineering. Then it will not be so difficult to prepare the way for a grander coming when the mountains shall be made low, and the crooked straight, and rough places plain, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together!

"I guess I will get off now," I said to the engineer. "All right!" said he; "but look out and not break your neck over that switch out yonder!" With my mind full of the rush and thunder of the day, I went to sleep, and dreamed of the scenes into which we were being introduced. The band of big trees, three hundred and twenty feet high, one hundred and twelve around (see Hutchins); big waterfalls, two thousand six hundred feet down (see Whitney); big bears of two thousand pounds (see the hunters); big onions, a foot across the top, and beets of a hundred and twenty-seven pounds each (see Dr. Todd); big rocks, big prophecies and bigger hearts. Golden-footed, vine-crowned California!

He Means it.

WIDE has been the discussion as to whether the Czar of Russia in his recent manifesto, proposing the disarmament of nations was sincere in what he said. There can be no reasonable doubt of his sincerity. Six or seven years ago he said to me practically what he now says. Nicholas was not yet on the throne, but was on his way to it. His father, Emperor Alexander III., and his Empress dwelt on the same sentiments, expressing to me what their son Nicholas now is trying to carry out. The Empress said to me after I had ventured the idea that there would be no more wars among Christian nations, "Oh! if there is ever any great war in Europe it will not start from this palace." The entire royal family of Russia want peace. Nothing since the shining of the Bethlehem star has meant so much of "good will to men" as this manifesto of Emperor Nicholas.

The Aged Bible-Reader.

(See colored illustration on first page.)

When the immortal poet, William Cowper, wrote the famous lines:

> A glory gilds the sacred page,
> Majestic like the sun;
> It gives a light to every age,—
> It gives, but borrows none;

he might well have had in mind just such a scene as that shown in our beautiful illustration. The venerable Christian grandmother is well-nigh done with the affairs of earth, and is dwelling in that border-land which, as earthly lights grow dimmer, seems to borrow radiance from the heaven that is always so near at hand to the aged believer. As the last rays of the departing sun rest upon the well-worn pages, the old eyes seek once more the words of comfort and blessing. In that rich treasury the reader finds consolation for all the trials and disappointments that have fallen to her lot in life.

If she recalls her sorrows—it may be in the loss of husband and children—she can nevertheless read with trembling lips and joyful heart the messages of cheer and comfort, and these bring before her eyes the manifold blessings she has enjoyed during her long life. "Surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever" (Ps. 23). Soon she will be with those she loves in "In my father's house are many mansions" (John 14:2). She has already realized the fulfilment of many of the glorious promises. "Keep my commandments; for length of days and long life and peace shall they add to thee" (Prov. 3:2). She has felt the sustaining power of "the everlasting arms," and can look forward to the approaching change with calm confidence, knowing that He is true who said: "I am with thee; be not dismayed. I will strengthen thee. Yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness" (Isa 41:10). "Even to hoar hairs will I carry you" (Isa. 46). To such a one the snowy hair is indeed "a crown of glory," since it is "found in the way of righteousness" (Prov. 16).

> The Spirit breathes upon the Word.
> And brings the truth to sight;
> Precept and promises afford
> A sanctifying light.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. C. H. Goodman, of the United Methodist Mission, who was thought to have been massacred in West Africa, has arrived at Liverpool.

Families of Jews from various European countries are now on their way to Cyprus, where one of the Baron Hirsch colonies has been founded and is already prospering.

Lorenzo Snow, the new President of the Mormon Church, is eighty-three years old. Abraham Richards is next in succession and after him Apostle Cannon, if the usual order is followed.

It is stated that the number of monks, nuns and persons under the vows of the Roman Catholic Church in Spain, who are supported from the national treasury, number not less than 117,000.

Queen Victoria has declined to sign the bill which was passed by the Legislative Council of Jamaica, W. I., giving increased facilities for the sale of spirits. The bill consequently fails to become a law.

The Annual Convention of the Church of the Disciples meets this year at Chattanooga, Tenn., Oct. 13-21. It is stated that the increase in the denomination in New York State during the past twelve months has been seventeen per cent.

One of the most significant signs of modern improvement in ancient lands, is the proposal to use the power of the current of the river Nile to generate electricity, which will be applied to lamps on the exterior and interior of the Pyramids.

The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Protestant Episcopal Church have closed their fiscal year free of debt, in spite of increased expenditures. One of the most remarkable items of the year's income was the sum of $81,000 contributed by the pupils of 3,031 Sunday Schools.

Mrs. J. K. Barney, Superintendent of Prison Evangelist of the World's Woman's Temperance Union sails, on October 6, for Ireland and England, commencing work in Dublin, October 16. Penal, charitable and reformatory labors of the W. W. C. T. U., are under Mrs. Barney's direction.

The Basle Missionary Society reports the last year as its most successful one. At its various stations in India, China, the Gold Coast and the Camerunns there were 2,600 baptisms from heathenism, and at the beginning of the present year there were 2,700 candidates. The most striking progress is in China.

The second Zionist congress, held last month at Basle, in Switzerland, reports $1,000,000 already subscribed, nearly all in sums of five dollars each. The leaders of the movement propose to start a bank with a preliminary capitalization of $10,000,000. The ultimate object of the organization is the return of the Jews to Palestine.

The custom of putting on the wall of churches no indication of the character of the building or the denomination to which it belongs, but only the advertisement of the sexton or undertaker, suggests to the Congregationalist admonition: "Let the dead bury their dead, but go thou and preach the kingdom of God."

The annual meeting of the American Board of Foreign Missions will be held at Grand Rapids, Mich., October 4-7. The sermon will be preached by Dr. R. R. Meredith, of Brooklyn. The interest of the Grand Rapids Association of churches and ministers in foreign missions is shown by the fact that every one of its churches has made a contribution to the Board this year.

Contributions to the fund known as Peter's Pence, which is used for the Pope's personal and official expenses, have not come during the last few months so freely as usual, from either Europe or the United States. The decrease is about two thousand dollars. The Pope consequently will have personal reasons for rejoicing in the close of the war, which has doubtless caused the diminution of his income.

The officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union have issued their call for the twenty-fifth annual convention. This will meet November 11-16, in the People's Church, St. Paul, Minn. It is signed by Lillian M. N. Stevens, Acting-President and Katharine Lente Stevenson, Secretary. As this will be one of the most momentous Conventions of the Union, it is urged that every local society take care to qualify for representation by the payment of the regular dues.

At a funeral service held recently at the Jerry McAuley Mission, in Water Street, it was stated that the deceased, who belonged to a highly respectable family, had been converted at the mission, when he had sunk through drink to the condition of a tramp. This occurred many years ago, but he had never ceased to take an interest in the mission, and begged that his funeral might be held there. From the time of his conversion to the time of his death he had not touched a drop of liquor.

EROES OF THE SOUDAN.

ATER details of the Anglo-Egyptian victory in the Soudan show that it was even more decisive than was indicated by the cable reports. Sir Herbert Kitchener, the Sdar, or commander-in-chief, now holds t country as far south as Omdurman, at t junction of the Blue and White Nile. Tis the region under the control of t Khalifa, which was eight hundred nes long, is now reduced to three hundd, and his power and prestige are oken. The success of the expedition a ears to be due in an unusual degree t the skill and foresight of the comnder. He was aware of the difficulties t be encountered, and has displayed terly ability in overcoming them. He is orty seven years of age, and has been enty-seven years in the service. The a y holds him in high esteem for his exctional qualities as an organizer, though ts sometimes restive under the strict ipline which he enforces. His prois in the formidable task of re-conqring the Soudan has been slow, but it is doubtful if any other methods cd have succeeded. It was not a undertaking which could be accplished by a dash, for the obe ve points were so far away fr the base of supplies that th e was continual danger of tenemy cutting him from t nd surrounding him. H success has proved wisdom of the plodd , patient system of ing secure every pl e occupied before vuring a further acance. His latest vory has placed him possession of Khartoun, the city which w held so long agnst the Mahdi's ioes by the brave Gn. Gordon. The Bish and Egyptian fls now float over the se in which Gordon ivl, and a memorial sece has been held in th court-yard where he w beheaded. It is now dosed that the savagery w ch characterized the captu of Khartoum in 1885, wn Gordon fell, was really th work of the Khalifa, who w at that time serving as the Mdi's general and acknowledged ne. This fact is proved by Dr. N feld, whose long imprisonment has be ended by Sir H. Kitchener's victo He tells horrible stories of the cr lties he has witnessed under the K lifa's rule. His scientific skill, which th Khalifa turned to account in various w s, alone saved him from falling a m to the same ferocity. For eleven es he has been treated as a slave, and d ng most of the time has worn a heavy chain day and night, and his ankles ha been fettered. His wife, whom he marrie in Cairo, is chief nurse in an English h pital. He sent her to England for sa y before starting out on the perilous jo ney, during which he was taken pr ner. He says that the Khalifa has al st depopulated many districts of the Sdan, and seemed to take a fiendish delght in barbarous cruelties. It is gratifyin o think that his rule is almost at an en and that the greater part of his territy has already been wrested from his gr p. His defeat will strike terror into th hearts of other Moslem rulers. To th , as to the Khalifa, the words of the wi king apply:

"As a roaring lion and a ranging bear, so is a wicked ruler over the poor people. The prince that lacketh understanding is also a great oppressor" (Prov. 28 : 15).

SIR H. HERBERT KITCHENER. THE LATE GENERAL GORDON.

Fatal Ambition.

Brooklyn boy lost his life last week though childish ambition. Near his home is a large coal-yard where the drivers made a pet of the child. He was fond of playing about the yard and watching the grooming of the horses. One of his friends was an old driver to whom he confided his childish hope that when he grew up he would be a driver. The other day he coaxed his aged friend to take him with him on his round. With some reluctance the driver consented and lifted the child to a place beside him on the high seat. The boy wanted to hold the reins, but that the driver would not allow. When, however, he descended to deliver some coal the boy reached the whip, and, delighted at being at last able to drive, struck the horse with it. Instantly the horse started on a run. Several attempts were made to stop it but without avail. It continued its wild course down the road until it reached an embankment. There it shied as some one tried to grasp the bridle, and horse and wagon and child went over. When the child was dragged out of the wreck, he was quite dead, the load having fallen upon him. He was only seven years of age and did not know the danger of what he was doing; but many who are old enough to know better act in a similar way. Their ambition leads them to embark on courses that lead to destruction.

There is a way that seemeth right unto a man: but the end thereof are the ways of death (Prov. 16 : 25).

A Homesick Dog.

An Elmira, N. Y., journal relates a remarkable instance which has just occurred of a dog's sagacity. Two families in that city who are on very friendly terms, lived until lately, in houses only one block apart. One of them owned a valuable pointer who was accustomed to divide his time between the two houses, and seemed as much at home in one as the other. Both families made a pet of the dog, and when the family to whom he did not belong moved, some months ago, to South Carolina, they persuaded the owner to give them the dog. He made the journey in the baggage car and seemed content to go. A few days ago, to the surprise of his former owner, the dog trotted into the house. His joy on finding himself in his old home knew no bounds. But he was so weak from hunger and exhaustion that it was thought at first that he would die. His feet were swollen and blistered, and his legs so stiff that after a day's rest he was unable to walk. What route he had taken and how long he had been on the journey are mysteries, but the dog had evidently made the long journey on foot. It is extraordinary that he should have been able to find his way under such circumstances. He must have loved his owner and his home very much to persist in so long a journey to reach them. It is not surprising that God should have made this affection of dumb animals a ground of reproach against those who make no effort to come to him.

The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider (Isa 1 : 3).

DR. CHARLES NEUFELD.

Bearers of Typhoid.

A report of a commission of surgeons on the cause of the prevalence of typhoid fever in the camps is causing considerable discussion among medical men. The commission believes that the disease came from flies who crawled on the food after having settled on infected matter. There were millions of flies in the camps, which, in wet weather, sought refuge in the tents, crawling everywhere and depositing germs which clung to their hairy feet. How infinitesmal the germ must be, can be imagined from the size of a fly's foot, but it was sufficient to produce the disease which proved so fatal. The commissioners make various recommendation with a view of preventing a recurrence of the evil. It would be well if clergymen and Christian workers took a similar course. The sins which are regarded as trivial and insignificant often prove destructive to spiritual life.

The motions of sins, which were by the law did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death (Rom. 7 : 5).

The Protected Monument.

A scientific journal calls attention to the proof of the value of lightning-rods which is furnished by the Washington monument. That memorial is capped by a small four-sided pyramid of aluminum. This aluminum tip is connected firmly with the ground by four copper rod which go down deep in the earth. An observer says that he has seen five immense bolts of electricity flash between the monument and a thundercloud overhanging in the course of twenty minutes. In other words, the monument was struck fiercely five times, but it suffered no damage whatever. During another thunder storm a more tremendous assault was made upon the monument from the heavens, and the result was a fracture of one of the topmost stones. The crack still remains to show what destruction nature can do in the way of an electric shock, but the slightness of the damage is evidence of man's power to protect himself from such attacks. It is a pity that in spiritual danger there is not the same disposition to use the means of protection.

Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day and having done all, to stand (Eph. 6 : 13).

An Obstinate Safe-Lock.

A hotel keeper in New Orleans learned recently how strong a resistance his iron safe might make to burglars. The Times Democrat says that it had not been the custom to fasten the doors of the safe, as either the proprietor or the day or night clerk was always on duty. The doors were closed but not locked the other day, when a painter at work in the office fell from his ladder. In falling he struck the handle of the safe with his foot and threw on the combination. No one about the place knew the way to open it, as it had been many years since the combination was used. A locksmith was sent for, who worked on it all day, but could not open it. Other experts were called in without success. The hotel-keeper was finally advised to have the door drilled and blown open by an explosive. This would have spoiled his safe, which he was reluctant to do. After several other expedients had been tried, it occurred to him to wire the maker of the safe to ask if he had kept a memorandum of the combination. Fortunately he had done so, and the figures which worked the lock were telegraphed and the doors were opened. If people whose hearts are fast closed would follow the example of this hotel-keeper and apply to their Maker for help, they, too, would find the doors opened and their troubles relieved.

Ye have not looked to the Maker thereof neither had respect unto Him that fashioned it long ago (Isa. 22 : 11).

An Eagle Deceived.

Among the visitors to the soldiers at Fort Sheridan a few days ago, was a lady who wore a fashionable hat. It was trimmed, as the present fashions require, with a white bird with outstretched wings. As she crossed the courtyard, a large American eagle which is the pet of a company of cavalry now quartered at the fort, saw the bird on the lady's hat and swooped down upon it. The lady was almost thrown off her feet and was greatly alarmed. She screamed for help, but before any one could go to her assistance the eagle had carried off both bird and hat. Several men climbed to the roof whither the bird had carried its prey, but the eagle was not to be caught. It flew to a higher roost out of the reach of its pursuers. There it settled to enjoy its meal, but when it found that the bird was only a stuffed imitation, it vented its disappointment by tearing it and the hat to tatters. The owner of the hat accepted the situation and left the fort bareheaded without giving her name. She doubtless felt chagrined at the loss of her hat, but no one will be sorry if it leads her to refrain in future from following the cruel fashion, which is causing the destruction of so many beautiful birds. It may suggest, too, the fact that women who depend for their charms on their apparel are liable to suffer the fate described by the prophet:

Their glory shall fly away like a bird (Hos. 9 : 11).

GOSPEL PROGRESS IN JAPAN.

Rev. George C. Needham Describes the Religious Condition He Finds in Japan.

A BUDDHIST PRIEST.

OUR first Bible Conference held at Karnizawa, one hundred miles northwest of Yokohama, was owned of God to strengthen and comfort the hearts of the missionaries who assembled there. It was a great joy to meet with these consecrated workers, some from the far-off fields of Southern China and others from Korea. We did not wonder at their expressions of appreciation when we learned that many of them had not heard a sermon for months, and had never previously attended a series of meetings for Biblical exposition and for the promotion of spiritual experiences. We gathered in the open air on the steps and court of an old Shinto Temple. At our back stood the union church building, erected by the missionaries for their annual gatherings, while before us and around us were temple and shrines, old, dilapidated, moss-covered, neglected. Once a year the natives hold a festival within the enclosure, and make great ado on this occasion. But there is neither religion nor reverence. Thousands of the Japanese are no longer idolaters. But they are not nearer Christianity. They are gliding into utter blank agnosticism and animalism. It is sad to see a people, naturally amiable, sink into indifference.

The zealous and brave missionaries are making great efforts to give them the Gospel of Christ. We could not help seeing in the contrast between church and temple a prophetic parable of the future. And although the flood tide of Christianity has receded in Japan, and many of the churches are left stranded, there is a profound conviction that it has reached its lowest ebb. There is a great spirit of prayer at all our conferences, and expression of absolute dependence on the Spirit of God. Liberal theology has expended its force, and its superficial results are a painful warning. Many of the oldest and bravest missionaries have assured me that the preaching of the native pastors is more wholesome than formerly.

I do not know how much time is given to open air preaching generally, but the services I witnessed in remote towns were orderly and respectful. Not even in Protestant countries have I noticed less disturbance. Young and old listened attentively, few leaving before the services ended. The singing of Gospel hymns gave evident pleasure, and the adults eagerly received the tracts handed them.

Many things of vast importance are coming to the front in this interesting mission field. Only within a few days, the Bible Society, through its veteran agent, Rev. H. Loomis, presented a handsomely prepared copy of the complete Bible to the Emperor. Marquis Ito arranged for the presentation, and a letter of thanks has come from the Palace. This means much where many in high official life have thrown their influence against its widespread circulation. The thirty or more colporteurs going through the Empire will now be better received among all classes, and doubtless this imitative people will follow their ruler's example.

I have addressed several congregations of Japanese, the Daikin (Presbyterian Synod), the annual Y. M. C. A., and on several occasions the summer school of young men representing twenty-three colleges, besides the Imperial University of Tokio. The recent visit of Mr. Mott wholly changed the complexion of the Summer school, from a loose and careless assembly to an earnest and evangelistic body. Hereafter it will be merged into the Y. M. C. A. national gathering for Bible study.

Mr. Robert Speer providentially followed Mott, though on a different mission. His wise counsels, faithful adherence to evangelical doctrine and gracious disposition have been used of God in toning up the foreign brethren among whom he visited.

We have already commenced our Bible conferences among missionaries and their families. The first is now in session at Karingawa, 100 miles N. W. from Yokohama. One fact has deeply impressed me, that the bright, clean, though very plain, wooden union church building, lies close to a Shinto temple, whose buildings are decayed, whose images are defaced, and whose walks are overgrown with weeds. My heart thrills with joy as I read in this parable the prophetic announcements that idols shall be overthrown and our Lord Christ alone be exalted. Later our conferences will be held at Arima, near Kobe, and Hiezen, near Kioto. In September, too, we begin evangelistic work for natives and foreigners.

GEO. C. NEEDHAM.

Yokohama.

[At the invitation of missionaries of various denominations in Japan, Mr. Needham went there in July last to hold Bible Conferences, and to present the truths of prophecy and the consecrated life. He has already visited several mission fields, and expects to hold meetings in all the most important cities of the kingdom. The results of his early observations are given in the foregoing letter.]

Ministered to the Soldiers.

Workers from the International Medical Missionary Society, Who Labored in Camp and Hospital.

AMONG the volunteers who offered their services to the President in the conflict with Spain, a place of high honor must be accorded to the skilled Christian men who are members of the International Medical Missionary Society. Nearly fifty of these valuable workers were employed in their country's service. The society to which they belong is, as our readers are aware, engaged in assisting young men to obtain a medical education to fit them for work as medical missionaries in heathen lands. Dr. George D. Dowkontt, the Medical Director of the Society, has labored in this work for many years. Dr. Summers, who laid down his life in Africa; Dr. Hall, who, after a few years of brilliant and devoted work in the slums of Korean cities, died of fever contracted in ministering to the wounded on the battle field during the Chinese and Japanese war; Heli Chatelain, now founding a colony for emancipated slaves in Africa, and scores of other devoted, self-sacrificing Christian workers were qualified for their labor under Dr. Dowkontt's direction. Many others are preparing for the double work of ministering to soul and body in heathen lands. Among these were a number whose studies were sufficiently advanced to render them useful in the hospitals and camps when our trouble with Spain reached the fighting stage. The same spirit of love and helpfulness, and the same desire to serve Christ by ministering to the sufferers which was leading them to prepare for missionary service, led them to offer themselves for work among our sick and wounded soldiers. Dr. Dowkontt heartily approved of their desire, and in an interview with President McKinley, formally presented offer, which was cordially accepted.

All these devoted Christian men found many opportunities of serving Lord, while ministering to the sick dying soldiers. The Gospel whic missionary carries to the heathen i as effectual with the men who have reared in Christian lands. In pain suffering and in the last sad hour the spirit leaves the body, the brav dier, far away from home and fri has found in the man who relieved physical agony, a guide who could him to the Great Healer and tell him to make his peace with God. It is ble work that these nine men and fellow-workers of the same society done in serving God while ministeri men. In the camps and hospitals double cross which is the emblem of Society has been a blessing to body soul.

...Wa -Day in Samoa.

...lasts all the week, we are told, and it ...has been said jestingly that ladies of Sa- ...moa have to take a trip away from the ...isl d now and then in order to get their ...clo es all laundered once in awhile. The ...wa erwoman never calls for the clothes when expected, nor brings them back when promised, and always sends Mr. and Mrs. A's things to Mrs. B., and vice versa. Her method of laundrying is to soap the clothes, spread them out on a rock sloping into the water and pelt them with pebbles. A bridge which the consuls built over the Vaisingo river in Apia, and which tumbled down, became a great boon to the washerwoman (and a great affliction to their patrons), because its concrete abutments, slipping down into the river, formed such a nice shelving rock, that the laundresses in that vicinity could not resist the temptation of spreading clothes thereon and pelting them with rocks — however solemnly they might promise to wash them according to their owner's directions. So, we see that we United States housewives have not a monopoly of domestic difficulties. There is one thing, however, which we are doing that will tend to correct our troubles. We are dignifying labor: our best schools and colleges are adding departments of domestic science to their curriculums, and in many ways we are grappling with the problem of making home-keeping a fine art.

THE BABY AND THE CLOCK.

"Pin Money."

"How did the expression 'pin money' originate?" This question has been referred from THE MAIL-BAG to this department. About the fourteenth century, long after the invention of pins, pin-makers were permitted to sell their wares openly only on the first and second days of the year, and on those days crowds of court ladies hastened to buy them, being provided by their fathers and husbands with purchase money. Hence the expression "pin money" came into vogue; as pins became plentiful and cheap, women spent the allowance made for pins on other things, and the term gradually came to mean her allowance for all personal expenses. The opinion exists that pins were invented in France during the time of Francis I., and introduced into England by Catherine Howard, Henry VIII.'s fifth wife. But in 1347, two hundred years before the death of Francis, 1,200 pins were delivered from the English wardrobe for the use of the Princess Joan and fifty-three years later, several thousand long and short pins were purchased of Jehan le Beconnier, a Parisian pin-maker, by the Duchess d'Orleans. A large proportion of the "pin money" of the modern woman is spent—even as that of the fourteenth century ladies was spent—in charity. The charity of the present age, however, is more intelligently and effectively administered, its ultimate object being to render the recipient independent of alms.

School-Boy and Army Veteran.

Thomas Dixon, aged nineteen, private of the Seventy-first Regiment, came back from Santiago, and before his regiment was mustered out he had to wear his uniform daily to the Boys' High School at 158th Street. He was wounded in the neck and shoulder, recovered at Siboney, came North with his regiment, was furloughed, and resumed attendance at school when it opened. His case is one of many. "Many of them are such boys!" said some of the tender-hearted women of the Women's National War Relief Association. "How can we help being kind to them and mothering them?" "You may know," Miss Gould said, "what a boy one was, when I tell you that when landed in New York he had only one dollar in his pocket, and on the way to Camp Walworth he stopped and invested twenty-five cents of his capital in a box of candy!" It seems hard to believe that such tender lads should have been tried in the hardships of battle, yet—if war is right at all—he may not be so unfortunate as we are inclined to think. Hardships and dependence upon himself certainly do not operate to make a boy less manly. In the battle of life, we mothers have a tendency to do all our boys' fighting for them, and it is a mistake.

An Osage Wedding.

AN Indian wedding, according to Osage custom, occurred very recently during the visit of the Pawnees and Otoes to the Osage reservation in the northeast corner of Indian Territory. There had been a green-corn dance, a dog feast, and other entertainments, but nothing was of such interest as the wedding. The Osage Indians are rich, every member of the tribe being worth $2,500 in cash in addition to many rich acres of land. Paul Red Eagle and Ida Strike-Axe, the contracting parties, are prominent members of the tribe. Until their wedding-day, neither knew who was the selected life-partner. Parents and friends had made all arrangements, and forty of the finest ponies on the reservation was the price for Ida's hand.

At 4 P.M., six friends of the groom and six squaws (friends of the bride) appeared prepared for a race. Two hundred and fifty yards away appeared the bride, gorgeous in Indian finery, mounted on the handsomest horse in the tribe's possession, and accompanied by her mother. Her father fired a pistol, and the race began. The first brave to reach the bride and touch her hand receives the horse on which she rides. This prize was won by Edward Chauteau, an educated Indian. The first maiden to reach her falls heir to the bridal robe. Desha White Spear secured this trophy, and laid it away for her own wedding-day, when it will again be contested for by racing maidens. The squaws carried the captured bride into the wigwam—in this instance a comfortable farm house—of her husband, and bride and groom sat down among their many friends to a wedding feast of a quality and abundance which would have done credit to any civilized home. Loads of food were carried out and distributed among members of the visiting tribes.

Curious Funeral Customs.

In certain portions of Pennsylvania, there are some peculiar customs among the German farmers, one of which is that at funerals, all male mourners keep their hats on in church. "The wearers," writes a visitor, "are supposed to be in such grief that they are for the time being excused from any observance of the conventional behavior in a house of worship. For the relative or intimate friend to uncover his head, would be considered an act of disrespect; for the mere acquaintance not to do so would be regarded as an impertinence. The funeral feast at which sometimes four or five hundred guests present themselves, and upon which a Pennsylvania German farmer, in other respects unostentatious or extravagant, will spend hundreds of dollars, is a more serious matter. In the preparation of these feasts in a country rural district, the entire neighborhood assists; and if the bereaved family is too poor to pay to entertain the guests, the neighbors, with the generosity peculiar to these people, and which never fails in time of distress, provide the eatables and throw open their houses. This custom has been so abused that it is falling into disfavor, but it disappears slowly, for the German farmer's hospitable impulse towards those who come to mourn with him is in the warp and woof of his character."

Make Home a Magnet.

"You cannot catch flies with vinegar," is an old saying—which like other old sayings reveals in homely parable, a truth which has been proven by abundant experience. If we want our children to love home, church and Sunday School, we must not make these things bitter or sour to them. There is no reason for doing so, because home, church and Sunday School are by rights the sweetest, cheeriest, most attractive places on earth. The first—the home—should in a measure, include the other two, for it should be a place of love, worship, and instruction. If snow and rain are needed to make the earth fruitful, so also is sunshine: and if trial and discipline and sorrow are needful to strengthen character, love and cheer and gentleness are needed to sweeten it. While our children are little plants in the home garden let us give them all the sunshine we can, so that when transplanting time comes, they may be strong and noble.

THE METAMORPHOSIS OF MOTHER.

....BY ELEANOR ROOT.

MRS. BOWEN always had sacrificed herself for her daughters, and it seemed probable that she always would. The neighbors never tired of exclaiming about what a self-sacrificing mother she was. She rather liked to have them exclaim. It seemed a just tribute to her maternal love and care.

One day her brother Frederick came to visit the little family. He had not seen his sister for years, and was appalled at the care-worn lines in her pretty, faded face.

"Angelina!" he said after supper, as his three nieces in their crip, pretty muslins were betaking themselves to the front porch, "Angelina, are you going to wash these dishes?"

"Why, yes," she said, why not? I always do—that is, you see the girls can't be dressed and receive their company in the evenings if they have to go into the kitchen and put their hands in dishwater. I don't mind. I've had my young days, and I want them to have theirs." She began vigorously picking up the dishes.

"Mm," said her brother after a pause, "what do you say, Angelina, to going with me to call on Judge Calkins and his wife this evening? At home they knew every one—so I know how they would appreciate your calling on them—perfect strangers as they are here."

"O, I couldn't, Frederick," exclaimed his sister, "I—I—" her face reddened.

"Why not?" demanded her brother. "Of course you can. We'll just walk over for a few minutes. It's only two or three blocks from here—just a block from the court house. Why not let the dishes go if you think you'll be too tired?"

"O, it isn't that," replied Mrs. Bowen, "but I've got out of the way of calling; the girls do all of that. Besides, I haven't a dress that's fit to make a formal call in. I'm a great deal happier living in their young lives," hastily, "than I would be dressing and spending money on myself."

"And so you're content to efface yourself for them?" said her brother.

"People say that I am a most devoted mother," a little proudly.

"And what effect will it have on the girls? Don't you think it is rather hard on them?"

"Hard on them? What do you mean?" The tears stood in the little woman's eyes.

"There, there," said Mr. Bowen, going over and smoothing the shining, brown hair, "you're just about crying, and it's because you're all tired out and need a change. I'm going to carry you off home with me Monday. I shan't take no for an answer," this as his sister gave a little ejaculation. "That's settled. You're going with me if you only stay over night!"

Frederick Bowen had his way. It had been so long since his sister had had any one plan for her, that after a few demurs she assented to all that he said. One thing only she remained firm in. That was in regard to having a new dress. Maud and Anna and Lucy joined their uncle in urging her to get one, but she remained immovable.

"If I were only going to stay a few weeks instead of a few days," she said, "it would be different; but your uncle has promised me that I shall see no one but the family, if I do not wish to, so my black Henrietta will do very well. The money that it will take to hire Mrs. Rogers to keep house for you while I am gone, and the bonnet and things which I have been obliged to get, worry me enough as it is."

So it was settled. And Mrs. Bowen, content with her poor, little wardrobe, and her brother, content that his sister was going with him, wardrobe or no wardrobe, started for his distant home.

As they were speeding away over the hills and valleys, he turned to her and said: "Now, Angelina, I'm going to tell you what I meant by its being hard on the girls for you to efface yourself, but first let me tell you that you look years younger than you did the morning I came!" Mrs. Bowen laughed.

"A slat sun-bonnet isn't very conducive to an appearance of youth and beauty, is it?" she said. "It is bad that your first glimpse of me should have been in such a garb—but radishes need care and weeds come up apace. I know what you are thinking about," she continued, glancing at his face, which had suddenly become grave. "You are thinking that one of the girls ought to have been in the radish patch instead of me."

"Yes, I am," he replied. "And now that you've helped open up the subject I'm going to tell you all that's been on my mind ever since I've been visiting you." Here followed a long, serious talk, renewed on the following day. The subject was not finished when the train drew into the depot at Mr. Bowen's home.

"Now, forget all I've been saying," he said, as he helped her down the steps, "for to-night. I want Susan and the children to see your own bright self, and they will not unless you put away that brow of care. They have always heard how witty and bright their Aunt Anna is, and I do not want you to disappoint them."

As the two approached Mr. Bowen's residence, a fine old mansion among the trees, a young girl in a long apron came running out a side gate.

"O, this is Aunt Anna," she cried, bending over and kissing her aunt, and giving her father an ecstatic hug. "Mother and the rest of the family are sitting in solemn state and grandeur on the front veranda, waiting to welcome you; but I saw you through the lattice as you came up the side street—it's my turn to get supper to-night, and I was in the kitchen—and I couldn't resist the temptation of coming out and escorting you up to them. How surprised they will be!"

By this time the trio had turned the winding walk, and were in sight of the occupants of the porch. The first thing Frederick Bowen's sister thought, as his wife advanced to meet them in a shimmering, beautiful house-gown was, "O, why didn't I get a new dress!" The thought was forgotten in the warmth of the greetings that followed, but it returned many times in the succeeding days.

In these days her blinded, if loving, maternal eyes, were opened. At the first, it had seemed to her that her brother's children were not accorded all the prerogatives of youth. She had felt that they were bearing burdens which should rightfully have fallen on their parents' shoulders, and they were debarred from pleasures which they might have had had father and mother been willing to sacrifice themselves; moreover, she felt that their clothing was inexcusably plain and meagre, when contrasted with their mother's raiment. But as the time passed on, she began to see with different eyes. She realized that the duties assumed by these young people were fitting them for the harder duties which would be theirs in later life, that the time and strength saved by their mother from household cares was given to them a thousand times over in wise counselings, in inspiration and in companionship, and that the spirit of helpfulness and self-sacrifice engendered in them could not but be of inestimable value to them through all the coming years.

And then like a wise woman she set to work to resolve—and to carry out her resolves.

The first thing that she did was to write home to Anna, her eldest daughter. The letter electrified the family. They read and reread it with wondering eyes.

"I have decided to stay a month or six weeks," she wrote. "I have also decided to follow your advice and have a new dress. Your aunt dresses so tastefully and beautifully that I really feel ashamed of my one black gown. Besides, if I make such a long visit I shall have to see some one besides the family, and it would really not be right for Frederick's sister to meet his own and his wife's friends, dressed as I am. You will have to give up the lace dresses you were planning, and do with your last summer gowns made over a little. Remember that it is a long time since I have had a new dress.

"I have been thinking about suggesting that you let Mrs. Rogers go. You can take turns about in doing the work and it will not be hard on anyone. It will save quite a good deal in six weeks. Remember that we have only just so much income. Send the rent money as soon as Mr. Smith brings it. If it is necessary, take out some; but you know I left you a liberal allowance, even for a month."

Here followed some directions about the care of the garden, and a reminder that the "slat sunbonnet" was on the top shelf of the kitchen closet. They would need it, she said, if Mrs. Rogers went, for the vegetables were up too nicely to be allowed to suffer.

Mrs. Bowen gave a little laugh and a sob as she sealed the letter.

"It is well to prepare them," she said.

"You are right in everything that you said to me," she declared to her brother the day she left. "I feel that I can never thank you enough. Some brothers would have thought it too much trouble, or they would not have cared, or they would not have seen. But you cared, and you saw, and you did not mind the trouble!"

To her brother's wife Mrs. Bowen said "Susan, I have enjoyed it all, even to the 'facing about,' although you cannot know how hard it was for me at first. Promise me that you will come to see me this winter."

Mrs. Bowen soon stood on the familiar depot platform at her home once more. Maude and Anna and Lucy stood but a few steps from her, but they did not see her.

"Oh, why do you suppose mother didn't come?" she heard Maude say disappointedly. She took a step forward, her neat, gray traveling dress shimmering in the dancing light. Anna looked up and caught her eye. She gave an incredulous little cry.

"Mother! mother! Here is mother, girls!" she cried. "She been here all the time!" The three rushed over and kissed the little woman, surveying her with loving and admiring eyes.

"You dear mother," they exclaimed, "we expected you, but we never thought of seeing this radiant vision. Why did you not write to us fully before you started, preparing us?" On the way home they declared again and again that they would have to become acquainted with their mother, that they had never really known her, that she looked younger and prettier than any of her daughters, with much more fond and foolish talk which it did Mrs. Bowen's heart good to hear.

"I'm afraid," said the mother, "you've had to do without a great many things you've been used to, and," here her voice trembled between a laugh and a sob, "and you have had much more work to do than you have ever had to do before."

"We don't care—and we've determined that you shall fold your hands, mother dear!" cried Maude. "We've been thinking over some things, too, since you've been away—and since you wrote that first letter."

"And we'd rather have our mother look as she does now, and be dressed becomingly than to have the most elegant gowns ourselves, and outshine every one," interposed Anna.

"And hereafter you shall not be allowed to wash a single dish or sweep a floor; but you shall sit in state in the parlor or on the front porch, with a daughter on either side, while the Cinderella for the time being is at the pans and kettles in the kitchen," chimed in Lucy, with a merry laugh.

And they were all as good as their word.

Mr. Moody on Heaven.

Speaking on the location of heaven, Evangelist D. L. Moody says:

I read that the Master promised his disciples an abode in his Father's mansions, whither he was going to prepare them a place, and in the Revelation the Apostle John described the wondrous beauties of the City of God. The Evangelist Luke tells us that Christ ascended from the little group of his disciples as they followed him out toward Bethany, and that while they stood gazing up into heaven there appeared unto them two messengers to cheer them with the promise of his coming again. And so it is with the child of God when the earthly pilgrimage is over, and the soul ascends to those mansions which Christ has gone on before to prepare for those who l... TO LIFT MEN UP.*

[illegible]t men up, oh, this mine aim.—
Any with pomp and pride and fame.—
Through light and darkness, fire and flame,
To lift men up.

[illegible] God! for me no crown or state,
[illegible]ve alone for low or great,
[illegible]r one vast humanity.

[illegible] hearts as restless as the sea,
[illegible] souls serene through suffering;
[illegible]hem, for these, let me still sing.
To lift men up.

Gospel Work in Tibet.†

MY party consisted of myself and five Asiatics—Noga, the Chinese Mohammedan guide and my head servant; Erminie, the Tibetan woman, Noga's wife she reached her home at Lhassa; [illegible]z, a young Chinese Mohammedan boy; Pontso, my faithful Tibetan, who had become a Christian, and Nobjey, fellow-traveler, a Tibetan borderman going for Lhassa. Our cavalcade numbered sixteen horses. Nobjey and Erminie rode their own; the other ten were required consisting of mounts for myself and three servants, and six pack horses loaded with our two tents, bedding, cloths for barter, presents for chiefs, and food for [illegible]0 months. The brigands relieved me of a good part of this luggage, together with two of my horses, a few days after crossing the border. Our road first lay through the district inhabited by the agricultural tribes on the frontier. Here we entered the country occupied by the Mongols of the Ko-Ko-Nor. The whole [illegible]ast there was the richest I have seen [illegible] a part of Tibet; but an idyllic pastoral life is by no means practised by the inhabitants. Brigandage is the general profession.

The Mongols are tall and fierce-looking, though they proved amiable when [illegible]ry. The men shave their heads. The women and women dress in a gown of sheep-skin, girded round the waist; high boots of felt and skin, bound below the knee with a leathern strap or cotton garter and long white felt coats, which they wear over the sheep-skins when it rains. Their summer hat is of white felt, [illegible]pe something like the top hat worn by old Welsh market-women; the cap they wear in winter is of white astrakhan, shaped like a sugar-loaf, with a red and white cotton brim. The women dress their hair in little plaits, more than a hundred, caught together at the ends in a [illegible]band of colored cloth, which is embroidered in gay silks and gold thread, and studded with coral and turquoise. Silver coins and brass buttons, which they get from Lhassa. The tents are round, [illegible]ther sides of trellis work, the top of [illegible]oden ribs, giving an umbrella shape, and the whole covered with white felt, [illegible]thin aperture for a small door of [illegible]oo and a hole in the roof to let out [illegible]oke.

We left this district to enter one in comparison with the inhabitants of which the Mongols are very Arcadians. On the 18th of September we crossed the Yellow River (or Ma-chu, as the Tibetans call it), at its first bend westward, and came into the Golok tribes. The country of this people extends from that point southwards as far as a high range of mountains running from east to west, and is watered by the Yellow River. It is treeless and hilly but pastorage is fairly good in the valleys and on the lower slopes of the mountains, which even in September show a clearly marked snow-line. The Goloks are shorter and slighter in stature than Mongols, and have higher cheek-bones and rounder faces. The men wear their hair long and hanging down to their shoulders; their sheep-skins are drawn up by the girdle, forming a kind of kilt below the waist and a large pouch above, in which they always carry their wooden tea bowls, called po-pa, and many other things, when on a journey. The boots are of leather, with skin soles and cloth leggings bound below the knee (which is left bare like a Scotch Highlander's) by a long woven garter of various bright colored wools. The hats, made of fur of foxes, sheep-skins, or felt, are of many peculiar shapes. The dress of the women is like that of the men; but the sheep-skin gowns reach to the ankles. Their hair is in two plaits, hanging down their backs and enclosed at the ends in a sheath of cloth ornamented with round pieces of amber and cowrie shells, which they buy from the Chinese. Long earrings of silver and coral hang from both ears; the men limit themselves to one very massive piece of jewelry in the right ear. The tents, utterly unlike those of the Mongols, are made of woven black cloth of the coarse hair of the yak, the Tibetan ox. These Golok tribes are the most notorious brigands in Tibet. They are feared both by travelers and by other nomadic people like themselves, and they acknowledge neither Tibetan nor Chinese sway. Pouring forth upon their preconcerted forays in numbers varying from five hundred to two thousand, they fall upon the tribes in the given district, and, surrounding them close on all sides, carry off as booty, cattle, horses, sheep, tents and firearms. They never fire upon the affrighted owners unless resistance is offered; but so sure are they of their prey that women and children accompany them to enjoy the fun. It is not surprising that these people are the biggest cattle-owners in Tibet, a Golok chief being the happy possessor of a good ten thousand head. The tribes thus divested of their cattle and worldly goods sometimes rally to one leader, make an incursion into the Golok country, and continue by stratagem to get back some of their stolen property. They generally, however, prefer the easier way of retaliating upon innocent wayfarers. Thus the Golok tribe of brigands are in a great measure responsible for the dangers and robberies to which travelers in Tibet are subject.

Personal Service the New Idea of Christianity.*

WHAT hope have we, that a theory of life, long known, but not universally adopted, will become a new force to-day? What reason have we for believing that the Christian church will fall in love with this ideal now, if she has not done so before? There are several reasons in the trend of Christian thought and the change of emphasis on the ideals of social obligation, which warrant the belief that we are entering upon a new era of Christian character and service. There is a growing conviction in the breasts of earnest Christian men that, through the long years of heroism and self-sacrifice in the history of European and American Christianity, we have won only the outward framework of liberty. We have secured only the political form. The essential spirit of liberty in the mastery of our own evil tendencies we have not yet won.

The very successes of the church have, as time passed by, confounded her with the force of the world. And consequently new ideals of life must be adopted to infuse new spirit and purpose into her thought and action in the future.

We are in a state of mind to-day when no lesson in church or state is being lost upon us. We are impatient of idiosyncracies, of half truths, of paths that lead nowhere, of grinding cycles of meaningless misery to society. We love realities. We prefer to be doing something rather than dreaming about doing it. If we have not the lofty visions, the purifying spiritual enthusiasm of the early days, we have the caution and practicality come of long experience; and we share equally with them the ultimate conviction that life is vain if we cannot redeem men from the power of sin, and lift society into a loftier plane of living, both in its material and moral experiences.

However much thinking men may differ as to methods in the accomplishment of the great work of the Kingdom, both as regards the evangelization of the unbelieving world or the Christian culture of the professors of faith in Christ, there is no difference in the facts of history brought up to date. We know what truths have been emphasized, and what ideals of life have been set before men during these years of Christian instruction in the past, and we know just what the results are.

No one regards the present situation as satisfactory. There is the most ominous agreement on this point, both by those who love the church and by those who hate her. The one part may say it is because the true doctrine of Christianity has not been accepted and acted upon by the people, and the other part may say that true doctrine has not been preached, but both agree that Europe and America, in the nineteenth century of our Lord, does not present that face of heavenly splendor, that front of power, and that heart unspotted from the world, which the Founder's character and its first disciples' faith and heroism lead us to expect.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

The Dying Summer and Its Glories—A Rough Rider Mascot—The Boy Gone to College —Washing Dishes—Consolations for Hard Work—An Answer to Pansy.

I DON'T know how you feel, but I think we have entered on the royal time of the year, when every day is beautiful, and woods, fields and streams have put on their radiant garments. The vine, with its purple clusters, the glory of golden rod and aster, the silver haze on the river, the opaline mist on the mountains, the harvest wealth in barn and bin, all prompt us to thoughts of our Father's goodness and abounding love. There is a favorite hymn which we like to sing, "Take time to be holy," and I would not wonder if some of us might add a stanza to its melody, and in our lovely American autumn say, "Take time to be happy!" Get out of doors and stay there. In the old mythology there was a hero, who received strength when he fell by the wholesome touch of the earth, and for some of us Mother Nature has tender ministries, if we will let her exercise them.

DID YOU read that pretty story about the Rough Riders and their mascot? It seems that this remarkable regiment carried with it to Cuba a golden eagle, which when its wings are extended measures seven feet. How men going to wars and conflicts could be encumbered with an eagle one hardly sees, but this regiment certainly would not have been fitly accompanied by a dove or a sparrow, and the big Indian war eagle was their companion. It may now be seen in the menagerie at Central Park, New York, where it has been received at the special request of Colonel Roosevelt, and where it went under the escort of twenty-five of the Rough Riders. The man who had it in charge, a private from Kansas, kissed it and stroked its feathers as he bade it good-bye, and tears rolled down his bronzed face as he turned away.

SO YOU have sent Will to college, my friend, and the farm-house seems desolate. You are anxious about your boy, lest he may encounter temptations away from home. You wish, after all, that you had chosen a near-by college, instead of one so far away. Dear Mrs. B., suppose you put it to yourself in this light: You and your husband have given your son every advantage; you believe his principles are good, and he has been trained in a Christian home. Now, for the first time in his young life, he has a chance to prove his mettle. Temptations resisted will leave him stronger, and as you have always taught him self-government, I do not think you need fear that he will succumb at the outset. He is a manly boy, and will do you credit. The college training will discipline him intellectually, and even should he enter on a business life, the liberal education will do him no harm, but on the contrary good. The college friendships will brighten his entire future, and as for good manners, simplicity and gentle breeding, college men have them as a sort of birthright and hall-mark.

That Will cannot be supplied with a large amount of money while at college, is not a thing to regret. More young men are injured by having too much money than too little, while they are still in the formative period of life. All the self-denial should not be on the parents' side. Will should take his share in the daily sacrifices made to give him his education.

MINNIE H. tells me that washing dishes is the plague of her existence. Isn't that stating the case very strongly? One cannot blame Minnie, for they have had seventeen in the family all summer and it is no trifle to wash dishes three times a day for seventeen people. Her suggestion that everybody should wash his or her own dishes would be worth considering if it were not that endless confusion would thus result. Think of the procession from the table to the sink! Think of the cups that would be handleless, and the plates that would be cracked. Think of the cursory manner in which father and the boys would do their share of the work.

Let me give you a bit out of my favorite "Margaret Ogilvy." The mother is aged, and is tenderly spared all household work. The sister, who is the usual housekeeper, is in bed with one of her depressing sick headaches. You who have sick headaches know what a thrall they are, how utterly out of the question it is to do anything but lie still and suffer, till they are over.

In this emergency the author-son undertakes the domestic management. He succeeds pretty well, but later, when his sister is better and resumes her own place, he is sitting in his own room at work, and hears his sister going hurriedly upstairs. He says:

"I have a presentiment that she has gone to talk about me, and I basely open the door and listen."

"Just look at that mother!"

"Is it a dish-cloth?"

"That's what it is now."

"Losh behears! It's one of the new table napkins."

"That's what it was. He has been polishing the kitchen grate with it!" (I remember).

"Woe's me! That is what comes of his not letting me budge from this room. O, it is a watery Sabbath when men take to doing woman's work!"

"It defies the face of clay, mother, to fathom what makes him so senseless."

"Oh, it's that weary writing."

"And the worst part of it is, he will talk to-morrow as if he had done wonders."

"That's the way with all of them!"

"Yes, but, as usual, you will humor him, mother."

"Oh, well, it pleases him, you see," says my mother, "and we can have our laugh when his door is shut."

"He is most terribly handless."

"He is all that, but, poor soul, he does his best."

THERE, Minnie, is a bit of word-painting to console you for your hard work. I know your dishes are beautifully washed, that you use plenty of hot water and soap, and do not forget the rinsing of the cups and plates, the scalding of forks and spoons, the thorough cleansing of pots and pans, and that you keep your dish-cloths and towels immaculate. Whatever is worth doing is worth doing well.

EMILY R. I advise you to return the letters unopened.

SADIE B. Avoid such familiarities. They are in the worst taste.

CHRISTINE K. Lemon juice and salt, or a weak solution of oxalic acid will remove ink stains from linen.

JOHN D. I cannot advise your going into debt. Save up the money first, even though you must wait another year before resigning your situation and entering on your legal studies.

NOW, Pansy dear, you have waited long enough for your turn, and your question is of real importance to you and other tall maidens of thirteen and fourteen, who should not any longer be seen with frocks such as small girls wear. Your dresses should come to the tops of your shoes, my dear. Insist on this length. The short frocks which were suitable for you a year ago are not now appropriate, nor is it the fashion for girls in their teens to be dressed as they were when just out of the nursery. You are still much too young to accept an invitation to an entertainment or party in the evening, from a young gentleman, or to attend such festivities unless your mother goes, too, and takes you under her wing. If you were my daughters, Pansy and Lillie, you should go to bed at nine o'clock or soon after for the next three or four years, so as to get plenty of beauty sleep, and I should not even think of your going to parties until your school days were well over.

Which is better?

A Physician says of it:

My prayer is that the time may quickly come when the spectacle of thousands dying needlessly may no longer be witnessed, and when the heart, keenly sensitive to the suffering of others and filled with bitter anguish upon the loss of loved ones, shall cease to be wrung with unavailing and unspeakable grief. Without doubt the Electropoise has the gift and power to cure multitudes who without it must surely die, and that, too, in early life or in the very maturity of strength, when their loss is most severely felt and the mystery of their untimely death is most terribly difficult of solution.

STORM-SWEPT BARBADOS.

ain Wrought in the Windward Islands—The New Weather Station's Warning—Barbados and its Mission.

FOLLOWING fast upon the political troubles of the West Indies which have attracted such attention of late, public sympathy is again painfully drawn to them by ts of the havoc wrought in that of the group known as the Windislands, by the terrible cyclone beginning late on Saturday, Sep- 10, swept the islands from Barestward to St. Vincent and thence est to St. Kitts.

e islands, which with the exception tinique, belong to Great Britain, hich have enjoyed the fruits of nd order while their more northern rs. Cuba and Porto Rico were ed with war, have suffered incaldevastation through this hurrie most terrible, perhaps, of the —not even that of 1844, which d from Cuba to Newfoundland in ys, the remarkable Guadaloupe ne of 1865, the sea-wave that overclothing and other necessaries of life were lost in the general destruction; and after the storm was over and before help could reach them, many were starving.

It is a comfort to know that relief measures were promptly instituted. Queen Victoria's message of sympathy came: Her Majesty's vessels in the West Indies were ordered to supply the devastated islands with provisions, which could be procured more quickly from Jamaica and Halifax than from other points; neighboring islands, which had not suffered, started relief movements, and the Mayor of London opened a fund.

To Barbados, our readers have lately had their attention directed through the description given in these columns of the worthy work done there by Miss S. Antoinette Esterbrooks, of the Seaman's Anchor Mission and Tropical Training School, in Bridgetown, the capital of that island. Our picture of Bridgetown before the hurricane shows the Inner Basin.

It is to be hoped that sci- ill develop such knowledge of the of cyclonic disturbances, and so its methods for rapid distribution nings that more timely precautions wholesale destruction of life and y may be instituted. As it was, ices given must have lessened the wrought, and the wisdom of our ment in establishing the station at on has been applauded by our own e foreign press.

The full list of casualties on the sea, er, can never be known. Old seaay that many vessels will never be from again. The storm lasted Monday, when there was a dead or six hours; after which the hurriaged anew. Its centre swept St. t and Guadaloupe; in Barbados, suffered mostly from the rain, and crops were destroyed, as also Lucia and other islands. Out of ncent's population of 41,000, 300 illed, and 20,000 were injured and ed homeless; in Trinidad, the peowithout food or shelter; in Bar- 10,000 homes were destroyed and people made shelterless. During the ul hours when the hurricane had its e atmosphere was full of flying the great many-rooted banyan trees rn up and hurled hither and thither; an arm of Carlisle Bay, through which the hurricane swept. All steamers anchor in the bay, a mile outside of the Basin, where only sailing vessels venture. St. Lucia is the only one of the islands where steamers can approach the wharf, the coral reefs rendering it unsafe in the case of all the others. Barbados is the distributing point for the royal mails: six steamers come in on Saturday night and exchange their cargoes and mail, which are brought from Europe, Canada, the United States, etc., and go out on Monday. The Seaman's Mission, since its establishment, has been holding meetings on vessels anchored in the Inner Basin, and sometimes meetings were held on vessels in the Bay. Miss Esterbrooks, who has been in the United States for some time in the interest of the Mission, and who is now at Far Rockaway, L. I., is greatly concerned over the distress in which the hurricane must have brought the missionaries and the hindrance which it must place upon their work. The chapel and their homes must be swept away. The island, before this fearful affliction, was very poor. It is only twenty-one miles long and thirteen wide, and has 300,000 population: the land is poor and overtaxed: the sugar industry, since it costs $2 a hundred to raise sugar that sells for $1.25, is practically given up. Wages are from twelve to twenty-four cents a day: women and children receive the former, men the latter price. It is hard for us, in our thriving country to imagine such conditions as these, and while we thank God for our manifold blessings, our prayers should go out to the afflicted islands.

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

MATTHEW begins the inspired story
Of the Saviour's life and glory!
Mark follows him with eager pen,
Adding his memories for men!
Luke, the beloved physician, now
Crowns anew the sacred brow;
And John, who leaned on Jesus' breast,
Writes more of love than all the rest.
With Christ's history thus ended,
His Apostles' Acts are blended;
And Paul, whom we account the chief,
Adds Romans to the sacred sheaf.
Corinthians First and Second then Come with Galatians from his pen;
Ephesians and Philippians now,
His loving care for churches show;
Colossians, too, have many a rule
Sent them from Christ's own perfect school.
Thessalonians First and Second
With the others now are reckoned;
To Timothy two letters find
Full of counsels, loving, kind;
In one to Titus we are shown,
That none are saved by works alone.
He writes Philemon now and sends
The slave he to his care commends.
Then to the Hebrews, Paul doth bring
New proofs that Christ 's their Priest and King.
James, of the Twelve, adds here his word,
He urges prayer and trust in God.
Two letters Peter writes; give heed,
Him Jesus bade his flock to feed.
Now John, whose words before we've heard,
In letters, First, Second and Third
Begs us while here we live to love,
That we may grow like God above;
Then Jude with all the rest unites,
Of judgment and of mercy writes.
Last, we, to Revelation come,
A view revealed of heaven, the home
Of all who love their Saviour Lord,
Omnipotent, Incarnate Word,
Whom ancient writers dimly saw
Through Jewish ritual and law;
This light, God's love to all then lent
Who read the ancient Testament.
Thank God, we've both books, old and new.
Read, study both and love them, too;
Learn Christ, and trusting in his grace,
We soon shall see his glorious face,
And, with apostles, prophet, priest,
We'll meet him at his marriage feast.

Welcomed the Bible.

Some time ago, as our readers may remember, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD received a letter from a poor native African preacher, at Freetown, Sierra Leone, expressing an earnest wish to possess a Teacher's Bible. Shortly afterward a Bible was sent and the recipient now writes as follows:

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone, 27th July.

The Christian Herald:

DEAR FRIEND.—I received the valuable Bible you sent me, for which I am writing and submitting my grateful thanks. I submit my name as subscriber and I am submitting three other names to be subscribers, and would be glad if you would begin their supply from June, 1898. Subscriptions sent by P. O. order. The last mail steamer brought me two parcels containing interesting books from your office as presents to me. You little know how much I value and appreciate them. God bless those who remembered us.

My work is progressing favorably. It is among the poor and degraded in this part of the city. I began my mission in this locality in December, 1895, as "City Missionary," and am delighted with my success, and I thank God alone to whom I owe it. With some help I was able to erect a neat wooden chapel 50x30. I have a Bible class and a good Sunday School. Some kind ladies in America have thought of me as you have done, and are sending me little helps now and then. Your servant in Christ. GEORGE DOVE DECKER.

In Alabama Mountains.

Our readers will be interested in the following letter from Rev. S. E. White, D.D., Sandrock, Ala.:

Since a notice of our work was given in your columns, hundreds of the poor white people of this region have had the Gospel preached to them who never heard it before. God bless the friends who have sent so many useful papers and beautiful picture cards. Last Christmas we had our first Christmas tree and distributed over 100 nice and useful presents. It would have done your hearts good to see the faces of the children light up with joy as their names were called. Mrs. White's day school is growing. Some pupils come a long way to attend. Our Sunday School is doing well; and we manage to assist other neighborhoods where reading matter is scarce. We have given away 250 Testaments and good tracts and papers. There are no regular church or school houses in these mountains. We hold our Sunday School meetings, &c., in such out of the way sheds and shanties as are not occupied.

We have had a hard struggle. Once when we were greatly reduced, we asked God to help us and the next day we received a draft of five dollars from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. When we came here, not one of seventy-five scholars could tell me what a magazine or periodical was like. Now these and 200 more can read the books we give. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S face has become very familiar in these mountains. Our nearest railroad station is Round Mountain.

ASIGN OF THE TIMES.

ropt ic Significance of the Zionism in onnection with Anti-Semitism.

By Rev. J. Gosset Tanner.*

E of the most extraordinary developments of this latter half of the nineteenth century, which st of its intelligence and liberality, is wespread antagonism to God's an- t ople. Let us look for a moment is going on in the world. Do we s the spread of the dislike of the s Has not anti-Semitism reached a a almost in the days in which we suppose we may say that its birth- as Germany. We should hardly e to find it there, and yet even in tant Germany we witness an ex- atred of the Jewish race. Turning R sia, we see that the spirit has be- e strong there that hundreds and ds have been driven out without g what to do and where to go. I e , however, the anti-Semitic spirit a ined to a greater height in France any other country. Probably you have read an account of an w with M. Drumont, the editor of devoted to little else than hatred Jew, and also an interview with x Nordau. Here we have two the very opposite poles, both of hink that an outbreak of serious er against the Jews may take e France at any moment, possibly n massacre. There is a great dis- the Jews, which latter, as we all as been emphasized by the Drey- , and I suppose that most impar- observers think that if that poor man t been a Jew, nobody would have f the case at all.

e, therefore, that the prophecies eady being fulfilled before our s. We notice also that this agitation on numbers of the Jews themselves th return to Palestine is what many r especially the prosperous ones, e een fighting against for many s They have said, "We will remain nds where we are living: we have i to leave them;" but God is draw- g t m out of all these countries, and y e, by a secret, but powerful im- se which they cannot resist, being o t back to their own land.

s ot absolutely true, as Dr. McKil- ls shown, that they must be brought k a state of unbelief? God has t so. It is very clear, I think, from k 22: 18-22: "Thus saith the Lord od. ecause ye are all become dross, ol therefore, I will gather you into e st of Jerusalem. As they gather e nd brass, and iron, and lead, and n the midst of the furnace, to blow e upon it, to melt it, so will I gather mine anger and in my fury, and I ve you there, and melt you." It is e vident, therefore, that this is the rpose for which God is going to e Israel back to Jerusalem and to e e. They are to be brought into f nace and there to be melted: but t re is one token of encouragement, n this passage which seems so ter- e. Though a great many metals are t ed here, the Lord selects silver th principal metal. Now, when he p es his saints in the Bible to silver t gold, as he often does, I think it is e ear that he means they are precious a and therefore, though the Lord s punish Israel, still they are com- r c silver, and the remnants of the s ill be brought purified out of the a of affliction.

k it is also clear from that striking d Isa. 66. that even in the time when y e brought back, when the temple e rebuilt, in such a state of unbelief re ill be some—a humble, poor peo- —o will believe the Lord's Messiah, l be watching for his coming. g scoffed at by those who are build- t temple in unbelief.

N to look again to the Zionist move- e t I have read everything I could t d of bearing on the subject with e gatest possible interest. Dr. Herzl . Max Nordau are men of great er and observation, but still there is ery le thought of God in their speeches a their notions. Their idea is sim- p national one. There is a very re- markable man, Rabbi Mohilewer, who attended the Basle Congress, and who seemed to have a more spiritual thought. He said that the true faith was that God would send the Redeemer to bring back his chosen people to their own land, and that the Jewish race would be once more honored among the nations.

I think Mr. Zangwill feels that the present movement of Zionism is too rash, yet he says that "a genuine movement would deserve the support and guidance of the best Jews," and his conclusion is that "Zionism would, at any rate, preserve the race for future inspiration. Whereas, without either Zionism or an international spiritual idea, Judaism must deservedly disappear." Here is, I suppose, one of the most remarkable Jewish writers of the present day, and even he feels that something must be done to preserve alive the spiritual idea of Judaism, to preserve even the thought of the law of Moses and the prophets.

Dr. Townsend's idea about the parable of the fig-tree in Matthew 24, where we are told that "when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors," may very possibly be true, that the olive-tree is a type of Israel under certain circumstances, and the vine-tree also another type, and that the fig-tree is a type of Israel under responsibility, and that we now see the national idea, under Zionism, budding and putting forth leaves.

THE STORY OF CONSUMPTION

Dr. Hunter's Lecture Continued From Last Week.

I announced my theory and the principles of my treatment to the world in the following axioms:

1st. Consumption is a local disease of the lungs and always begins first in the air tubes through which we breathe. It injures health and endangers life by destroying the freedom of breathing. Before true consumption can arise, or anyone get it, the lungs must be inflamed by bronchitis and the epithelium abraded, forming a raw surface in the air tubes. The germs of the air which cause consumption can only attack a raw surface. They have no power to injure the lungs until the epithelium, which is the lung's natural safeguard, is destroyed by the bronchial inflammation. From bronchitis to consumption is only a step, but it is one fraught with fearful consequences to the patient. It changes a simple inflammation into a deadly germ disease, which is always fatal if not properly treated.

2d. Consumption can only be prevented by arresting and curing its invariable forerunner—bronchitis, before the bronchial inflammation has weakened and abraded the epithelium from the lining of the air tubes.

3d. The only treatment that is curative in lung cases is by medicated air inhalations. Inhalation is the only way any remedy can reach the seat of lung disease. It is the only way we can reach or heal any bronchial inflammation, and the only possible way of destroying the germs in the tubes and cells of the lungs, on which every hope of the patient's cure depends.

I first proclaimed the local nature of consumption and its curative treatment by inhalation in a book published by Springer and Townsend, of New York, Dec. 1852. With the enthusiasm of a young doctor sure of his facts, I confidently expected all practicing physicians to hail my discovery as a great boon to the profession and lung sufferers to immediately receive the benefit. But alas! nothing of the kind occurred. Instead of investigating my theory and cases in the interests of medical science, they heaped abuse on me for daring to call consumption a local disease, said it was against the established doctrines, and could not be true without overturning the very foundation on which every physician's practice and reputation were based. The preservation of the fake doctrines then held regarding consumption was though of more importance than the truth of the new theory and the preservation of their practice (although wholly unsuccessful and valueless to their patients) of more urgent interest than any chance of curing the disease.

From 1851 to 1882 the benefits of my treatment of lung cases were confined wholly to my patients. In 1882 Prof. Koch, of Berlin, found in the matter expectorated by consumptives the actual germ that causes the disease. I had declared in 1851 that consumption was produced in every instance by the germs described by Martin, Carmichael and Lanza, or by some similar local cause acting directly on the lung tissues. Prof. Koch proved beyond question or doubt that that theory was the only true one, and that consumption is always a local disease of the lungs.

For eight long years Koch's great discovery was ignored by the profession, and made no more impression on practicing physicians than the casting of a pebble into a pool—a tiny ripple momentarily marks the fall of the stone and then the same unchanged surface returns.

Not one of the medical colleges, medical journals, or organized medical associations let the public know of the far-reaching importance of Koch's discovery of the bacilli tuberculosis. They let physicians go on treating consumption in the old way, keeping their patients in entire ignorance of the fact that such discovery proved their treatment not only wrong, but certain to defeat its cure.

But in 1891, nine years later, a complete revolution took place. The whole history of medicine fails to furnish another example of such complete abandonment of medical doctrines and principles, and such open public acknowledgment of errors of treatment.

This mighty upheaval was not produced by any profound medical coagitations, reports of medical societies, or newly discovered facts, but in the twinkling of an eye by a mere newspaper announcement that Prof. Koch had discovered a wonderful lymph which would kill the germs and cure consumption, and that physicians could buy it and dispense it to their patients at so much an injection. Without any proof of the truth of the newspaper report—before the profession had received or given the lymph any trial, or knew anything of its composition, or of any authenticated case cured by it—they cast their doctrines aside, confessed that they knew their treatment to be worthless, and adopted and proclaimed the Koch lymph nostrum as the one and only remedy for consumption. Leading physicians denounced the doctrine under which they had practiced all their lives, and without shame declared that they had never cured even incipient consumption under it.

The lymph was at last obtained and tried, and in less than a year abandoned by all physicians of character as a dangerous quackery which cured nobody, but endangered the lives of everyone subjected to it. So many deaths were caused by it that many governments interdicted its further use as a crime.

What a lamentable spectacle for a liberal and learned profession to make!—its most dignified members tumbling over each other in a frantic scramble to grasp a shadow, which they ought to have known, by the axioms of their own science, could not have either substance or reality! For it they stripped themselves of every shred of reputation as physicians and stood confessed before the world as having practiced and upheld throughout their whole medical career a treatment for lung diseases which they knew all the time to be worthless to their patients.

Since the explosion of the Koch lymph delusion, a reign of quackery in the treatment of the lungs has swept over the country unequalled by anything since the Dark Ages. Physicians rushing from one worthless nostrum to another in the vain hope of finding something to take the place, before the people, of their publicly discarded and confessedly worthless treatment. Goat's blood, asses' serum, Spanish flies, Edson's asepsin and Murphy's "putting the lungs to sleep"—all serve to show the wild imaginings, false reasoning, and utter ignorance of the nature and requirements of lung diseases everywhere in vogue among general physicians.

Scientific physicians and all lung specialists throughout the world now accept my theory of consumption that it is always a local disease of the lungs, and that its essential cause is a germ of the air feeding upon and destroying the lung tissue. Therefore, we must kill the germs in the lungs and heal the inflamed and ulcerated surfaces caused by their ravages to cure it. To do this, germicidal and healing remedies must be inhaled into the lungs in a gaseous state. No part of the breathing organs below the larnyx can be treated by solid or fluid medicines. The lungs constitute an air cavity, and lung diseases can be cured only by air medicated according to the nature and stage of the disease.

If the inhaled medicines are right, and rightly applied according to the case, all lung maladies are as curable as other serious sickness. This is the only direct treatment and the only scientific one. Legitimate reasoning, analogy, experience and common sense all proclaim it the only one curative of lung diseases.

I have treated over 50,000 cases of lung sickness during the past 47 years, and in thousands of instances have rescued patients by this treatment from the very brink of the grave, who otherwise must have died. In my New York practice I have treated in the past six years more than 10,000, and during last year 2,578 cases, the records of which can be seen at my office. I founded and introduced the local treatment of the lungs by inhalation, invented the first instrument ever used for the cure of these diseases, and I believe I am the first lung specialist who ever treated consumption on scientific principles, or can show any commanding success in its cure.

ENDEAVOR WORK.

Courage to Attempt Service for Christ Derived from the Example of Gideon. Judges 7:1-8, 19:22.

The most conspicuous lesson in this story of Gideon is that of absolute dependence upon God. Clever as was his stratagem, and adapted as it was to strike terror to the hearts of the enemy, the success of the whole enterprise came from God's hands. Special care was taken to so reduce the force under Gideon's command, that it should be impossible for it or its commander to take credit for the victory. The glory belonged to God. We sometimes get a wrong idea from this desire attributed to God to have the glory that belongs to him. It is not a craving for praise and honor that is meant, but an endeavor to convince men of his care for them, and the extent of the power that he is willing to exercise in their behalf. God would have his people trust him and undertake enterprises in dependence upon him. Nothing encourages them to do so, in such degree as the story of what he has done for others. Therefore it is important that the glory which belongs to him should not be given to the instrument he has used. There are enterprises in our day that seem as formidable as this attack on the Midianites. When a gigantic evil is supported and protected by politicians or by the liquor power, it seems idle to attack it. When some neighborhood is given over to Satan so completely that an attempt to carry the Gospel into it seems doomed to failure; or when an individual has so thoroughly and emphatically avowed hostility to religion that to approach him requires courage—in any of these circumstances the example of Gideon is valuable. Even the weakest child of God, or the feeblest company of Christians may go forward with confidence, knowing that the power is not of man but of God.

MOSES' CHOICE.

The Turning Point in the Life of the Great Liberator and Legislator. Exod. 2:11; Heb. 11:24-27.

How glad we would be to have the full story of the early life of Moses. Tradition, which is so often untrustworthy, tells such wonderful stories of him. It represents him as achieving great distinction as a scholar, an officer in the army, and in politics. There can be little doubt, from the facts that are narrated, that he was prominent in the life of that day. Yet he went down to his brethren to see how they were treated. Many men in his situation would have been thankful that they at least were delivered from the misery, and been glad to forget that they had brethren in slavery. We can imagine the struggle there must have been in the mind even of a Moses, before he identified himself with his race. There was so much to give up—how much, we can never conceive—if he would declare himself one of the despised and enslaved Hebrews. Yet even from a worldly standpoint his decision was justified by results. If he had taken the other road and had chosen the palace instead of the brickfields, and even if he had attained the throne, he would have been only one in the long line of Pharaohs without fame, save in the musty records of the country. As it is, his name is known and honored the world over, and he has an immortality of glory that could never have come to him as an Egyptian monarch. But no such consideration, we may be sure, weighed with Moses. He was drawn to his people by sympathy and love, not by hopes of personal renown. It was one of the most courageous and self-sacrificing acts on record. It led to his appointment as the leader of the race, the maker of a nation. Surely, in all his early years God was preparing him for his great mission, and qualifying him for its performance.

WE SHALL KNOW.

WE shall know by intuition,
By the love-light on their face,
(All unchanged by the transition)
By the tender soul embrace—
How the lovely ones we cherished,
Early fallen in the strife;
Oh, the hopes that with them perished,
Seemed the greater part of life.

All the chords we thought were broken,
All the heart ache of the years,
All the love we left unspoken,
All the longing and the tears—
Ease to grieve when we behold them,
When we clasp our own once more,
When our loving arms enfold them,
As we folded them of yore,

We shall know whose song has cheered us,
While the singer was unknown.
We shall know who loved or feared us,
While we walked apart—alone.
We shall know who stooped to raise us,
By the thorn-prints on his brow.
We shall know and 'twill amaze us,
When with Seraphim we bow.

We shall know how mercy found us,
How the Father loved his own.
We shall know the love that crowned us,
"We shall know as we are known."
We shall know why tears were flowing—
Know with joy that passes speech.
All the wonders of that knowing,
All eternity shall teach.

Interlinth, Me. —MRS. MARY B. WINGATE.

INFLUENCE OF THE BIBLE.

Single Passages That Have Transformed Men's Lives and Made History.

AS Geikie wisely observes, the story of separate chapters of the Bible, or even verses, if it could be known, would be a record of surpassing interest. In the experience of everyone some texts shine like stars, as we think of personal trials they brightened, or death-beds of friends they hallowed. Every religious life borrows thus its own secret illumination from year to year, its own galaxies and bright particular stars, which have soothed disappointments, tempered calamities, and filled the mind with a calm and steadfast serenity in the darkest moments. Human compositions catch its color as they embody its spirit and repeat its words. Kings and peasants, philosophers and the illiterate, martyrs and confessors, have built been cheered, inspired and sustained by its wondrous words. It has created the truest poetry and the sublimest art the world has knew, and a literature unique in its power and dignity.

There is hardly a chapter that has not, perhaps, in some of its verses kindled sentiments known to antiquity. There is a transcendent vigor and life in every page. A single verse made Anthony sell all that he had, and conduced, through his doing so, a new era in ecclesiastical history. At a single warning of the epistles, Augustine's hard heart was melted under the fig-tree at Milan. A single chapter of Isaiah made a penitent believer of the profligate Rochester. A word to St. Paul has become the stronghold of Luther.

Cromwell charged, at Dunbar, to the cry, "Arise, O God, and let thine enemies be scattered!" And Anthony drove away his temptation by the same appeal. Thomas Arnold murmured in dying: "If ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons," and "Blessed are they who have not seen, and yet have believed." Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, died using Christ's words, "I go to my Father." Lady Jane Grey wrote in the book of the Lieutenant of the Tower before her execution "The day of death is better than the day of birth." Latimer, at the stake, roused himself by the remembrance that "God is faithful, and will not suffer us to be tempted above what we are able." Luther died crying, "Into thy hands I commit my spirit."

The Psalter alone, by its manifold application and uses in after times, is a vast palimpsest, written over and over again, illuminated, illustrated by every conceivable incident and emotion of men and of nations; battles, wanderings, escapes, death-beds, obsequies of many ages and countries, rise, or may rise, to our view, as we read it. What shall we say of a book so many-tongued, so intensely human, so authoritatively divine? Let critics and theorists stumble at words or phrases; let those things remain to the end "hard to be understood;" whose voice can it be but God's, which rises still and holy over the turmoil of life in a thousand persuasions, commands and promises, to warn us of danger, to guide us right, and to soothe our infinite cares and sorrows? It is a noble passage in which Augustine contrasts antiquity and Scripture, and gives his fealty as a Christian man must: "I read Cicero and in Plato, and such writers I find many things finely said, things that move the spirit; but in none of them do I find these words: 'Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.'" is being formed largely by what he reads. His favorite story paper is an index to his character and an indication of his future. YOUNG PEOPLE'S WEEKLY is the enemy of the trashy, sensational reading that undermines so many young characters. YOUNG PEOPLE'S WEEKLY is read—225,000 copies a week—because young folks cannot resist its attractions. It appeals to their love of fiction, their admiration for what is manly and womanly, their thirst for information, their taste for good pictures. Every line in YOUNG PEOPLE'S WEEKLY is written and edited with the three-fold purpose of interesting, educating and elevating its readers.

Your Boy's Character

Young People's Weekly

is now prepared to issue 225,000 more copies a week. The paper is enlarged, improved, illustrated by frequent colored plates, and by photographic views reproduced by the half-tone process. It contains the best work of skillful writers of fiction, articles of current interest, departments of Christian Endeavor, Y. M. C. A., Epworth League, King's Daughters, Baptist Young People's Union, &c.

In order to make new friends—to double the army of young readers who support it so heartily—YOUNG PEOPLE'S WEEKLY will be sent to any address for four months for only 10 cents, if your order be received before January 1st, 1899. A PREACHER'S DISCOVERY.

Dr. Blosser, the well-known Minister of the Gospel, and medical specialist, is the originator of one of the world's most valuable means of curing disease. It is a fact well known among physicians, as well as by sufferers, that while there are many proposed remedies for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, etc., heretofore there has been known no reliable cure.

Dr. Blosser, in his regular practice, had under his care many patients suffering from these diseases, and after trying all the remedies recommended in the medical books, without satisfactory results, he was driven to the necessity of devising an entirely new mode of treatment. He discovered a combination of medical plants, which when smoked and inhaled, applies a warm medical vapor to every diseased part, destroying the germs of the disease and healing the ulcerated mucous membrane, without injury to the most delicate constitution.

Having demonstrated in his practice the wonderful curative properties of this remedy, he publicly announced his discovery and during the past twenty-three years thousands of helpless sufferers have been cured. He cured one case of 45 years' standing, and others of 15, 20 and 25 years' standing. These facts warrant us in announcing to sufferers the world over, that a positive cure has been found for catarrhal diseases.

50,000 Trial Packages FREE.

We have recently given away 100.000 trial packages of Dr. Blossers's Catarrh Cure to persons afflicted with Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrhal Deafness etc. and now offer 50.000 trial packages, absolutely free. If the trial package does not impress you favorably you will have been at no expense. If you wish to give the remedy a more thorough trial at once than the sample affords, inclose us $1.00 for one month's treatment, by mail, postpaid. If you wish a free package, write a letter or postal card at once to

DR. J. W. BLOSSER & SON, 50 Broad Street, Atlanta, Ga.

Below are Letters from Ministers, Physicians and Other Prominent Men, Recommending this Great Remedy:

Prominent Minister Cured—Bronchitis and Ulcerated Throat—15 Years' Standing.

I had bronchitis and ulcerated sore throat of fifteen years' standing, having spent hundreds of dollars for medicine that did not cure me. Five boxes of your Catarrh Cure, used according to directions, cured me sound and well. I have never known it to fail to cure in a single case of nasal catarrh, if the afflicted did not stop using the remedy as soon as partial relief was obtained. (Rev.) M. G. MILLIGAN.

Choccolocco, Ala., October 26, 1896.

(Note.—Mr. Milligan was cured 12 years ago, and states in a recent letter that he has had no symptoms of the disease since.)

Certificate of an Eminent Physician.

GREENSBORO, N. C., July 31, 1898.

Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son—

Gentlemen: I tender you my sincere thanks and take great pleasure in recommending your remedy to the profession, and to the public, as a safe, pleasant and most reliable remedy for catarrh. I have purchased and sent your Catarrh Remedy to several of my friends, who suffered very much as I did, and they have reported to me as having received the same good results which attended my own case. I have received many letters during the past year from various sections of the United States asking me as to the certificate I gave you being a genuine one. I have replied to each and have advised them to give the remedy a fair trial, and I believed they would be cured. I have used it in my practice whenever a case presented. I have been cured by your remedy and again tender you my sincere thanks. Very respectfully,

R. K. GREGORY, M. D.

Deafness Cured.

GREEN FOREST, Ark., Sept. 27, 1897.

Dear Dr. Blosser: My little boy, now twelve years old, suffered severely for nine years with nasal catarrh, which also involved his hearing to such an extent that we had serious apprehensions of its entire loss. But we now bless the day when we first saw your Catarrh Cure advertised in the Arkansas Methodist, for our boy has used four boxes of it and we now rejoice in the happy results of his hearing being perfectly restored and the nasal trouble, of so many years continuance, which was so severe that the bridge of his nose was eaten through, has almost wholly disappeared, so that we can only see slight symptoms of it when he has contracted a severe cold. I heartily commend your remedy to others. Yours truly,

(Rev.) D. C. ROSS.

Catarrh Cured.

EAST RAYMOND, Me., April 25, 1897.

Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, Atlanta, Ga.—

Dear Sirs: I received the packages of Catarrh Cure all right. It proved to be much more than you advertised. It cured my wife of a severe case of catarrh. She had tried various remedies but received no benefit until she tried yours. I would advise any sufferer to give your remedy a fair trial. I have recommended it to many of my friends who are troubled in the same way. I remain yours very truly,

HOWARD WITHAM.

Evangelist Cured 15 Years Ago—No Return.

Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, Atlanta, Ga.—

Gentlemen: I was a sufferer from nasal catarrh for twelve years, and it developed into the worst form, impairing my eyesight and injuring my hearing. It also affected my bronchial tubes seriously. My nervous system gave way, unfitting me for the duties of life. By the constant use of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure I was permanently cured in the year 1881, making fifteen years in which I have never had a return of the disease, nor have I felt the the effects of it. I most heartily recommend to all sufferers Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure, as one that cannot be excelled. Fraternally,

(Rev.) J. CAL. LITTRELL, Evangelist.

Warrensburg, Mo., Oct. 25, 1896.

A Minister of the Gospel Cured of Asthma.

THOMASTON, Ga., Sept. 21, 1897.

Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, Atlanta, Ga.—

I have used five boxes of your Catarrh Cure since last April, when I was suffering almost constantly from asthma. I had paroxysms every night, so that I could neither sleep nor lie down even while taking medicine from our home doctor. Four days after smoking your medicine, I began to improve so much that I could lie flat on my back and sleep as well as anybody. I think I am cured of asthma. I thought before I began using your medicine, that my preaching was over, but I now have three regular appointments which I fill monthly. My head has troubled me very little from catarrh; have had less pains in my head than for years. I must speak in highest terms of your medicine. I am recommending it everywhere I go. Yours truly, (Rev.) JNO. W. ATWATER.

Catarrh Cured Permanently.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug 2

Dr. J. W. Blosser, City—

Dear Sir: In reply to your favor asking as to the permanency of the cure of catarrh effected by your remedy on myself years ago, I will state that there has been no return of the disease, and I am now absolutely free from any affection of the kind. Should I ever have a return of it, I know of nothing that I would sort to with so much confidence as Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure. Yours truly,

L. A. HAWES, 395 Marietta St.

A Minister Cured.

PARIS, Tex., Sept 2

Dr. J. W. Blosser, Atlanta, Ga.—

Dear Sir and Brother: In 1894 I contracted a severe cold which came near developing into pneumonia. We broke it up, but it left me with nasal catarrh. I continued for nearly two years, growing worse all the time, until it affected my whole system and was really distressing. I then ordered a box of your Catarrh Cure and before it had all been used I felt well, but I continued using it at intervals, until I was used. I have had no further trouble with the disease. I am grateful to God and obliged to you for remedy, and the cure it wrought. I have been more than a year. If my testimonial will help other poor sufferer from this loathsome disease cured. I will rejoice. Your brother in Christ,

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Correct answers to our latest Scripture puzzle have been received from Mrs. H. P Elliott, Charles R. Frailey and several other readers.

C. O. M., Trenton, N. J. What is the Didache to which you refer in a recent answer to a correspondent?

It is an ancient manuscript, discovered in 1883 among a quantity of other writings by Philoletheos Bryennios. They were found at Constantinople, whither they had been taken from Jerusalem. The Didache purports to be a memorandum of the teaching of the Apostles. The author apparently designed it as a manual for pastors and teachers. It is written in Hellenistic Greek, like the New Testament. Scholars are not sure about the date. Many believe it was written about fifty years after the Crucifixion, but others think it could not have been written so early, and would make the date about A.D. 200. It is generally believed to be genuine and to correctly report the teaching of at least some of the Apostles. It is a small work of only 2190 words. A translation of it is published by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, Fifth Avenue, New York.

J. R., Barnesville, Ga. Are "loving cups" ever used in the communion service?

In early times, shortly after Christianity was introduced into Europe, the monks, unable to wholly abolish the "wassail bowl," substituted the "loving cup" or "grace cup," and its use thereafter assumed a semi-religious character. There is no evidence, however, that loving cups were ever used in the observance of the sacramental feast. The appellation "cup of the Lord" or "cup of blessing," which was given to the sacramental cup, distinguished it from all others. On the other hand, the loving cup was a pledge of human friendship and nothing more.

R. D. K., Summerville, Tenn. Was Columbus really buried in Havana?

There is conflicting evidence on the subject. His family were too poor to carry out the wish expressed in his last testament for burial in "La Espanola" (San Domingo), and he was first interred in Spain. In 1541, the Spanish Government ordered his remains transferred to San Domingo, where they were buried, tradition says, on the right of the altar in the Cathedral, then newly erected. As records were not then kept, entry to this effect was not made until 1676, 135 years after, by which time Diego, Columbus' son and his grandson, Luis, also had entombment there. When Spain ceded San Domingo to France in 1795, the contents of the vault on the right of the altar were transferred to Havana. Workmen discovered another vault on the right, and near the altar in 1877, and the inscriptions on the leaden casket and other conclusive evidence convinced many people, among them distinguished authorities in Europe and America, that the discoverer still rests, according to his last wish, in "La Espanola," and, therefore, the remains recently removed by Spain from the Cathedral in Havana may be those of Diego, and not those of Columbus.

M. R., Lodgepole, Neb. How are members of the Supreme Court of the United States chosen? The Justices of the Supreme Court are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. All the Judges of the inferior United States Courts are chosen in the same way.

E. E. M., St. Andrews, Nova Scotia. What is the "insect cow"?

It is a light green bug scientifically known as aphis, and much detested by gardeners for its destructiveness to vegetation. It can almost always be found clustering along the tender shoots of roses. From two tubes on the back of the insect, it secrets a fluid known as honey-dew, of which ants are very fond, and which they have a way of drawing from the aphis, so that the latter come to be called their "cow." Observers have seen a gang of garden ants go up a stem and conduct a "herd of cows" to the ant-hills, where they bring food to them and keep them for "milking" purposes.

G. H. G., Fort Worth, Tex. 1. What countries during recent years have had largest commercial dealings with China? 2. What of China's manufacturing facilities? 3. Her mineral resources?

1. Britain, America, Germany, Japan and Russia, in order named, with Britain far in advance of the rest. 2. The methods are primitive. Owing to density of population, cheapness of living, and abundance of raw materials, such as cotton, silk, iron, etc., at hand, China should, and when fully opened to Western science and progress, will rank among the greatest manufacturing countries of the world. At present she stands very low in the scale; even in tea-making, Ceylon's methods are better, and in handling silk, Japan is her superior. 3. Her mineral resources are vast and varied, and because the art of mining is in a backward state, these resources are practically untouched.

Margaret S., Ramona, Cal. 1. I have been reading here and there of "the birth of a new world" in the heavens, about which astronomers are much exercised. At the same time it is spoken of as being in existence a long time ago. What is this new world? 2. How, since it is really so old, is it spoken of as "new"?

1. We suppose you refer to the star-like object which astronomers have been recently discussing, and which they tell us is forming in the nebula in Andromeda. 2. This phenomenon, observed in 1898, must have occurred long ago, for although light travels at the wonderful velocity of 186,330 miles a second, Andromeda is at such immense distance from us that billions and billions of miles of space had to be traversed before the light of the new sun could reach our planet. Miss Proctor says of the new star and the conflagration which must have preceded it: "It all happened years ago, and since the star first blazed forth on the scene it may have rivalled Sirius in brilliancy eventually fading away until its dim light seemed but a ghost of its former self." In 1885, astronomers saw a somewhat similar appearance in Andromeda, and as variability in lustre is a peculiarity of some stars, astronomers are connecting the phenomenon of 1885 with that of the present time and arguing that the new star is the old one, with recovered brilliancy.

I. R. E., Morristown, O. Did we conquer in the recent war because God helped us, or because we were better equipped than Spain in men and ships and artillery? If as I claim, God takes care of the right, how was it he left Poland to be partitioned?

There is no doubt of our superior equipment. That is sufficient to explain our victory. At the same time, there is no truth in Napoleon's sneer that "God is always on the side of the heaviest battalions." History gives many instances of the weaker party winning battles. God has in his power forces, such as storms, diseases, etc., which can be used to help the weaker party, as when the Spanish Armada, equipped to invade England in the time of Elizabeth, was dispersed and weakened by a storm. Or, as in the case of our own Revolution, the foe may have to withdraw its forces to meet another enemy. God does rule the world still, but he rules it by methods which to an unbeliever appear like natural and material forces. If you will read the history of Poland previous to its partition, you will see that there were causes at work which inevitably led to its downfall.

O. K., Harrow, Ont. If a new spiritual body is given at the last day, should we not speak of it as a creation, not as resurrection?

The objection does not seem valid. Must there not be a new body in the case of many whose bodies have crumbled to dust, or have been burned in a fire, or cast into the sea and devoured by fishes? If a new body in any cases, may it not be so in all? But really the question is not important. God will give us a body as it pleases him. "It doth not appear what we shall be, but we know that when he appeareth we shall be like him" (1. John 3: 2).

E. C. M., Osterdock, Ia. What is the meaning of Paul's instruction as to marriage in 1. Cor. 7: 36? Does it not tend to immorality?

Paul had been explaining that in those times of persecution, unrest and insecurity, it was better not to marry. Single persons could do the cause of Christ more service than persons who were married and had the care of children. Still, he issued no command, nor did he wish his advice to be carried to an extreme. If the father of a girl was troubled about her, and if her suitor was eligible, it might be better to let them marry. There was no sin in it. The apostle would have been horror-stricken if he had thought it possible that his words could be misconstrued in the way you mention.

W. H. G., Lowell, Mass. Has any trace been discovered of the lost ten tribes of Israel?

You have probably heard the claims of certain teachers that the Anglo-Saxons are the representatives of them. Many people believe it, but to us the evidence does not appear conclusive. They were probably absorbed in the populations among whom they went. They had become very careless before their deportation, and it is probable that in their exile they inter-married with the people among whom they lived, and their identity was lost. It is believed that when the Jews returned in the time of Ezra, some members of the northern kingdom returned with them or soon afterwards.

J. P., Delaware, O. 1. We have no knowledge of it. 2. Margaret Sangster wrote the poem you refer to. The first verse begins:

It isn't the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone.

Arthur B., Albany, N. Y. What was the annual death rate during the late Spanish-American war, from all causes?

This question has been answered by the official reports of the War Department, which show that, up to August 31, the total number of deaths in the army of 265,000 men was 3,404, or a little less than one per cent.

F. A. H., Burdett, Colo. 1. When did the present years' course of International S. S. Lessons begin? 2. When was the holiday known as Labor Day established?

1. The present course began with the first Sunday in 1894. The first committee to select the lessons was appointed in 1872. Subsequently in 1878, 1884, 1890 and 1896, committees were appointed for the same purpose. 2. It was observed by a few States in 1887. In 1895, Congress made it a legal holiday in the District of Columbia, thus giving it a national status.

E. W. ——, Long Island, N. Y. Will the prayers of a person who is not a Christian be answered?

If his prayers are for the converting grace, for pardon and salvation, they will be if they are sincere. That is the first thing. We do not see how a person who rejects God's offer of salvation can expect that his prayers will be heard. But God is infinitely more merciful than we realize, and he may answer the prayers of such a person.

Subscriber, ——, New Jersey. 1. The Lord has been calling me for months to go as a missionary. What must I do first, as I am a poor young man without education? 2. Has a person in the Salvation Army a chance to save as many souls as a preacher?

1. The first thing would appear to be to get some education. You could not do much, if any, good in a heathen land without it. Perhaps you are mistaken in thinking the Lord has called you. It is not his way to call men to any work for which they are unable to perform it. If you offer your service to the Missionary Board of the denomination with which you are connected, and they accept you, they will probably assist you in getting an education. 2. The opportunities of preachers vary. Some address audiences of thousands, others seldom speak to more than a hundred. In the Salvation Army there are abundant opportunities, but probably first chiefly by personal work, rather than by preaching.

D. E., of Bucksport, Me., can obtain a copy of the poem "Taxation of America," by writing to Alden Chase, Bryant Pond, Me.

Friend, Pearl River, La. Certainly not. The United States gets the value of every postage stamp that is purchased, no matter where or when the letter is mailed, unless the stamp is used again, which is illegal.

Subscriber, California. "Red tape" means obnoxious official formality involving delays. It is so called because lawyers and government officials tie their papers together with red tape. The phrase is said to have been introduced by Charles Dickens.

Leroy E., Hamilton, O. We are astonished that you should ask such a question as to juggling and dancing. The test of a Christian's amusements should be: "Are they liable to lead to evil associations and actions, or to excite evil thoughts? Are they a hindrance to spiritual progress?" Put these questions to your own heart.

Subscriber, Orange City, Ia. 1. Through your book-dealer. 2. The United States will determine the amount to be paid by Spain as indemnity, and will hold Spain liable for the payment thereof, probably holding one of her colonies as security until it is paid. 3. It is a member's duty in such a case to report his discovery in a proper spirit, but not with a mere desire to find fault, to the committee or board within whose province such a matter lies. Failing any action by such a committee, or if the matter should be of sufficient importance, he should bring it to the attention of the trustees or other governing body of the church. It may be necessary to bring it before the pastor. It would not be acting in a Christian spirit to publish the fact among the members. Any real fault, reported as above suggested, would be quickly remedied. For the sake of harmony, one can well afford to overlook mere trifles, especially where they do not affect the church as a Christian organization.

THE YOUNGEST QUEEN IN THE WORLD.

Amsterdam's Joy Over the Coronation of Wilhelmina—The Splendid Pageant in the Crowded Streets.

IN a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, some account was given of the ceremonial at the coronation of Queen Wilhelmina, the young ruler of the Netherlands. By later mails I have received a number of photographs of the event, taken specially by Horace Markley, who visited the Dutch capital for the sole purpose of attending the coronation. These views represent what were, beyond doubt, among the most picturesque and attractive features of the great national spectacular festival which has been attracting attention on both sides of the Atlantic.

On her state entry into Amsterdam, Queen Wilhelmina was welcomed in the most enthusiastic manner by the burghers, multitudes of whom crowded the gayly decorated streets. The whole city was resplendent in bunting and green-and-gold, and even the church, in which the young monarch was formally invested with the royal rights and took the oath of fidelity, was a brilliant mass of many-colored drapery. Public dwellings, private houses, stores, and even the fishing-boats in the docks were gay with tri-color flags, banners and Chinese lanterns.

After the formal ceremony in the church, and the proclamation of the new ruler's accession, made by the Senior King-at-Arms, the real festivities in the ancient city began. In the evening Amsterdam was prettily illuminated, and the Queen and Queen Dowager drove around the principal streets to view the scene. There were several very brilliant processions, which escorted the two Queens through the streets, beneath decorated triumphal arches, across bridges and over canals. They inspected the Rembrandt Exhibition, the National Gallery of Art, the Palace of Industry, and the special collection of antiquities and memorials of past ages, which was further illustrated by a grand costume-figure parade of historical interest. At the concert hall, the Queens heard a cantata, specially composed for the occasion—the music by Bernhard Peers, the words by one of the most esteemed surviving Dutch literary veterans, the Rev. Dr. Nicholas Beets, now over eighty years of age.

After the celebration, the two Queens left Amsterdam for the Hague by special train on the Friday, and were received with the same ceremonial as that observed on their state entry into Amsterdam. The city was profusely decorated, and the royal party were cheered by assembled crowds. They attended a special thanksgiving in the great church of St. Jacob, where a sermon was preached by the Court Chaplain, Dr. Van der Flier. Handel's Hallelujah Chorus brought the service to a close. Before the party left, a pretty incident took place. Four little orphans, boys and girls, were led up to the tribune where the two Queens were seated. They carried orange-decked baskets, and as the two Queens left the church, retired backwards down the aisle, strewing white roses in their path. On Saturday Queen Wilhelmina was serenaded by school children. A battle of flowers was held by the Cyclists' Corps, when some 18,000 cyclists from all parts of the kingdom passed in review. Afterward the Queens drove to Scheveningen, and fisherfolk in Sunday attire, with fisherwomen in the costume of forty years ago, looking very picturesque, lined the route.

THE TRIUMPHAL ARCH OVER WILHELMSTRAAT.

Wilhelmina Helena Pauline Maria, the young ruler of the people of Holland, has been carefully educated, her training being supervised by her devout and conscientious mother. She is amiable in manner, agreeable in person, and intensely devoted to her country. On the day upon which she attained her majority, she issued a proclamation to the people of Holland in which she said:

On this day, so important to you and to me, I desire before all else to say a word of warm gratitude. From my tenderest years you have surrounded me with your love. From all parts of the kingdom, from all classes of society, young and old, I have always received striking proofs of attachment. I am ready to accept the splendid though weighty task whereto I have been called, and I feel myself supported by your fidelity. Receive my thanks. My experience hitherto has left ineffaceable impressions, and is an earnest of the future. My dearly loved mother, to whom I am immensely indebted, set me an example by her noble and exalted conception of the duties which henceforth devolve upon me. The aim of my life will be to follow her example. True to the Constitution, I desire to strengthen the respect for the name and flag of the Netherlands. As sovereign of possessions and colonies east and west, I desire to observe justice and to contribute, so far as in me lies, to the increasing intellectual and material welfare of my whole people. Trusting in God and with a prayer that he will give strength, I accept the government.

Seldom has a royal reign begun so auspiciously than that of the young Queen, whose simple faith in God and confidence in the wisdom of her mother's pious example, are so eloquently set forth in this short address. Even Americans, who have little in common with monarchial institutions, will wish her a reign of peace and prosperity, and that she may always retain the love and confidence of the worthy people of Holland. They are not a demonstrative race, but when they gathered around her in the brilliant coronation pageant (shown in our first page illustrations), their pent-up loyalty and enthusiasm found expression in such a demonstration as has rarely been witnessed in the staid old capital of Holland.

TOWARD SUNRISE.

"The world is going onward toward six o'clock in the morning, instead of six o'clock at night."—From a recent sermon by Dr. Talmage.

ALL wondrous is the vision our eyes behold to-day,
'Tis glorious to be living to tread the King's highway;
The pulsing air is vibrant with inspiration rife,
We feel the holy impulse, the more abundant life.

The Lord of life has risen, his glory fills the earth,
The world's bright Easter morning now shows his glory forth.

With light the heavens are flooded, new worlds of thought are found,
Wide-open doors of knowledge o'er all the earth abound.
Behold the Orient glowing, the King of Day comes forth,
The sunrise gold is flooding the newly wakened earth;
It shines upon broad prairies, gilds lofty mountain height,
The Orient is radiant, Pacific shores are bright.

The nations are awaking, the Spirit is abroad,
O'er all dark places brooding shines the sweet light of God.
Oh, wondrous the awaking, where night has lingered long,
Isles of the sea are listening to catch the matin song.
Nearing the century's summits, we mount from height to height,
Facing the open vision, the glorious heaven'y light.

We hail with joy the coming, we children of the King,
We go to meet the morning, our hearts glad anthems sing:
We see the palm trees waving along the King's highway,
We join in glad hosannas, we hail the glorious day.
Onward, still onward pressing, with ever upward trend,
Till dawns the morn of glory, whose day shall have no end.

Berlin, Mass. —PHEBE A. HOLDER.

A Statesman's Career Ended.

THOMAS FRANCIS BAYARD, whose name has long been a synonym for high statesmanship and pure politics, passed away at the home of his daughter at Dedham, Mass., on September 28. He was born in Wilmington, Del., in 1828, being descended from ancestors many of whom were prominent in both State and National affairs. He adopted the law as a profession, but early in his career took an active part in politics. On March 4, 1869, he was elected to the United States Senate, and soon rose to be the leader of his party. While in Congress, he introduced many important reform measures, and was the uncompromising opponent of impure legislation. In 1872 he was prominently mentioned as a candidate for the Presidency, and in the National Democratic Convention of that year, and also those of 1876, 1880 and 1884 his name was among those presented for the nomination. He was chosen as Secretary of State by President Cleveland, and in that capacity dealt with many difficult national problems in a manner that demonstrated his broad and liberal statesmanship. More recently he served as Ambassador to Great Britain, and while in that country, he won public esteem by the policy of amity which he fostered and which resulted in the establishment of more cordial relations between the two nations, although the treaty of arbitration, which he strongly favored, was rejected by the United States Senate. He returned to the United States in May, 1897, bringing with him the "log of the Mayflower," which had been gracefully presented by its English possessors to the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. Bayard's health broke down in August last, when arterial sclerosis set in. Death came to him like a peaceful sleep. He was an upright Christian gentleman, and had the love of many and the esteem of all who knew him either in public or private life.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

THE GRANDMOTHERS.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: II. Tim. 1:5, ... The unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois.

IN this pastoral letter which Paul, the old minister, is writing to Timothy, the young minister, the family record is brought out. Paul practically says: "Timothy, what a good grandmother you had! You ought to be better than most folks, because not only was your mother good, but your grandmother was good also. Two preceding generations of piety ought to give you a mighty push in the right direction." The fact was that Timothy needed encouragement. He was in poor health, having a weak stomach, and was a dyspeptic, and Paul prescribed for him a tonic, "a little wine for thy stomach's sake"—not much wine; but a little wine, and only as a medicine. And if the wine then had been as much adulterated with logwood and strychnine as our modern wines, he would not have prescribed any.

But Timothy, not strong physically, is encouraged spiritually by the recital of grandmotherly excellence. Paul hinting to him, as I hint this day to you, that God sometimes gathers up as in a reservoir, away back of the active generations of to-day, a godly influence, and then in response to prayer lets down the power upon children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The world is woefully in want of a table of statistics in regard to what is the protractedness and immensity of influence of one good woman in the church and world. We have accounts of how much evil has been wrought by a woman who lived nearly a hundred years ago, and of how many criminals her descendants furnished for the penitentiary and the gallows, and how many hundreds of thousands of dollars they cost our country in their arraignment and prison support, as well as in the property they burglarized and destroyed. But will not some one come out with brain comprehensive enough, and heart warm enough, and pen keen enough to give us the facts in regard to some good woman of a hundred years ago, and let us know how many Christian men and women and reformers and useful people have been found among her descendants, and how many asylums and colleges and churches they built, and how many millions of dollars they contributed for humanitarian and Christian purposes?

The good women whose tombstones were planted in the eighteenth century are more alive for good in the nineteenth century than they were before, as the good women of this nineteenth century will be more alive for good in the twentieth century than now. Mark you, I have no idea that the grandmothers were any better than their grand-daughters. You cannot get very old people to talk much about how things were when they were boys and girls. They have a reticence and a non-committalism which makes me think they feel themselves to be the custodians of the reputation of their early comrades. While our dear old folks are rehearsing the follies of the present, if we put them on the witness-stand and cross-examine them as to how things were seventy years ago the silence becomes oppressive.

Three hundred [illegible] Volney, visited this country in 1795-6 and he says of women's dress in those years: "If a premium was offered for a fashion most destructive to health, none could be devised more efficacious for these ends than that in use among these people." [illegible] our lobster salad at midnight. Everybody talks about the corruption of modern society and how woman's touch goes down under it, but it was worse a hundred years ago, for the chaplain of a Connecticut regiment in our Revolutionary War wrote in 1782 in his "Book of American Women," saying: "They are tall and well proportioned, their features are generally regular, their complexions are generally fair and without color. At twenty years of age the women have no longer the freshness of youth. At thirty or forty they are decrepit." In 1812 a foreign consul wrote a book entitled, "A Sketch of the United States at the Commencement of the Present Century," and he says of the women of those times: "At the age of thirty all their charms have disappeared." One glance at the portraits of the women a hundred years ago and their style of dress makes us wonder how they ever got their breath. All this makes me think that the express rail train is no more an improvement on the old canal boat, or the telegraph no more an improvement on the old-time saddle-bags, than the women of our day are an improvement on the women of the last century.

But still, notwithstanding that those times were so much worse than ours, there was a glorious race of godly women, seventy and a hundred years ago, who held the world back from sin and lifted it toward virtue, and without their exalted and sanctified influence before this the last good influence would have perished from the earth. Indeed, all over this land there are seated to-day—not so much in churches, for many of them are too feeble to come—a great many aged grandmothers. They sometimes feel that the world has gone past them, and they have an idea that they are of little account. Their head sometimes gets aching from the racket of the grandchildren down-stairs or in the next room. They steady themselves by the banisters as they go up and down. When they get a cold it hangs on them longer than it used to. They cannot bear to have the grandchildren punished even when they deserve it, and have so relaxed their ideas of family discipline that they would spoil all the youngsters of the household by too great leniency. These old folks are the resort when great troubles come, and there is a calming and soothing power in the touch of an aged hand that is almost supernatural. They feel they are almost through with the journey of life and read the old Book more than they used to, hardly knowing which most they enjoy, the Old Testament or the New, and often stop and dwell tearfully over the family record half-way between. We hail them to-day, whether in the house of God or at the homestead. Blessed is that household that has in it a grandmother Lois. Where she is, angels are hovering round and God is in the room. May her last days be like those lovely autumnal days that we call Indian Summer!

Is it not time that you and I do two things—swing open a picture-gallery of the wrinkled faces and stooped shoulders of the past, and call down from their heavenly thrones the godly grandmothers, to give them our thanks, and then to persuade the mothers of to-day that they are living for all time, and that against the sides of every cradle in which a child is rocked beat the two eternities?

Here we have an untried, undiscussed, and unexplored subject. You often hear about your influence upon your own children; I am not talking about that. What about your influence upon the twentieth century, upon the thirtieth century, upon the fortieth century, upon the year two thousand, upon the year four thousand, if the world lasts so long? The world stood four thousand years before Christ came; it is not unreasonable to suppose that it may stand four thousand years after his arrival. Four thousand years the world swung off in sin, four thousand years it may be swinging back into righteousness. By the ordinary rate of multiplication of the world's population in a century, your descendants will be over three hundred, and by two centuries over fifty thousand, and upon every one of them you, the mother of to-day, will have an influence for good or evil. And if in four centuries your descendants shall have with their names filled a scroll of hundreds of thousands, will some angel from heaven, to whom is given the capacity to calculate the number of the stars of heaven and the sands of the seashore, step down and tell us how many descendants you will have in the four thousandth year of the world's possible continuance? Do not let the grandmothers any longer think that they are retired, and sit clear back out of sight from the world, feeling that they have no relation to it. The mothers of the last century are to-day in the person of their descendants, in the Senates, the Parliaments, the palaces, the pulpits, the banking-houses, the professional chairs, the prisons, the almshouses, the company of midnight brigands, the cellars, the ditches of this century. You have been thinking about the importance of having the right influence upon one nursery. You have been thinking of the importance of getting those two little feet on the right path. You have been thinking of your child's destiny for the next eighty years, if it should pass on to be an octogenarian. That is well, but my subject sweeps a thousand years, a million years, a quadrillion of years. I cannot stop at one cradle, I am looking at the cradles that reach all around the world and across all time. I am not talking of mother Eunice, I am talking of grandmother Lois.

The only way to tell the force of a current is to sail up stream; or the force of an ocean wave, by running the ship against it. Running along with it we cannot appreciate the force. In estimating maternal influence we generally run along with it down the stream of time, and so we don't understand the full force. Let us come up to it from the eternity side, after it has been working on for centuries, and see all the good it has done and all the evil it has accomplished multiplied in magnificent or appalling compound interest. The difference between that mother's influence on her children now and the influence when it has been multiplied in hundreds of thousands of lives, is the difference between the Mississippi River away up at the top of the continent starting from the little lake Itasca, seven miles long and one wide, and its mouth at the Gulf of Mexico, where navies might ride. Between the birth of that river and its burial in the sea the Missouri pours in, and the Ohio pours in, and the Arkansas pours in, and the Red and White and the Yazoo Rivers pour in, and all the States and territories between the Alleghany and Rocky Mountains make contribution. Now, in order to test the power of a mother's influence, we need to come in off the ocean of eternity and sail up toward the one cradle, and we will find ten thousand tributaries of influence pouring in and pouring down. But it is after all one great river of power rolling on and rolling for ever. Who can fathom it? Who can bridge it? Who can stop it?

Will not mothers intensify their prayers? Had they not better elevate their example? Had they not better be rousing themselves with the consideration that by their faithfulness or neglect they are starting an influence which will be stupendous after the last mountain of earth is flat, and the last sea has dried up, and the last flake of the ashes of a consumed world shall have been blown away, and all the telescopes of other worlds directed to the track around which our world once swung shall discover not so much as a cinder of the burned-down and swept-off planet. In Ceylon there is a granite column thirty-six square feet in size, which is thought by the natives to decide the world's continuance. An angel with robe spun from zephyrs is once a century to descend and sweep the hem of that robe across the granite, and when by that attrition the column is worn away they say time will end. But by that process that granite column would be worn out of existence before mother's influence will begin to give way.

If a mother tell a child he is not good some bugaboo will come and catch him, the fear excited may make the child a coward, and the fact that he finds that there is no bugaboo may make him a liar, and the echo of that false alarm may be heard after fifteen generations have been born and have expired. If a mother promises a child a reward for good behavior, and after the good behavior forgets to give the reward, the cheat may crop out in some faithlessness half a thousand years further on. If a mother cultivate a child's vanity and eulogize his curls and extol the night-black or sky-blue or nut-brown of the child's eyes and call out in his presence the admiration of spectators, pride and arrogance may be prolonged after half a dozen family records have been obliterated. If a mother express doubt about some statement of the Holy Bible in a child's presence, long after the gates of this historical era have closed and the gates of another era have opened the result may be seen in a champion blasphemer. But, on the other hand, if a mother walking with a child see a suffering one by the wayside and says, "Give child, give that ten-cent piece to the lame boy," the result may be seen on the other side of the following century in some George Muller building a whole village of orphanages. If a mother sit almost every evening by the trundle-bed of child and teach it lessons of a Saviour's love and a Saviour's example, of the importance of truth and the horror of a lie, and the virtues of industry and kindness and sympathy and self-sacrifice, long after the mother has gone and the child has gone and the lettering on both the tombstones shall have been washed out by the storms of innumerable winters, there may be standing, as a result of those trundle-bed lessons, flaming evangels, world-moving reformers, seraphic Summerfields, weeping Paysons, thundering Whitefields, emancipating Washingtons.

Good or bad influence may skip over a generation or two generations, but it will be sure to land in the third or fourth generation, just as the Ten Commandments in speaking of the visitation of God on families, says nothing about the second generation, but entirely skips the second, and speaks of the third and fourth generation: "Visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the third and fourth generation of them that hate me." Parental influence, right and wrong, may jump over a generation, but it will come down further on as sure as you sit there and I stand here. This explains what we often see—some man or woman distinguished for benevolence when the father and mother were distinguished for penuriousness, or you see some young man or woman with a bad father and a hard mother come out gloriously for Christ, and make the Church sob and shout and sing under their exhortations. We stand in corners of the vestry and whisper over the matter, and say, "How is this, such grace, piety in sons and daughters of such parental worldliness and sin?" I will explain it to you if you will fetch me the old family Bible containing the full record. Let some septuagenarian look with me clear upon the page of births and marriages, and tell me who that woman was with the old fashioned name of Jemima or Betsy or Mehitabel. Ah, there she is, the old grandmother, or great-grandmother, who had enough religion to saturate a century.

There she is, the dear old soul, Grandmother Lois. In beautiful Greenwood Cemetery there is the resting place of George W. Bethune, once a minister of Brooklyn Heights, his name never spoken among intelligent Americans without suggesting two things—eloquence and evangelism. In the same tomb sleeps his grandmother, Isabella Graham, who was the chief inspiration of his ministry. You are not surprised at the poetry and pathos and pulpit power of the grandson when you read of the faith and devotion of his wonderful ancestress. When you read this letter, in which she poured out her widowed soul in longings for a son's salvation, you will not wonder that succeeding generations have been blessed:

NEW YORK, May 20, 1791.

This day my only son left me in bitter wringings of heart; he is again launched on the ocean—God's ocean. The Lord saved him from shipwreck, brought him to my home, and allowed me once more to indulge my affections over him. He has been with me but a short time, and ill have I improved it. he is gone from my sight, and my heart bursts with tumultuous grief. Lord, have mercy on the widow's son, "the only son of his mother."

I ask nothing in all this world for him; I repeat my petition, Save his soul alive, give him salvation from sin. It is not the danger of the seas that distresses me; it is not the hardships he must undergo; it is not the dread of never seeing him more in this world; it is because I cannot discern the fulfilment of the promise in him. I cannot discern the new birth nor its fruit but every sympton of captivity to Satan, the world, and self-will. This, this is what distresses me; and in connection with this his being shut out from ordinances at a distance from Christians; shut up with those who forget God, profane his name, and break his Sabbaths; men who often live and die like beasts, t are accountable creatures, who must an-er for every moment of time and every ord, thought and action. O Lord, many nders hast thou shown me; thy ways of ding with me and mine have not been mmon ones; add this wonder to the rest.

ll, convert, regenerate and establish a sailor

With such a grandmother, would you

HELP FOR PATRIOTS.

How the League for Social Service Proposes to Assist in Bettering Society.

MANY of our readers secured supplies of the pamphlets which, as announced in these columns at the beginning of the year, were being issued by the Evangelical Alliance as aids to better government. Dr. Josiah Strong, who was then Secretary of the Alliance was the prime mover in the enterprise, and he soon found that the effort was so helpful and so thoroughly appreciated, that it deserved undivided attention. He therefore resigned his office and has organized a new Society which has taken the name of the League for Social Service. The object of the League is "to educate public opinion and the popular conscience, from the enlightening and quickening of which, must come every needed reform, whether moral, political, industrial, or social, and to afford a medium through which an aroused public sentiment can be brought to bear quickly and effectively on legislation." In a word it aims to aid the Christian to become a better citizen by supplying him with information and to show him how to make his influence felt.

The Bible doctrine that righteousness exalts a nation while sin is a reproach to any people, lies at the base of the League's work. It is safe to assume that in every community there are men desirous of good government, preferring clean living and anxious to suppress vice and public iniquity. Yet these men are sometimes hopeless of reform, or do not know the extent of the power they have at their disposal. The League, therefore, besides trying to arouse the conscience of the citizen, will endeavor to show him how he can influence his fellow-citizens and how he can aid in purifying the moral atmosphere of his city. Every patriotic Christian citizen must be in sympathy with such an effort and give a hearty godspeed to the League that is making it.

Three methods have been adopted by the League to effect this object. The first is the issue of such pamphlets as have been already described. They are so small that they may be put in an ordinary business envelope, and they are written in a terse, vigorous, pointed style, which commands attention. They deal with the ordinary duties of the citizen. The following titles will show the character of the series: No. 1. The New Patriotism, by Rev. Josiah Strong, D.D.; No. 2. The Co-Operative City, by Prof. John R. Commons, Ph.D.; No. 3. Good Citizenship—What It Is, by Bishop F. D. Huntington, LL.D.; No. 4. The Church and Present Problems of Citizenship, by Rev. Washington Gladden, LL.D.; No. 5. The Duty of a Public Spirit, by Pres. E. Benj. Andrews, LL.D.; No. 6. A Citizen's Manual, by L. T. Chamberlain; No. 7. Duties of American Citizenship, by Hon. S. B Capen; No. 8. The Value of a Vote, by Dean George Hodges, D.D.; No. 9. The Ruler of America, by Rev. Edward Everett Hale, D.D. The pamphlets, of which these are the first of a series which will include abstracts of the laws of the different States and other useful information, are issued post-paid at 35 cents the hundred.

As the pamphlets are of no political party nor of any religious denomination, nor are designed to promote the interests of any class, but simply to help citizens to influence others in the cause of good morals and pure government, they are invaluable in States where Christian men are standing together against impurity and corruption. They will be translated into various languages, so as to be useful to immigrants who have not yet learned English.

Another method adopted by the League is a bureau of information which will indicate the latest sources of information regarding present-day problems, whether religious, moral, philanthropic, industrial, social, or civic. Thus enabling the citizen who has to argue in support of his principles, to gain access to the facts which will fortify him against sophists. The third method is a lecture bureau which will arrange lecture courses and secure lectures on social problems.

Annual membership, which is one dollar, will carry with it the receipt of one copy of every leaflet issued during the year of membership and the use of the information bureau.

Dr. Strong is President of the League; Dr. William H. Tolman, Secretary, and Mr. Spencer Trask, Treasurer. The character of its work may be inferred from the following list of eminent persons who have agreed to serve as an advisory council: Miss Jane Addams, Mrs. Theodore W. Birney, R. Fulton Cutting, Miss Clare de Graffenried, Pres. H. B. Frissell, Richard Watson Gilder, Dr. Washington Gladden, Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Bishop F. D. Huntington, Dr. Wm. R. Huntington, Bishop John F. Hurst, Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Dr. Charles H Parkhurst, John H. Patterson, Bishop Henry C. Potter, Dr. Richard S. Storrs, Dr. Kerr B. Tupper, and Bishop John H. Vincent.

The offices of the League are at 608 United Charities Building, Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street, New York. All further information and certificates of membership may be obtained by writing to that address.

Sick Soldiers at Mont-Lawn.

It is "Camp Jewett" now, and a Convalescent Home for the Troops.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Mont Lawn, Nyack-on-the-Hudson, has been reopened and is now transformed into quarters for the sick soldiers. As already stated in a former issue, it was tendered to The Women's National War Relief Association of New York, for this purpose some time ago, Major Jewett, the owner of Mont-Lawn, generously consenting, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD granting the use of its furniture and equipment. Owing to many similar offers, it was not at first believed that Mont-Lawn would be needed; but an inspection by the Medical Staff of the War Relief Association disclosed so many advantages, that it was decided to accept it.

On October 1, the first contingent of invalid soldiers reached Mont-Lawn from New York. They included men who had fought on Cuban battlefields, and others who had been in camp at Chickamauga, Camps Meade, Tampa, Alger and elsewhere. All had been stricken with malarial typhoid fever, and, after a tedious hospital experience, were now sent to the breezy, health-giving slopes of Mont-Lawn in the hope of speedy recuperation. Weak and thin, but glad to be released from beds of illness, and to be conveyed to such delightful quarters, the soldiers sauntered about the grounds, or sat and chatted on the roomy piazzas. One poor fellow, Peter Hoffmeister, a private of the Regular Army, was clearly past human aid. Worn to emaciation, the physicians exerted their utmost skill in his case, but in vain. He lingered until Monday morning, October 3d, and then passed peacefully away.

"Camp Jewett," as the Mont-Lawn Home has been temporarily christened, in honor of its owner, will accommodate fifty soldiers, leaving ample room for house physician, nurses, housekeeper, and other necessary help. The entire management is under the control of the Women's National War Relief Association, of which Miss Helen Gould is Acting Director-General and the leading spirit. Miss Gould's noble work in behalf of the sick soldiers at the various camps is already familiar to our readers. When it was proposed to utilize Mont-Lawn, she personally visited the place, and was greatly impressed with its salubrious location and many other advantages. In the organization of the work, the choice of assistants and other details, she has taken a keen personal interest. Her generous sympathy for the sick soldiers, and her frank and unassuming manner, have won the hearts of all who meet her.

The ladies of Nyack have formed an Auxiliary Committee to assist the War Relief Association and to supply the sick soldiers at Camp Jewett with such delicacies as may be suited to their condition. Nourishing fare, sound, refreshing sleep at night, and the balmy breezes from the piney hills by day, together with excellent nursing and care, may be depended upon to aid materially in restoring the invalids to health and vigor.

AMONG THE SPANISH PRISONERS.

Mrs. Gulick, whose missionary work in Spain is well known, has been spending some weeks among the Spanish prisoners at Seavey's Island, where her command of the language made her specially useful in communicating information and in giving comfort to the sick and wounded men. They belong, she says, to a large class in Spain, down-trodden as much as Cubans, obliged to give their lives in defense of a government which they do not respect.

ISAIAH CALLED.

S. S. Lesson for Oct. 23. Isaiah 6: 1-13. Golden Text, Isaiah 6: 8.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

"IN the year that King Uzziah died," says Isaiah, "I saw the Lord." This did not constitute Isaiah a prophet. He had previously seen, in the light of God, vistons concerning Judah and Jerusalem (Isa. 1: 1), and he had seen the word concerning them (Isa. 2. 1). He had seen the evil, the utter rottenness and corruption of his people and of their worship. And he had seen the remedy: "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red, like crimson, they shall be as wool (Isa. 1: 18).

Isaiah had seen that before Zion could "be called the city of righteousness, the faithful city," she must be "redeemed with judgment" (Isa. 1: 26, 27). before the law could go forth out of Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem, there must come the day of the Lord (the great tribulation). He saw that the loftiness of man should be bowed down, and the haughtiness of man should be made low, and the Lord alone should be exalted in that day of the "glory of his majesty when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth" (Isa. 2), but Isaiah had not yet seen the Lord. He saw the wickedness of the men and the vanity of the women (Isa. 3), and again a vision of the glory of Zion, when once she shall be purged; but Isaiah had not yet seen the Lord. He spoke and understood the parable of the vineyard, the house of Israel; he could see the "woe" which should come upon the covetous, the drunkards, the blasphemers, the mockers, the hypocrites, the self-righteous, the swindlers (Isa. 5), but Isaiah had not seen the Lord.

And now, in the year that King Uzziah died, he says: "I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple." Priests, sacrifices, worshipers, disappeared from sight; God filled the place. And Isaiah saw, as he never had before, what worship in heaven meant: "Above him stood the seraphim; each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face." What was this? Unfallen beings covered their faces in the presence of such intense holiness and purity! It was time he should do the same. Oh reader, it is time for you and me to do the same! Instead of abasing ourselves, pitying ourselves, defending ourselves, indulging ourselves, if we have seen the Lord, we shall instinctively cover ourselves and hide our face, not in fear and wonder, that he has anything to do with such as we. And with twain he covered his feet." Oh, how many Christians proclaim themselves whatever they go and whatever they do! How they expect to be noticed, admired, recognized! Oh, for the consciousness that God sees, even our feet in the holy assembly! With twain he did fly." Covered, but ready to serve.

"And one cried to another and said, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God of Hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory." No word about themselves, no petitions, they were satisfied to simply adore him. Oh, how miserable is the acquaintance with God of those who approach him with no other idea than to get something out of him! How poor are most of our hymns, so full of ourselves, our wants and our experiences, our joy and our peace, and Oh, so little of his glory! These words in the Hebrew are, as we see from the R. V. margin, "The fulness of the whole earth is his glory." "In his tempie everything saith glory" (Ps. 29: 9, R. V.); and the earth will not have fulfilled its purpose until the reign of Christ has so conquered the whole creation that every created thing, and every thing that hath breath, shall praise the Lord. Isaiah saw the foundations of the thresholds move at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke. When God has his rights, and his creatures offer him holy worship, there is no door and no difficulty or any other obstruction which will not move before his majesty.

"UNTIL THE CITIES BE WASTED WITHOUT INHABITANT AND THE LAND BE UTTERLY DESOLATE."

"Then said I, Woe is me!" The prophet had before said, and said in the Word of the Lord, "Woe unto them that join house to house and field to field;" "Woe unto them . . . that . . . follow strong drink;" "Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin, as it were, with a cart rope;" "Woe unto them that call evil good and good evil;" "Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes and prudent in their own sight;" "Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine;" but now it was, "Woe is me." "Woe is me, for I am undone because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts." A new light had broken upon the life of the prophet, a light which revealed the inmost depths of his own heart, and he may have longed for the wings of the seraphim to hide himself from that blinding light.

We can never see ourselves as God sees us, but through a revelation of God to our souls by the power of the Holy Ghost. If the faults of others are more apparent to us than our own, if we can despise or condemn others, if we can consider ourselves and still live unto ourselves it is because we have not yet seen the Lord, or if we have, it is that we have been disobedient to the heavenly vision (Acts 26: 19). Isaiah was confounded, broken, conquered. But God had accomplished his purpose, and one of the holy seraphims, whose intense adoration had so moved the prophet, was sent to minister to him, bringing a live coal from off the altar. "And he touched my mouth with it and said: Lo, this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquity is taken away and thy sin purged." Oh the precious blood of Jesus! Oh that cross of Calvary where Christ has been crucified for us, and where our old man has been crucified with him! Now, indeed, our iniquity can be taken away, and our sin purged.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

ISAIAH'S prophetic career appears to have covered a period of nearly half a century. As he tells us in the passage of the lesson, this vision came to him in the year that King Uzziah died. This king, called in the book of Kings, Azariah, was the grandson of Joash, who as mentioned in last week's lesson, was in his boyhood hidden from Athaliah in the Temple. Uzziah was a leper and, king though he was, had to be kept secluded in a separate house, while his son Jotham performed the functions of government. It is probable that this period of regency was counted into Jotham's reign, while it was also counted into Uzziah's reign, and thus we have a specimen of the difficulties there are in constructing an exact chronology from the Hebrew histories. It would appear, however, that Isaiah was prophesying, or preaching, as we should now call it, as early as the year 734 B. C., and his influence was at its zenith at the time of Sennacherib's invasion in 701. He apparently lived in Jerusalem, and numbered among his friends the high priest and the most prominent members of society. The king and his court listened to his teaching and were guided by his advice through a critical period of Jewish history. Nevertheless, they did not, until the reign of Hezekiah, attempt to carry out the reforms Isaiah insisted upon, though their policy toward the northern kingdom and to the great power of Assyria, was of Isaiah's dictation. It can be seen from his book that he had no faith in the help of Egypt, or any other power, in the great danger of Assyrian attack, but relied wholly on the help of God. That being so, he groaned as he saw his people false to their divine Helper and unworthy of his help. Throughout his book, runs the idea which appears in this lesson, of a remnant, a small circle, who were the true people of God, for the sake of whom God would interpose. The great bulk of the nation would be destroyed, but from the remnant might grow a nation worthy of God's great name.

Make the heart of this people fat. The prophet could not but be discouraged by such a prediction of the result of his preaching. He was eager to go with the message of God, and he was sent: but there was no hope of the people hearing it. In effect, he was told that they would not understand because they had put their eyes, so that they might not "understand with their heart and return and be healed." A popular writer describes such an instance. It is that of a young man whose father was a noble and high-spirited gentleman, proud of his descent from illustrious generals and statesmen. The old gentleman's heart was set on his only son restoring the family to its former prominence. For this he denied himself and scraped and saved to give his son a university education. But the son became vicious, took to drink and degrading vices, stole his father's money out of a desk, and eventually committed forgery. A friend of the family offered to find the young man and try to redeem him. "You are very good," said the distressed father, "but you will not succeed. I have tried to arouse his ambition and sense of honor, but I cannot. He shrinks from reform because he prefers degradation. He will listen to you without giving attention, because he does not want to be stirred up to making a struggle to reform." And so it proved.

As a teil tree and as an oak. The teil tree is the terebinth or turpentine tree, which is common in Palestine. It is very hard to kill. Even when it is cut down to the level of the ground, if its roots are left, it will send out shoots and grow again. It was Isaiah's hope that from the remnant of the nation, even when destruction had swept over it, would come a people to serve God. The ancients had a fable of the phœnix which was a poetic symbol of the new idea. "The phœnix," they said, "is a bird, and there is but one of its kind in the wide world. It is without a mate and lives five hundred years; when the which years be passed, he feeleth her own feebleness and maketh a nest of sweet smelling sticks that be full dry: and in summer when the western wind bloweth the sticks and the nest be set on fire of the sun. Then the phœnix being wilfully in the nest is burned to ashes. But within three days a little worm is gendered of the ashes and waxeth large and is turned into a bird with beautiful feathers, and becomes the most fairest bird that is." Thus they pictured the idea that out of death and destruction may come new life.

And the land be utterly desolate. "There is no scene in all the world," says a traveler who has been in nearly every country on the globe, "that has so impressed me with a sense of utter loneliness as the ruined cities of the Orient." In a house in a certain town all was hurry and excitement. The owner lay sick unto death, physicians came and went, and friends were calling to inquire after the sufferer. It was a busy scene. A week later the whole scene had changed. The man was dead. All those visits, all the manifold effort to save him had ceased. The house was utterly desolate.

The holy seed shall be the substance thereof. This is Isaiah's one hope that runs through all his prophecies. He saw the nation given up to sensuality and wickedness, but in the midst a godly seed who really sought God and kept themselves from evil. These, he hoped and believed, would become the nucleus of a great nation. A clergyman, who was lecturing on the Roman Catholic Church, was interrupted by one of his audience calling out: "Yours is but a mushroom church anyway." He replied: "Only in one way does it resemble the mushroom. It is a thing of purity which grew out of a mass of corruption."

Domestic Life in Havana.

Merriment in the Midst of Sorrow—Typical Homes—The Markets—The Prado—Plantation Life.

THE world's interest for many months past, has been centered upon the Pearl of the Antilles, and upon its capital city, Havana. The Cuban capital has crms that are peculiarly its own: and nhe "piping times of peace" there is ghaps no pleasanter city of the western wld to visit at the proper season of the yr. But peace and Havana have long lin strangers, and the beautiful city has eerienced all the miseries of war, famvi and pestilence. But even these did n subdue the light-heartedness which is a ait of the race. Mingling with the cries cuffering were often heard the sounds of nriment, of tinkling guitars and mandoli, for the music loving, Spanish peopalways carry their sorrows characterically.

ven in the critical days of the war the c was full of Spanish officers in their geous national uniforms. There were nches, parades, flag-flying and bandpring; and the dark-eyed senoras and soritas behind grilled windows h their continual vision of f. ine-stricken beggars on the swalk relieved by occasional stacles of a less dressing nature. Ty needed diversic for the senoras a senoritas dwellin in the villas were tinselves not alws free from hung Before the world ban to interest its in Cuba's deplete larders, flour was h h, bread scarce a dear; and senora a senorita were diving scanty stores wi pitiable ones cading the sideiwks. Human natis human nature, a womanhood womhood the world over. Spanish and Cuban women are deved wives and mothers, and he kindly hearts for the needy afflicted. In the early mornin the man keeping the cafe wild send out a pot of coffee the people on the sidewalk: t milkman milking cows in front of the b house with the fine garden would g a cup of milk to a hungry child.

rdinarily it is an easy matter to make a uban breakfast luscious and beautiful wi pineapples, oranges, bananas, mang plantains, cherries, peaches, apricots, a strawberries to choose from, with flowe n abundance. The Cubans, however, do n incline much to cut flowers: from t r tables they look out on gardens, cool wi palms and glowing with gorgeous bom. Our photograph of a court in the ctre of the house of a rich Cuban famil taken early in the morning, and showin the senor trimming his lemon and b ana trees, the senoras and senoritas in th background, is typical of what may bseen in many other Havana homes. Mst Cuban houses have this central crtyard full of fruit bushes and flowe and accompanying aviary of birds—sing canaries, chattering parrots and bliant parrakeets. The coloring of the hses, as viewed from the outside, is stling; the lower half of the house may bpainted a deep blue, or red, or vivid ore, the overhanging windows ora e, scarlet and green. In the interiors, y will observe that where we have a fize running around the upper part of a w, they frequently have an open space fventilation. If you penetrate to the k hen, you behold a negress in gorgeous tban and gay calico, making wonderful tato-colored concoctions of peppery te, or preparing rice in one of the my delightful ways in which Cubans ck it. If she is so fortunate as to have a fowl, it will be quite poor, for fat fowls h e been unknown in Cuba for a long ti e. The food supply being insufficient fo human needs, the poor animals were ir itably neglected.

COURTYARD OF A CUBAN HOUSE.

Miss Frances Linton, a bright American woman who spent two years on the island, gives this vivid picture of Cuban life, before war and famine had done their worst:

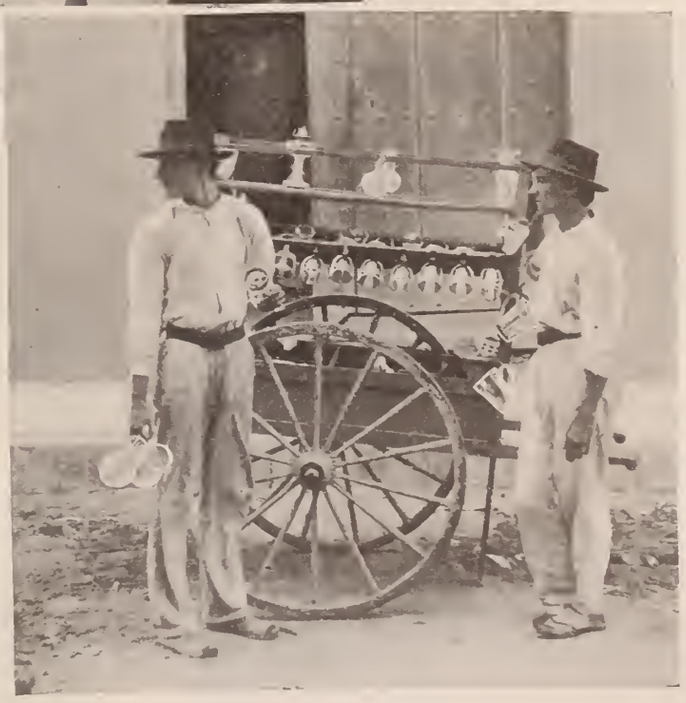
Life on a plantation runs gaily and contentedly; they live on what the land yields, and when meat is required, they have their own mutton, pork, beef, chickens, etc., and wild fowls as a luxury. The negroes and their families who are employed on the estate have their small houses in a cluster—a little village of their own, a stove or two, the carpenter's shop, the blacksmith's, and a post office sometimes. Then there is the house of the superintendent, the house of the engineer, and the principal one, of course, being the house in which the owner and his family reside, the latter seldom staying there the whole year round; for in April, when the cane-grinding ceases, they either go to France or some other place in Europe, or come to Havana, leaving the house furnished, ready for their return in December. When that time comes, the young people are overjoyed to get out into the country again.

Havana can hardly be divided into a rich and a poor quarter. Handsome houses are scattered throughout the city, and the stuccoed villa and the poor man's dwelling are close neighbors. The Cerro is one of the handsomest streets, and the Verdado is a lovely drive, with villas of magnificent portals and royal palms on one side, and the blue ocean on the other. This drive is usually thronged with carriages, filled with well-dressed people. The Prado, also, is crowded, especially on Sundays, with vehicles of every description, from private landaus and liveries to seedy hacks, for hire. Sunday has always been a gala day; Sunday morning the trumpet called everybody to the Prado to witness the inspection of the Volunteers and to hear the band playing. Week nights and Sunday nights people flocked to Queen Isabella's Square to gossip, promenade and listen to the band. Markets, shops and theatres were open Sunday, as other days. The war, however, has made great changes, socially.

A market stands on the site of the old Inquisition, and here the bright-turbaned negresses come to exchange the senora's centavos and pesetas for fruits and vegetables, and such meat as may be had. One of the features of Cuban life which has always impressed visitors with its picturesqueness is the canoe-like market-boats, loaded with fruits, vegetables and fish, rowed by negroes, which one sees plying in and out among the white or brown-winged feluccas (boats with swallow-shaped sails), that dot the magnificent harbor, where the world's great warships found room and anchorage.

One of our pictures, showing a boy selling water on the outskirts of Havana, presents a scene quite novel to Americans. Hanging on the water-barrel is the can in which they measure it; in the early morning they charge five cents a can: at noon three cents. The owner of the cart takes out a vender's license, so also do the candyman, the milk vender and breakfast carrier. The breakfast carrier is an important functionary in the domestic life of Havana. The furnished meal system saves much trouble, and the refugee Cubans imported it to Ybor City and Key West, where children carrying the meals back and forth is a common street scene.

A HAVANA WATER-SELLER.



CUBAN ICE-CREAM PEDDLERS.

Soon the last vestige of Spanish rule in Cuba will disappear, and with our army of occupation in full control, the social life of Havana and other cities will resume its normal flow. But American influence will civilize and soften much that has characterized that life in the past. Sunday will be reverenced, and the Sunday bull-fight and theatre will soon be memories of the past. Schools, telegraphs, postal and railway facilities, will transform the ancient system, and with new and better surroundings, the people of Cuba will gradually learn to appreciate the new order of things.

The social and domestic customs of the Cuban capital, in the next few years, will doubtless undergo such rapid mutations that the pen-pictures of the past few years will hardly be recognizable, and only interesting, we hope, as past history of a city whose rapid advancement in science, sanitation and government that, save for the lessons to be gathered from them, its trials and sorrows will be forgotten in an abundance of blessings. We look to American schools and missionaries to hasten that happy time.

Progress in Africa.

Cheering news of missionary work, in the central regions of Africa, is published by the Missionary Review, on the authority of a Scottish journalist and traveler. He says: "I have intelligence from the heart of Central Africa up to the middle of March. All along the eastern slope of the watershed between the sources of the Kongo River and those of the northern affluents of the Zambesi, the Scottish missionaries of the Livingstonia enterprise, now twenty-two years at work, and the Scoto-Dutch agents of the Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa, have produced some really remarkable results, as has been shown by the statistics of the year 1897. In the schools, 13,569 youths of both sexes, but chiefly boys, were in eager attendance, only a few as yet paying fees, but all purchasing their own school-books, printed on the spot, and the Nyanja New Testament, as translated by Dr. Laws. Of these 11,423 were taught by the Scottish, and 2,146 by the Dutch missionaries allied with them, of whom A. C. Murray is the head. The former had gathered into five churches, at the five central stations to the west of Lake Nyasa, 1,114 adult members and some 3,000 adherents or candidates for membership. At Bandawe, on the Lake Shore, these lately savage people are themselves building a brick church, to seat 1,500 of their number: the iron roof is on its way out from Glasgow. This is the largest medical mission in all Africa. Last year there were five graduates of Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen universities, with two trained nurses, who treated 9,943 medical cases, and performed 13,909 surgical operations, many of them major, the patients numbering some 10,600 men, 6,000 women and 6,200 children. It is difficult to realize that such a work is going on day by day in a region unknown five years ago, save as the horrible hunting-ground of the Mohammedan slave-raider. The joint Scoto-Dutch Mission is industrial, as well as medical, educational and preaching."

Thomas F. Bayard.

BEFORE this paragraph gets into type, the ex-United States Senator, the ex-Secretary of State, the ex-Minister Plenipotentiary, will have quit this life. American politics, which have ruined so many great men, never did him any damage. Millions of people have differed from him on many subjects, but no charge of venality or dishonor was ever brought against him. Facetious writers have thought that while in England he was almost too friendly with that nation. But he no doubt helped prepare the way for the marvelous kindness between that nation and ours, demonstrated within the past five months. Suppose England had turned against us during our Spanish fight, who can tell how much trouble some of the transatlantic nations would have given us? If England had been willing to pronounce hostilities against us, there are at least two European nations who would have been glad to join her; and our Spanish war, instead of being closed, would have been just opening. Thanks to the memory of Thomas F. Bayard for what he did in the way of harmonization between England and America! Let our nation honor his dust. The incorruptible statesman, the brilliant politician, the good man; his life was an inspiration.

National Insanity.

HOW shall we account for the two great excitements in France concerning Captain Dreyfus? Only a few months ago all that country demanded his imprisonment or exile. Never was hotter rage displayed in a court room than that against Dreyfus. Any one who dared to speak a word for him was hissed at, or bled coned in the streets of Paris. An editor who ventured to demand for this victim a fair trial was himself arrested and condemned and incarcerated. Suddenly it is confessed that one of the letters produced against Captain Dreyfus was a forgery. Now all France is shaken with a demand that he have a new trial. So great is the agitation that the very existence of that Republic is threatened. There is no intelligent way of accounting for this stampede of a nation, now this way and now that, except on the theory that as individuals sometimes become insane, so communities and nations may become insane. The nation of Judah was insane when it slew Christ. The English nation was insane when again and again it execrated Gladstone. The American nation has been insane again and again when it has unrighteously maligned a President or a philanthopist or a reformer. Some of the best of men have been sacrificed by public frenzy. Poor Captain Dreyfus, a prisoner on Devil's Island, as he was seen the other day, a rope fastened to both his wrists, the ends of the ropes in the hands of officers, is a type of men who in all ages were the victims of the world's dementia. We know not whose turn will come next. Because the public are disposed to mob a man, let us not join in the tumult without previous investigation as to whether he deserves arraignment, or whether he is the sufferer from the world's temporary aberration. The island on which Captain Dreyfus is detained is appropriately called Devil's Island. Jersey Island took Victor Hugo. Island of Patmos took St. John. But whatever be the geographical term by which the place of unjust expatriation is described, it is most certainly Devil's Island.

Our Pathway to Asia.

THIS must now be our national concern. The great things of the past have centered in and around the Atlantic Ocean. But the civilization of the future must be across the Pacific. The Pilgrim fathers prepared the way for the first—the argonauts of 1848, the great miners of California, prepared the way for the great changes which await Asia. Asia has the great starving, dying multitudes of the earth. We need to send our manufactures and products there; we need to send there our Bibles and missionaries. It is not for nothing that God puts into our hands Hawaii, the Ladrones, the Philippine Islands. These are the stepping-stones of the great Giant of the West. Let him put on his seven-leagued boots, and begin his journey for the good of the whole earth.

Avaunt Politics!

THERE is no grander science than the science of politics, but it will be a memorable and everlasting shame if we allow the splendors of our national victory to be eclipsed by angry political prejudices and ambitions. Are we to divide our generals into Republican and Democratic generals? Are we to severely criticize the men who were prominent in the recent war because they belong to an opposing political party? Woe worth the day! The war is over. It was a strife in which mercy triumphed over cruelty, civilization over barbarism. Do not let us carry it into the fall elections. As near as we can tell, all who were at the front did their best, and all who planned the campaign did their best. We have peace with Spain; let us have peace with each other. In our efforts to make future Governors and Presidents let us not belittle the patriotic military achievement for God and righteousness, which has called forth the applaudits of all the great nations.

NOTABLE DEPARTURE IN BIBLES.

While the demand for the Revised Bible is constantly on an increase, the paragraph form in which it has heretofore been invariably issued has materially operated against its more general circulation.

Ever in the line of progress, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has just had an edition prepared in verse form, conforming in its divisions strictly to the Authorized Version. References, Teachers' Helps and a Revised Concordance have been added, and now for the first time a Revised Teachers' Bible is published, and, of course, immediately included in the remarkable premium propositions with which each year we surprise our readers.

Fuller particulars and colored illustrations will be found on pages 790 and 791. The leather-lined Bible is particularly attractive and specially prepared with a view to durability.

The Fifth Commandment.

THERE was once a Child in Jewry, who was justly called "Wonderful," and yet the most significant fact recorded of his boyhood is that He "was subject unto His parents."

Now, the tendency of our age is to a freedom, which degenerates into license. The number of men who are "a law unto themselves" is greatly on the increase, while the emancipation of women, from every tie they consider subjugatory, is a fact not to be overlooked. But our children have won their undesirable independence in a much more rapid and masterly manner. How, no one knows very well; unless it be that they cried for it and got it. This seems to have been Thackeray's opinion, for he makes the miserably incompetent father, advise the young heir of Clavering, "Cwy, Frank, cwy, and you'll get what you want, my boy."

The means by which children have emancipated themselves from authority may not be on the surface, but the effects are. No one can avoid seeing, hearing and feeling them most painfully. Speaking broadly, America may weep for her children; for they are not. When the boy of 1898 puts on his first knickerbockers, he puts on all the airs and importance of a man. The little girl of the same period, before she can spell, knows the latest style in skirts, and counts her lovers upon her little fingers; and both boy and girl are epicures, when they should be living on plain, simple food. O, how good it is now to see a genuine boy! I do not mean a young gentleman with a stylish jacket, and visiting cards in his pocket; but a boy who is not afraid of dirt, or torn trousers and scratched hands, and whose days of glory are those blessed Saturdays, when he seeks the woods, and, among dogs and birds and squirrels, has a good time generally.

If there are any more hideous adjectives to be put in connection with the lovely word "child" than smart and sharp, I do not know them. And yet these are the titles constantly used as terms of approval and praise. Impudence is "smartness;" lying and dishonesty, "sharpness;" insubordination is "high spirit;" deception and selfishness is "knowing how to take care of himself." If the child is to be father to the man, what kind of men are such children the earnests of? And where this is the common moral training of children, their mental one is not likely to be better. On the contrary, their education is far too fragmentary, and without regular plan or purpose. How many young men does every one know of apparent culture, hard at work making money, who never read through a single standard work! They skim the newspapers and the periodicals; they occasionally glance through a popular novel; but the great masters of thought and imagination might—as far as they are concerned—be written in an unknown tongue.

This fault, which was the exception of last generation, is the rule of this one. Fragments of information on all conceivable subjects may inform, but they do not educate a boy, and the inevitable result of such training is that no child takes the trouble to think for itself. Priests used to keep the conscience and minds of the million; now editors supply opinions and conclusions for them. Periodical literature is one of the great blessings of the day, but it never can supplant standard literature in the education of men and women.

Teachers here, are only guilty in a minor degree; they are forced into complicity, for boys and girls who are never controlled at home, will not be controlled at school. The teacher may show them the springs of knowledge, but he cannot make them drink; and a very few years' experience will greatly discourage the most conscientious. For faithful service is no guarantee for continued patronage. Just as soon as little Master or Miss are tired or offended, they take their ignorance, impertinence and their few dollars a quarter, to some other school.

The root of this evil is want of subjection at home, and it never can be remedied until children are deposed from the ugly and unnatural prominence too often given them. Boys and girls, aping men and women, are just as disgusting as men and women assuming a youthfulness which has deserted them; and nothing is so suggestive on this point as to remember that Christ's subjection to His parents is the only thing told us about His childhood, as if that very circumstance was the secret of the perfect manhood afterwards revealed for our example.

The specious pretence which asserts that affectionate firmness and wholesome chastisement is unnecessary with our advanced civilization, is a sham. Children are born with as many faults now as they ever had. Civilization has not annihilated Original Sin, and the advice to "withhold not correction from thy child" is as necessary right now as it was in the days of Solomon. It is the practical abrogation of this law of God, which has caused such a wide fulfilment in our day of the prophet's word: "The child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient." As a matter of impulse, this position may be promptly denied; but let every one who does so sit calmly down and count up among his or her own acquaintances the number of children who habitually and spontaneously—as the result of their training—"rise up before the hoary head, and honor the face of an old man." And further reduce the number of those who could in any degree typify to them the "little child," whom Christ set up in the midst of His disciples, declaring that "of such were the kingdom of heaven."

BRIEF NOTES.

The oldest Wesleyan minister still active at work, is the Rev. Richard Byrne, of Bristol, England, who this year celebrated his sixty-fifth year of ministerial work.

A little steamboat now plies on the Jordan from Jericho to the southern extremity of the Dead Sea. It is owned by the Abbot of the Monastery of St. John.

Rev. J. C. Dorward, of Natal, has notified the American Bible Society of an unprecedented demand for Bibles in the Zulu language, and asked the Society to assist in meeting it.

An effective address was made a few days ago at an open-air meeting, in New York, by Police-Sergeant Ezra P. Strope, who declared that he had been first led to seek the Lord watching night after night the Salvation Army meetings which it was part of his duty as a police officer to attend.

Interesting services were held at New Providence, N. J., recently, when members of all the denominations joined in celebrating the centennial of the Methodist Episcopal Church of that place. One gratifying feature of the celebration was the burning of a mortgage deed for $1,000 which had long encumbered the church.

Dr. Albers S. Hunt, whose death was announced in these columns recently, remembered in his will the American Bible Society, of which he was a secretary for many years. His bequest to the society was $10,000. He also left to the Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., $5,000, and to other Methodist institutions, $7,000.

The West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, at 318 West Fifty-second street, New York, commenced its sessions on Oct. 3, for the winter's campaign. This branch is doing an excellent work in its educational classes which are helping a number of young men to qualify themselves for advanced positions in business.

The Ministerial Bureau, established in Chicago with the object of introducing pastors to churches, which was originally organized for Illinois only, has now extended its operations through the whole Northwest. Its offices are in the Y. M. C. A. building in La Salle Street. Dr. E. D. Redington is Secretary.

Epworth League work in New York commences the season with an extensive effort. The week beginning Sunday, Oct. 9, has been set apart as a "week of prayer for our young people's work." Pastors were requested to observe the day by preaching special and appropriate sermons the evening service, each local chapter making it the occasion of a League rally.

The Reformed Dutch Church in America asks for $130,000 to pay the expenses of its seven foreign missions. These missions embrace seventeen and women sent out by the Church, with ordained ministers and 252 helpers raised up on the field; 47 churches, with 5,564 communicants; 45 schools of all grades, from the village primary to the college and theological seminary, with more than 7,000 scholars.

The Canadian Plebiscite appears to have resulted in a majority in favor of Prohibition of about 20,000. Quebec was the only province which gave a heavy majority against it. The opposition point out that in the provinces voting in favor of Prohibition there was a decrease in the majority recorded. It appears probable now that the government will propose a measure leaving each province to follow its own wish as a local option law.

An important testimony has been given by Lord Wolseley, Commander-in-Chief of the British Army, in favor of temperance and morality. He expresses the wish that in making recommendations for promotion regard should be had to the example set to the soldiers, and that no man, however efficient in some respects, should be considered fit to exercise authority over his comrades, who is notorious for vicious and intemperate habits.

We are glad to learn that Dr. Diaz, the famous Cuban Baptist preacher, has recovered from the wound he received at Santiago, and is now at work again in his old field in Havana. The editor of the Examiner has received a letter from him in which he says: "Next Sunday I will have a service with my congregation. I hope to have a large attendance. The schools are very flourishing and last Sunday they had a congregation in one of the stations with a large attendance, perhaps 600 people."

The International Christian and Missionary Alliance is holding its New York Convention this week. It commenced Oct. 7, and will continue until Oct. 16. The great event of the Convention will be the meetings in Carnegie Hall on Sunday next. Among the speakers announced are Rev. Le Lacheur, who has been trying to penetrate Thibet; Rev. Henry Varley; Dr. Chappell; Dr. J. Gray, of Boston, and Missionary Robert Wilder from India. Dr. A. B. Simpson, President of the Alliance, presides at the meetings.

"The First Indication of Domestic Happiness is the Love of One's Home!"
Weighs Three Pounds

All our premiums, unless distinctly published otherwise, are sent securely packed, all charges prepaid. Either of these two volumes—each containing nearly 500 large pages on heavy paper from new and very legible type, and weighing about three pounds each—is sent, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year—fifty-two Times—on receipt of only Two Dollars.

The Art of Home-Making

By Margaret E. Sangster.

Superbly Illustrated and Exceptionally Elegant Book of nearly 500 Large Pages Beautifully Printed from Large Type.

THIS year Mrs. Sangster has prepared a genuine surprise for everyone who may become the fortunate possessor of the book, which is the crowning effort of a long and honored literary career. In The Art of Home Making, she has in a kindly, yet practical manner, brought true home happiness within the reach of the humblest reader, and the many thousands who have already learned to love Margaret Sangster, will love her still more when they have finished reading the work to which this warm-hearted, genial authoress has given months of patient, careful, and prayerful toil, weaving chapter after chapter into a grand, noble, enduring monument to her undying interest in the welfare of the plain people, who constitute the rank and file of this, the greatest, happiest and most prosperous country in the world.

It is a glorious privilege to contribute to the happiness of our fellow beings, and no one enjoys this privilege more keenly than does Mrs. Sangster, and if those who may secure this work and derive benefit from its perusal will write Mrs. Sangster a few words of encouragement, they in turn will afford her intense gratification, and contribute very largely toward making this good, true-hearted woman inexpressibly happy.

If our friends who may desire either one or both of these books (the two together are sent with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year—52 times—on receipt of $3.00), will kindly send us a postal to that effect we will gladly reserve them until it may prove convenient to send the money, and thus prevent disappointment. Even if they do not send for them later on, or prefer some other premium, it will not matter, as there will be an abundant demand to exhaust our supply. The books and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may be sent each to a separate address without extra charge.

Around the World with Eyes Wide Open

By H. Allen Tupper, Jr.

The Greatest and Most Profusely Illustrated Book of Travel of the Present Day—Large Type and Large Pages.

THE author of Around the World with Eyes Wide Open, has been exceedingly happy in the choice of a title. This beautifully illustrated book brings us, as it were, face to face with all that a bright, intelligent man, gifted with exceptional powers of observation and supplied with abundant means, found worth seeing, worth photographing and worth recording in a journey covering over 20,000 miles, and taking in both the Old World and the New, under circumstances more favorable than usually fall to the lot of even exceptionally favored travelers.

Dr. Tupper, in the preparation of this superb work, has exercised remarkable skill, both from a literary and an artistic standpoint. Vivid and graphic in style, simple but choice in language, exceedingly rich and profuse in illustration, he has produced a volume which will bring joy to the heart of every member of the family and contribute instructive entertainment all the year round. Never was a more attractive book on travel given to the world even at ten times the price. In its pages we find the world as it is to-day, pictorialized and described, with all the quaint customs in vogue in countries strange and distant; the costumes worn in the Orient and in the Occident; the various modes of travel in operation the world over; and a thousand and one things that will interest, amuse and instruct old and young, rich and poor. No book like it was ever issued, and none on the book-shelves of the present day are capable of affording more infinite and more varied entertainment than Dr. H. Allen Tupper's most remarkable work, Around the World with Eyes Wide Open.

CHAPTER 1.
IN the a beginning b God created the heaven and the earth.
2 And the earth was c waste and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep: d and the spirit of God 1 moved upon the face of the waters.
3 e And God said, Let there be light: and there was light.
4 And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided the light from the darkness.
5 And God called the light f Day, and the darkness he called Night. And there was evening and there was morning, one day.
6 ¶ And God said, g Let there be a 2 firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.
7 And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were h above the firmament: and it was so.
8 And God called the firmament Heaven. And there was evening and there was morning, a second day.
9 ¶ And God said, i Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so.
10 And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called he Seas: and God saw that it was good.
11 And God said, k Let the earth put forth grass, herb yielding seed, and fruit tree bearing fruit l after its kind, wherein is the seed thereof, upon the earth: and it was so.
12 And the earth brought forth grass, herb yielding seed after its kind, and tree bearing fruit, wherein is the seed thereof, after its kind: and God saw that it was good.
13 And there was evening and there was morning, a third day.
14 ¶ And God said, m Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and years:
15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth: and it was so.
16 And God made the two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also.
17 And God n set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth,
18 And to rule over the day and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness: and God saw that it was good.
19 And there was evening and there was morning, a fourth day.
20 ¶ And God said, o Let the waters 3 bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and let fowl fly above the earth 4 in the open firmament of heaven.
21 And God created the great sea monsters, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kinds, and every winged fowl after its kind: and God saw that it was good.
22 And God blessed them, saying, Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let fowl multiply in the earth.
23 And there was evening and there was morning, a fifth day.
24 ¶ And God said, p Let the earth bring forth the living creature after its kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after its kind: and it was so.
25 And God made the beast of the earth after its kind, and the cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the ground after its kind: and God saw that it was good.
26 And God said, q Let us make man r in our image, after our likeness: and let them have s dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.
27 And God created man in his own image, in the t image of God

CHAPTER 22.

AND Dā'vid spake unto the Lo the words of this song
e d that the LORD delivered out f the hand of all his enean out of the hand of Saul:
and I said,
the LORD is my rock, and my fortss, and my deliverer, even min
he d of my rock, in him will trust;
my shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower, and my refuge;
My saviour, thou savest me from violence.
4 I will call upon the LORD, who is worthy to be praised:
So shall I be saved from mine enemies.
5 For the waves of death com-
passed me,
The floods of ungodliness made me afraid.
6 The cords of Shē'ōl were round about me:
The snares of death came upon me.
7 In my distress I called upon the LORD,
Yea, I called unto my God:
And he heard my voice out of his temple,
And my cry came into his ears.
8 Then the earth shook and trembled,
The foundations of heaven moved
And were shaken, because he was wroth.
9 There went up a smoke out of his nostrils,
And fire out of his mouth devoured:
Coals were kindled by it.
10 He bowed the heavens also,
and came down;
And thick darkness was under his feet.
11 And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly:
Yea, he was seen upon the wings of the wind.
12 And he made darkness pavilions
round about him,
Gathering of waters, thick clouds of the skies.
13 At the brightness before him
Coals of fire were kindled.
14 The LORD thundered from heaven,
And the Most High uttered his voice.
15 And he sent out arrows, and scattered them;
Lightning, and discomfited them.
16 Then the channels of the sea appeared,
The foundations of the world were laid bare,
By the rebuke of the LORD,
At the blast of the breath of his nostrils.

USSIA'S TRIBUTE TO THE LIBERATOR.

WHEN the young Emperor of Russia issued his proposal for international disarmament, the general surprise at such a proposal emanat- n from Russia, so occupied the public nd that the occasion of the publication w overlooked. Yet there was, as the r pointed out, a natural and fit con- ion between the two. He wished the s gestion to be placed before the public, a e time when he was unveiling the g t monument which has been erected t e memory of his grandfather Alexan- II., at Moscow. That potentate was d inguished among the nations as a f d of peace, and at home, as the Czar w had set the serfs free. He c e to the throne during the w between Russia on the o side, and England, France a Sardinia on the other. H father, Nicholas I., had p secuted the war with vigor, b on his accession, pro- p ls of peace were promptly tertained and accepted. It understood that he con- teplated giving Russia a c stitution which would h e changed completely the d otic character of the gov- e ment, but the Nihilists bar- b usly murdered him on th eve of its promulgation. S e that time the work of e ncipation has been sus- p ded. Political freedom a civil liberty were to have c ned the achievement of g ng liberty to the slaves, b the assassin's hand thwart- e the plan, and Russia is st ruled by a despot and his a ocratic ministers. It is w known that Alexander's i alism was never popular a ng the upper classes, th gh the serfs, whom he s ee, venerated his name. B Russia understands his hi character better to-day th it did in his life, and in th nument which has been r ed near the Kremlin sh s its appreciation of him. It nsists of a bronze statue o im, seventeen feet high, st ding on a granite pedestal a covered by a canopy cor- re onding with the architec- tu of the Kremlin. It is s ounded on three sides by a fed colonnade, from which a flight of arble steps lead to the river. Its cost w h was over a million dollars, has been d ayed by imperial and public subscrip- tic . The ceremony of its unveiling by th present Czar was a magnficent specta- cl which drew thousands of people from al parts of the empire. It is well that a emorial should be raised to such a m . He deserved it better than the ki s who have won batties, for he had or of the characteristics which is to dis- ti ish the greatest of all rulers:

shall judge the poor of the people: he shall sa the children of the needy and shall break n ces the oppressor (Ps. 72:4).

Democratic Travelers.

correspondent of the New York Sun n viewed a European visitor who has be spending the summer in the United St s. Asked what had impressed him m in our social customs during his st he replied that he had seen nothing m typical of American institutions th the New York cable cars. "They ar nique," he said, "as an exhibition of th character of this country. I was as nished the first time I saw women be tifully dressed climb into them and ta their places next to workingmen, and in e evenings when men and women in ev ing dress take their places alongside persons dressed in the poorest fashion the sight is one that could not be duplicated in any other country in the world. There are, of course, trams in all the great European cities; but they are more restricted in the quality of their patrons. In them one sees the comfortably dressed and the poor. But not people of the social position who ride here in the public conveyances. The reason, of course, is the prevalence abroad of the cheap cabs, which are low enough in price to be accessible to anybody but those of the humblest means. There is nothing so clearly marking the absence of class distinctions in the eyes of a foreigner as when he sees women beautifully dressed in the public street cars." Possibly there is not so much brotherly feeling existing here, as our European friend thinks is implied by this commingling of classes on the cars. It would be well if his inference were more deserved than it is. We are sometimes apt to forget the reminder of the wise king:

The rich and poor meet together: the Lord is the maker of them all (Prov. 22:2).

THE DEDICATION OF THE MONUMENT TO THE EMPEROR ALEXANDER II. OF RUSSIA, AT MOSCOW.

How the Canons were Made.

In a contribution by Dr. T. M. Prudden to Harper's Magazine on the origin of the canons of the Colorado, the opinion is expressed that, at first, the Colorado and its tributaries, sweeping over the slowly rising surfaces, planed them down in the most relentless manner, as it were, and then began wearing out broad, shallow stream beds. Owing in part to the wear of the water itself, but more to the ceaseless action of the suspended sand which it bore from the up-country, or gathered up as it went along, and to the force of pebbles and boulders which it swept on in flood time, the river kept cutting down as the strata rose. Finally when what was left of our inland sea bottom got thrust up so that it had to be called a plateau, the Colorado and its tributaries or auxiliaries found themselves at the bottom of a series of colossal canons and gorges, where they are to-day. If this theory is correct, it shows how mighty a force this constant running must have exerted to cut the channels through the rock. Such forces does God exert in the spiritual world where the human heart often presents an obstruction that for hardness is compared to a rock.

Is not my word like a fire saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? (Jer. 23:29).

Our New Solar Neighbor.

Astronomers have announced their discovery of a minute planet which, in its orbit, comes nearer to our globe than any other celestial body except the moon. It was first seen by Professor Witt at Urania Observatory, in Berlin, on August 14, who, after watching it for several nights, recognized it as a member of our solar system. The stranger has a diameter of only twenty-five miles, but at one part of its orbit it is so near to our earth that it appears like a star of the sixth magnitude. Even at its nearest, however, it is fourteen million miles away. Its orbit lies between Mars and Jupiter. Its speed is great, for it makes its journey around the sun in 645 days. Already 425 of these celestial atoms had been discovered at various times in the space between Mars and Jupiter, but this one had until now escaped observation, although it comes nearer to us than any other planetary body. It has been thought by some astronomers, though doubted by others, that they are the fragments of some great planet that had been rent asunder by a mighty convulsion. However this may be it is certain that the time is coming when such changes will take place.

The moon shall not give her light and the stars shall fall from heaven and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken (Matt. 24:29).

His First View of Nature.

Several articles on the prevalence of near-sightedness and disordered focus in children have appeared recently in a New Orleans journal. One of its correspondents gives a vivid story of his sensations on putting on a pair of spectacles for the first time. He says: "I was a little chap of seven or eight, and the defect in my vision had just been discovered. My father took me to an oculist, who wrote a prescription for the lenses, and the spectacles were finished a week or so later. They were sent home one evening; I will never forget it. It was summer time, and our yard was a mass of flowers and foliage. I went to a window, put on the glasses, and stood transfixed. For the first time in my life I saw the grass, the leaves of trees, and the flowers, and it was as if I had been hurled suddenly into same new planet. It was like giving me a new sense, full-fledged, and I could not tear myself from the window until it grew too dark to see. Before that I thought the world looked the same to everybody, and that the landscape was a colored blur to others, just as it was to me. None but those who have lost their sight or have defective sight can ever really understand the inestimable blessing of normal vision." There are many who have experienced like emotions when God has opened their spiritual eyes to the truth which is near to them, as the beauties of nature were to the child, but is unperceived. All have need to pray with the Psalmist:

Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law (Psalms 119:18).

A Mixed Garden.

A resident in a town on Long Island, N. Y., has a garden which is probably the only one of its kind in the country. He was well acquainted with the representative of his district in Congress, so when he bought a lot and built a house in the country, he persuaded the Congressman to get him from the Agricultural Department some flower seeds for his garden, and some vegetable seeds for the lot at the back of his house. In due time a large package was despatched, but before it reached his home the covers of the inside parcels had been accidentally broken, and the seeds mixed. It was impossible to separate them, so he emptied them all into two heaps and with one he sowed his garden and with the other his rear plot. The result is something not often seen. In both enclosures, growing side by side, are potatoes, corn, jacqueminot roses, pansies, wheat, string beans, fuschias, turnips and carrots. It is the most peculiar garden in the neighborhood and passers-by gaze at it in amazement and wonder if it was made by a lunatic. Perhaps there would be equal astonishment if we could see the world and the church as God sees them. But in that garden the mixture is more serious than in that of these Long Island plots, being a mixture of good and evil, which must one day be separated.

Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers: Gather ye together first the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn (Matt. 13:30).

Miners in Peril.

There was a sad scene a few days ago at the mouth of the Umpire Mine, at Brownsville, Pa. There was an explosion of gas in the pit, when there were one hundred and fifty men in the workings. A dispatch from the scene of the disaster says: "As soon as the news of the accident got abroad hundreds of persons rushed to the scene. The main entrance was blocked by the wives and children of the miners still in the mine, and they pleaded for men to go to the rescue, while the miners who escaped were surrounded by their wives, who begged them not to take the risk. Valuable time was being lost, when the Rev. John Law, a Methodist preacher, stripped himself to the waist and, seizing a miner's lamp and a pick, rushed into the mine. The miners followed him in. After several hours eight bodies were brought out. Others still alive but badly hurt were rescued. All the physicians of Brownsville were at the pit mouth, and were kept busy in dressing the wounds of the living. Twenty-seven miners had a thrilling escape. As soon as they heard the explosion they started through the back way. Dodging the falling slate and coal, they ran and crawled though a mile and a half of abandoned passages, pursued by the deadly after damp, and came out at a point on Redstone Creek, four miles from the pit mouth." The preacher's courage in leading the rescuing party is worthy of the highest praise. It was no part of his duty, but when a man has the love of Christ in his soul, he is sure to be concerned for the welfare of men.

This commandment have we from Him, that he who loveth God love his brother also (John 4:21).

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

A Perambulating Bishop.

EVER since the days of Haroun-al-Raschid, the famous Caliph of Bagdad, who delighted in roaming through his caliphate in disguise, and seeing for himself how his subjects lived and how they were governed by his officials, it has been the occasional refuge of great minds to assume the homespun, and go out among the workers to learn for themselves something about the conditions of life among the lowly. While such may not have been the object that led the Right Reverend Leighton Coleman, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Delaware, to take a pedestrian tour incognito last month, such at least was, to a certain extent, the profitable outcome of his experience. The Bishop is a sturdy pedestrian, and one of the hardest workers in his diocese. His vacation is usually spent afoot, and this year he followed his custom, doing a tramp of 235 miles among the West Virginia mountains, in a slouch hat, a long mackintosh, heavy boots, with the trousers tucked in, and carrying a stout staff. His bronzed skin and gray beard gave him the appearance of a rugged old mountaineer, and nobody looking at him would for a moment have guessed him to be a prelate of distinction.

Many odd adventures befel the reverend traveler. He repeatedly got a "lift" from the kindly farmers, who took him for a genial tramp; he was rarely refused a night's lodging when he knocked at the door of some mountain cabin; and having the knack of clock-mending, he often paid his obligation for such hospitality by mending the family time-piece. Occasionally, when other shelter failed, he made his bedroom in a barn, or even in a hay field. Once he was halted by "moonshiners," who fancied him a revenue officer in disguise, but he quickly undeceived them. He was at different times mistaken for a circus agent, a real estate speculator, and a peddler, and one surly farmer set his dogs upon the reverend traveler, who, however, held them at bay with his staff.

For one who has dined with Queen Victoria, hobnobbed with princes, presided at learned conferences and conventions, and been the spiritual ruler of a diocese, such experiences must certainly have had the merit of novelty, if nothing else. But the Bishop, like a wise man, turns them to better account. Like his Master, who mingled freely with the people and accepted their hospitality, he learned their sorrows and their burdens, and will be the better able to sympathize with them and help them as a Bishop should.

A WAR TESTAMENT SAVES A LIFE.

This letter, from a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, proves that the Heavenly Father cares in very remarkable ways for those who are faithfully striving to serve him, in whatever position in life they may be placed.

> 714 SEVENTH STREET, S. W.,
> WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 28, 1898.

> I owe to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the [illegible] the War Testaments among the troops. I have one that was [illegible] by my son, a private in Company M, First Regiment, District of Columbia Volunteers, which is embedded a ball. It [illegible] but through it, and that Testament must have saved the life of the soldier. It was [illegible] on the night of the 30th. Sam left D. C. July 3d. Respectfully yours,

This War Testament will doubtless be treasured as a sacred souvenir of the Cuban campaign.

A STRANGE REUNION.

Among the many interesting incidents related in Pastor Spurgeon's autobiography, there is none more pathetic than that which tells of an adventure that occurred during one of his excursions to the Alps. He remembered every detail of the incident, although time had erased the names from his recollection. A young married couple were crossing one of the great glaciers, when the husband made a misstep. The rope that held the party together broke, and, to the horror of his wife and the guides, the man slid along some distance and then disappeared in one of the numerous crevasses. It was a chasm so deep that all help was unavailing and the body could not be reached. Crushed with grief, the young wife was taken home by her relatives to mourn in secret the loss of her loved one who had been so suddenly torn from her side.

There is a well known law of glacier-progression, by observing which scientists are able to reckon the time at which bodies of ice, hidden in the Alpine crevasses, will be expelled with the melting of the mountain snows. Forty years after the unfortunate accident referred to, the widow of the lost gentleman returned to the scene of the disaster, accompanied by the same guides who had been with them on that fatal day. Patiently they awaited the melting of the snows. At last their vigilance was rewarded, and the same crevasse that had swallowed up the living form, gave up its dead. Once more the sorrowful widow looked upon the features of him from whom she had been so long sundered. But what a contrast between the two! She, with her hair snow-white, and her face seamed with the wrinkles of age; he with the ruddy features, the smooth, white brow and dark locks of youth, which the ice-casket had preserved so faithfully that the passing years made no impression upon them. It was the husband of her youth restored to her again, as he was in the happy days when they had been so dear to each other. The two bodies were of one age, though the living one had faded, while the dead had retained its youthful beauty. We may hope that if the faithful widow was depressed by the contrast, she would be relieved by trust in Him, of whose servants, it is said, their youth is renewed like the eagle's.

COMMON WORK GLORIFIED.

Writing in the Homiletic Review, Dr. Louis Albert Banks, who is now living in Cleveland, O., relates the following incident: "A prominent young man in Cleveland, whose family move in the best society circles, went home from Cornell to join a cavalry troop of that city and go to the war. His parents are wealthy, but when a show of patriotism was called for he was among the first to be heard from. At school and college he took a great interest in manual training, and learned blacksmithing. Now, what do you suppose he is doing? He is shoeing horses at Chickamauga! And he isn't complaining, either. 'Somebody must do this,' he writes home, 'and if I can be most useful to my country in this way, why I shall be satisfied. When I enlisted it was for the purpose of doing my best to win glory for the Stars and Stripes in any way that might be assigned to me. But there are many more pleasant things than working over an anvil in this climate.' All great things are achieved in that spirit."

HER OPINION OF CHRIST.

In a recent sermon on the common place man and the good he may do in the world, the Rev. J. Tolefree Parr related the following incident: One of our Methodist sisters, a cultivated, refined lady went to a wretched slum to visit a sick woman. She found the children almost naked. There was no fire. The poor woman was very sick, and too feeble almost to move, and she was lying on rags in a corner. The whole place was very dirty. The first thing the Sister did was to bring food into the home; and then, having given them a good meal, she made a fire. Then she sent out for some soap and a scrubbing-brush, and cleaned the whole place. When all had been made as snug and as clean as possible it was quite noon. She had been there all the morning. On going away she said to the sick woman, "You will be all right for to-day. I will come again in the morning and see how you get on. I will look after you; I won't see you starving." The woman said, "If you please, miss, who sent you?" The Sister replied, "The Lord Jesus Christ sent me." "The Lord Jesus Christ sent you? Well, look here, the next time you see him, tell him from me he's a good 'un, he is."

The Gospel in the Camps.

CHEERING reports of the spiritual work of the different camps continue to be received. As the camps themselves are now being subjected to important changes—some of them being abandoned—there is a corresponding change in the Christian Commission's field of activity. Evangelistic work continues as energetically as ever at all the remaining camps. Mr. Moody and the Christian Commission are hopeful that God's people everywhere will continue to sustain the Commission and its labors, both at the home camps, and in Cuba, Porto Rico and Manilla.

Some very helpful testimonies come from the camps, showing that the conversions have been deep and thorough. Rev. Dr. Toy writes from Camp Hamilton, Lexington, Ky:

> It is blessed to hear men, standing up before their comrades, testifying to the fact that though they had enlisted in the army as sinful men, they have been saved from their sins through the meetings held in the camp, and would return to their homes as Christians. And many others with testimony similar to this: "I was a Christian when I entered the army, but neglected my duty, and finally began to drink and play cards, but I am not happy and want to come back; I am done, and I want the boys to watch me."
> There are over six hundred sick in the Division Hospital, and many of the boys have no one to look after their spiritual wants, as the regiments have gone, and also their chaplains. We give those who can read, or dare read, one day Testaments; another day, Colportage books; another day, CHRISTIAN HERALD'S (we do not get enough of these); another, writing paper, and so on—each day we have something to give them, and this opens up a conversation.

THE LATE QUEEN LOUISE OF DENMARK.

Our Orphanage Work in Va.

DR. G. C. RAYNOLDS, of Van [Buren], has charge of the relief [work] established there by Dr. [C. H.] Kimball during the perilous days of [1898], writes us as follows:

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Long Country Highways

America's "National Road"—Stage-Coach Days—Modern Roads.

Hear no more the clanging hoof,
The stage-coach rattling by;
The steam-king rules the traveled world,
The old pike's left to die.

This season of the year, when woods wear gay October dress, temptations to out-door walks and drives are almost irresistible. The old-fashioned stage, which has been superceded by modern methods of progression, among them the horseless, no more lumbers along our country highways, but muscular youths and trim athletes, as they spin along rustic thoroughfares can enjoy the beauties of the country of wood, vale and hill with as much zest as though they sat on the top of a stage. Since the agitation for better roads, begun some twenty years ago, there has been a very perceptible improvement in the condition of our highways in some of our States.

The first great road of the country was the "National Road," built westward from Cumberland, Md., to the Ohio River. It was superceded, in 1853, by the extension of railways west of the Alleghanys, this road, opened to the public in 1818, was the great highway over which the bulk of trade, travel, and mails passed between the East and West. It was built at national cost—Clay and other statesmen pleading long and hard for it—and for a time maintained at national expense, but in 1831-35, Ohio, Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania took charge of it, the states collecting the tolls. Journeying to and returning from Congress, distinguished men of the day passed that highway, among them Jackson, Harrison, Clay, Webster, Houston, Polk, Taylor, Lincoln, Davy Crockett. Once, it is said, Sam Sibley, a famous driver, had the stage in hand, when it overturned, and Mr. Sibley was thrown out. He got up smiling, and said: "This is nothing the Clay of Kentucky has to what I've had the limestone of Pennsylvania." How true it is that a sense of humor may turn one's discomfiture to one's advantage.

The road passed through beautiful country; it had stately stone bridges, iron mile and mile posts, and every fifteen miles a toll-keeper's house. A gentleman who lived on the road wrote:

"Seventy four four-horse coaches have been counted in line at one time on the road, and large, broad wheeled wagons, covered with white canvas, laden with merchandise and drawn by six horses, were in sight visible all the day long at every point, besides innumerable caravans of horses, mules, cattle, hogs and sheep. The coaches were handsomely built, with cushioned and plush-lined interiors. Each coach accommodated nine passengers—except the mail, which held three. One famous old coach bore on its panels the picture of a post-boy, on a flying horse, horn in hand, and underneath in giit letters:

Homes, the herald of a noisy world,
News from all nations lumbering at his back.

He had not dreamed of telegraph wires and Atlantic cables. All along the road were wagon-yards, where drivers and teams put up for the night; also innumerable taverns," as the wayside hotels of the day were called, where traveling ladies and gentlemen, children and nurses stopped for meals or put up for the night.

Rapid construction of the present day, whether for railway or carriages, wagons or bicycles, is quite another matter from what it was when the Appian Way or even our National Road was made. Primitive and slow processes have given way to mechanical scrapers, explosives, stone-breakers, rollers, watering-carts, etc., and what it took many years to do can now be accomplished in a few weeks.

The Power of Kind Words.

If we could only remember that thoughts make words and words make things, how careful we would be not to speak or think ill of anybody. When we give any one an ill name we make it very hard for him or her to be good. "Johnnie is a bad boy," says some one: and if that is said often enough it is sure to become true whether it was so when first uttered or not. While, if we will only choose Johnnie's golden moments for the expression of our opinion — those precious times when we can truly say: "Johnnie is good;" such moments will multiply, for Johnnie will try to live up to such a reputation. We should not speak falsely, nor give praise where it is undeserved, but everybody has some virtue that we can seize upon for conversation: and we would all be eager virtue hunters if we realized that the discovery and magnifying of a few virtues multiplies them. "Give a dog an ill name," said the old proverb, "and it will stick to him." The blessed converse is true: Give man, woman or child the best name we can, and the tendency is for the beneficiary to try to deserve it.

ROAD-MAKING IN THE WEST—A TYPICAL SCENE.

An Empress' Kind Ways.

Peasants in the Caux country, Normandy, heard with profound sorrow of the Austrian Empress' death. She and her daughter, Valerie, spent a never-to-be-forgotten summer in the Chateau of Sassetot: and to this day, the neighborhood is full of stories of her goodness. She sometimes got lost in her long rides and strolls. Once, an old priest, showing her the way, and taking her for one of the ordinary visitors who sought that country for the baths, talked about the poverty and suffering in his parish. Next day, to his astonishment, a large sum of money came to him, as if "dropped from heaven." Another time, members of her suite found her in a field gossiping with a maid who was milking cows, and who had no idea that her companion was an Empress. She was always stopping her carriage in front of some peasant's cottage to caress the children, listen to the troubles of the old folks and lend a helpful hand. Her purse and sympathies were ever at the service of the needy. In other lands than those she visited are people who remember her kindness. In Kansas, David Leahy, a man of forty, recalls with pride the fact that this royal lady once kissed him. He was a little lad in Ireland, lying by the roadside reading. A hunting party dashed past: a horse's hoof struck him. The next thing he knew, a beautiful lady was bending over him, his head in her arms, was kissing him and wiping his face with her handkerchief. He was not seriously hurt. He has a coin given him by this lady, whom he discovered to be the Austrian Empress.

A New Vocation.

A young lady in Chicago has created a new profession—that of entertaining little folks at children's socials. She spent her childhood in Germany, Switzerland and Italy, where the games of children constitute a large part of the national life. She teaches these games to little Americans, devises new ones, tells them stories, acquainting them with the pretty folk-lore of their own and other lands. Her work is appreciated and brings her an income. Such a worker might be in demand anywhere, and the occupation would be beneficent, if not money-making.

The Subject of Giving.

While the Municipal Assembly of Greater New York was drafting a resolution of "gratitude and admiration," for Miss Helen Gould, because she was not only giving her money but her personal services to our sick and wounded soldiers, the Regents of the State University of California, were accepting, on behalf of the University, Miss Flood's offer of the Flood mansion at Menlo Park, with the grounds consisting of 540 acres, valued at $250,000. Thus, in the two extremes of our continent, a rich woman with a hearty good-will and unstinted generosity was helping her fellows. In the sickness and stress brought on by our recent war, women, rich, young and beautiful, have as nurses, worked in the rank and file with their poorer sisters. The truth is, that our world, from one end to the other, is beginning to throb responsively to the doctrine of Jesus Christ, and the rich are eager to help the poor—only they do not always know how. Those who give themselves—as Miss Gould and others are doing—learn how. And let not one who is poor in dollars and cents, think she has nothing to give. To give love and prayer is to give much.

THE HOME KEEPER.

About her household moving glad each day,
With heartful care of all the simplest things;
And near her side a child voice coos and sings—
She hears the noise of pattering feet at play,
And pauses oft to kiss the lips that say
"Mother!" and joys to feel the hand that clings
Close to her heart as to her apron strings—
Nor would she chide the little hand away!

Then, when the day hath drifted to the dark,
And brightening stars loom through the twilight late,
She feels the heart within her bosom stir
At every leaf that strikes the lattice. Hark!
Her life's reward—a footstep at the gate,
And love that comes to claim the love of her!

Ancestor Worship in China.

In view of the recent disturbances in China, and the attacks upon American missionaries, all showing the spirit of the old heathen religion as still actively antagonistic to Christianity, this letter from Rev. W. E. Smith, Chented, China, is of special interest:

The greatest difficulties in the way of the spread and acceptance of the Gospel among the Chinese are the superstitions of the people. They verily believe each person has three spirits — one they worship at the grave, burning paper, cash, silver, clothes, houses, etc., to supply the need in the other world. One remains in the home which the person while alive inhabited, and in the home is set up the family tablet before which the relatives burn incense and worship. They also build houses, much more beautiful and substantial, on the exterior at least, than those they themselves inhabit, and consecrate them entirely to the use of the spirits of their departed friends. These they call "Ancestral Halls." They firmly believe that these spirits frequent the places where they lived while in the flesh, and also that they have the power of bringing good or evil upon their descendants, according as they are pleased or otherwise with the services rendered and honor paid them. Therefore, to appease the wrath of these departed friends and ensure good luck to themselves, they most assiduously "worship their ancestors," and they have to be thoroughly convinced of Gospel truth before they will discontinue this service. This is only one example out of many we might cite, but enough along that line for this time.

We have no difficulty in getting an audience. A curious desire to see and hear the foreigner is sufficient to draw a crowd, and we trust the truth gradually makes its way to the inner being, and are often refreshed by evidence of this. A great difficulty in the way is the entire unfamiliarity with the words used for God, Jesus, redemption, justification, etc. They have no such ideas, and new words have to be coined.

Especially is it difficult to make the women understand. They, poor things, have never studied in their lives, have never tried to understand anything more deep than their current gossip, or newer than their daily tasks. These women must be taught as simply as a little child, and the same story repeated very often before they can take it in.

The children seem to be the hope of heathendom. Here in our mission the little girls and boys in boarding school are as bright as those at home.

Westminster's Kitchen.

We are not accustomed to think of Westminster Abbey and a kitchen in conjunction: nevertheless the recent discovery of a blocked-up doorway leading into the old refectory which ran along the whole side of the south cloister, reminds us of the time when eating was a part of the Abbey life. Beyond the refectory, and nearly half its length, is the kitchen. The laying of the tall one in the dining hall was the work of the Refectorian: the work of the Almoner was to distribute uneaten victuals to the poor. In the great kitchen there would be the equivalent for our dresser for the platters and chargers. The wood fires on the floor would require occasional encouragement from the bellows or blast-bag. Over such a fire would be cauldrons standing on three legs or hung on tripods.

Rescue Work in Philadelphia.

The Quaker City Bowery Mission and its Labors Among the Waifs and Strays of the Great Pennsylvania Metropolis.

THE neighborhood of Eighth and Vine streets, Philadelphia, has been well termed the "Quaker City Bowery," and the Rev. Chas. M. Boswell, leader of the Forward Movement, conducted by the Methodist Episcopal Missionary and Church Extension Society, built better than he knew when he opened a Mission room at 242 No. Eighth Sts., which is right in the midst of cheap theatres, dance halls, merry-go-rounds, etc. Rev. Mr. Boswell and his co-workers opened this life-saving station on May 24th, 1897, and since that time more than a thousand souls have professed conversion, and more than two thousand have asked to be prayed for; how many of these have since been led to Christ, eternity alone can reveal.

REV. C. M. BOSWELL.

Like the multitude that travels along the New York Bowery, those who can be seen in the vicinity of Eighth and Vine streets, Philadelphia, represent all classes of society: some few are respectable people who are called in the neighborhood on legitimate business, or are merely going through it to reach another part of the crowded city. Others come to attend the cheap theatres and questionable places of amusement, and quite a number of respectable citizens come to attend two of the theatres that are looked upon by the world, at least, as being a little above what might be called immoral; but the "regulars" are mostly gamblers, professional thieves, actors, actresses and immoral women.

INTERIOR OF THE QUAKER CITY BOWERY MISSION.

Of course the audience in the mission-room are made up of all the elements, and the spirit of conviction frequently takes hold of some who come in just for a moment, and many in this way are led to Christ, who could not be otherwise reached.

The waifs of the street come in to rest, and God moves with convicting power on their hearts. Gamblers, wanting to pass away some of their time, or while waiting for some one, saunter into the meeting, and have been led to the foot of the Cross.

Many and varied are the striking conversions which have taken place at this mission. One was of a well-dressed man, who first raised his hand for prayer, and afterwards went into the inquiry-room, and while kneeling next to a wretched, intoxicated woman, he was led to accept Jesus as his Saviour. Another night, a German sailor, who had just landed in the morning, was in the neighborhood bent on sinful pleasure, when the singing attracted his attention. He came into the meeting, and afterwards his testimony was: "My mother's last words were, 'remember, I will pray for you.' Her prayers have always stuck to me, and, although the men forced me to throw my Bible into the sea, and led me into all kinds of sin, I never could forget my mother's prayers, and to-night I accept her Saviour as mine."

Another remarkable case was that of a well-dressed man, who came into the inquiry-room to seek information as to the salvation of his soul. He told how he had been raised a Catholic, but he did not believe the priest could forgive his sins, neither did he have the same feeling in their meetings. John 3:16 was pointed out to him and its meaning explained; he saw the light and believed with a saving faith, and is now a regular attendant at the mission.

Efforts are not only made to have men and women accept Christ, but after conversion they are urged to connect themselves with some church, and although the movement is under the management of a Methodist Episcopal minister, converts are left entirely free to join the church of their own choice, if they have any preferences.

The work of the Quaker City Bowery Mission is wholly supported by voluntary contributions, and although the funds do run low some times, God is a good provider, and sends the money to keep it going. Its conductors have every confidence that the work will not be permitted to suffer through lack of support.

WM. K. FISHER.

SOME DAY IN YONDER CITY.

SOME day in yonder city,
With its many pearly gates,
I shall be reunited
To the soul of one who waits.
A longing has come o'er me,
For one who went before me,
And I shall see my mother
When I reach my home.

Some day in yonder city
I shall joyfully behold,
The friend of my devotion
On a throne of shining gold;
I'll see in highest glory,
The theme of song and story,
My Saviour, Precious Jesus,
When I reach my home.

Some day in yonder city
I shall wear a robe of white.
No more shall come the shadows
In the land of joy and light.
And I shall rest forever
With friends, and leave them never,
And sing the song of Moses
When I reach my home.

Dizzy After Eating?

That is because your stomach does its duty and food remains undigested. You may be cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla which gently tones and invigorates the stomach, giving it power to digest food. H. J. H[illegible] of Mertztown, Pa., says his stomach refused to work and he had dizzy spells. Since taking a few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla he is perfectly cured, can eat anything he likes without distress, and the dizziness does not return. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla and you may confidently expect a permanent cure.

The Delicate Woman

unable to operate the ordinary form of sewing-machine without fatigue, can use the SILENT SINGER AUTOMATIC with the greatest ease. The acme of perfection in construction and artistic finish, this machine is positively the lightest-running of any. Its low, broad treadle enables frequent change in position of the feet, or it can be furnished in a portable form to be effectively run by hand if desired. It has neither shuttle nor bobbin, and no tensions to adjust, but is ready for use when the needle is threaded.

Simple and compact, this machine is more easily understood, its parts are better protected from dust, it has more room under the arm, and is capable of a greater range of work, than any similar device.

The Silent Singer

has many points of preference that can easily be demonstrated by examination and comparison with similar machines.

"CELIA" sends me this lovely poem, with which this week I close:

TO OUR SWEET SINGER.

Kind greetings to our singer sweet;
We pray that she may ne'er grow old,
For many a time our weary feet
Do find the world so hard and cold.

'Tis then we love our singer dear,
And list her words and drink her cheer,
And feel our Father is so near,
That we can stay a short time here.

We hear her voice and cease to moan;
It lifts us to the great white throne.
Since glory all around hath shone,
We know we are no more alone.

The pearls we sought, yet failed to see;
The things we wished which ne'er can be.
We'll look into that jasper sea,
They there in all their beauty 'll be.

—"CELIA."

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.—Free to all Readers.

All readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved an assured cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific, just as quinine is in malaria. Rev. W. B. Moore, D.D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Kidney and bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 409 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative powers.

The good news is coming in from all over the country that Hood's Sarsaparilla is curing all forms of blood diseases, and thousands are praising Hood's Sarsaparilla, America's Greatest Medicine.

"Mary, how do you find the Ivory Soap does?"

"Best we have ever had, Madam. The starched clothes are whiter and the flannels are softer than when washed with the soap we have been using. It saves my hands Ma'am, they used to be very sore after a wash."

"Well, Mary, I intend to have you use only Ivory Soap after this, for I am told that it saves the clothes, too."

Those who have tried both common soap and Ivory Soap, say that it takes only two-thirds as much of the Ivory for a wash.

GO OR SEND.

The Alternative Presented to Every Christian in the Present Day. Acts 16:1-10.

It is strange that the church remained so long oblivious to Christ's command to preach the Gospel to every creature. The progress which has been made since the awakening at the beginning of this century, indicates what might now have been the condition of the world if a similarly organized effort had been made two or three centuries earlier. There is no benefit, however, in lamenting the delay. Our concern should be to do our whole duty now. Before we can assume the position of critics of our forefathers, we must ask ourselves whether that duty is being done. It is a fact that not only are many opportunities open to the missionaries in heathen lands that they are unable to use, but that they have to endure more hardships than they ought to bear, and both evils might be relieved if the income of the missionary societies were increased. It is a grievous reproach to the church that the progress of the Gospel should be checked by lack of funds. Yet it is so checked. There is no missionary society that is without applications for employment that must be declined. The fields are open, the workers are ready to go, but the funds to send them are not at command. We need to change the words of Christ in these days. As in his day, the harvest is plenteous, but the reapers are not few now. There is not the need to pray the Lord of the harvest that he will send more laborers, but that he will send the money to pay them the pitiful sum which they need for their bare wants. How speedily this difficulty would be removed if every Christian realized that the alternative presented to him by the Saviour, to whom he is under infinite obligation, is that of "Go or send!" But it is no other. He whose duty lies at home; and he whose mental endowments do not qualify him for missionary service have a duty to perform, a share in the glorious work that rightly belongs to them. They can give, or get, the money that is needed to send others. Just now that duty is important, and if we fail in it the responsibility is a heavy one.

JOSHUA AND CALEB.

The Turning Point in the Lives of Two Brave Men who had Faith in God. Numb. 14:6-10.

One point of difference alone existed between the reports of the ten and the two men who had been sent to examine the promised land. All agreed that it was a desirable possession, and all agreed that its owners were men of might; but they differed as to the possibility of overcoming them. The majority, taking into account the fighting capacity of their people, believed that it was not possible; the minority, remembering what God had already done for the nation and what he had promised to do, were convinced that victory was assured. The latter had faith, and that made a great difference. We are sometimes apt to think lightly of faith, but here was an instance of great results depending upon it. It was a grave responsibility to urge the people to make an attack on those formidable people, led by the sons of Anak. Yet Caleb and Joshua did not shrink from it. With God's help, it would be successful. So Caleb and Joshua said, and thereby showed what faith can do. They had seen the walled cities, the stalwart Anakim, as had their brethren, but they were not afraid. These men who had the courage to stand up and oppose the majority were of the kind of stuff of which heroes are made. There was no reckless bravado in their words, but argument based on experience and the promises of God. How much has been accomplished by such men! Even in our own day we have read of Garibaldi with a handful of soldiers chasing kings and armies out of their capitals, and there is many a town in our own land where the stand of a few men for righteousness has overborne evil. When we get depressed and tell us the church is in danger, we may well remember these two brave men who said in this supreme crisis: "The Lord is with us; fear them not."

"PUBLICK OCCURRENCES" THAT ARE MAKING HISTORY

An important department in THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, a weekly magazine founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1728.

It will give the story of important current events the world over in a condensed form. It will explain and interpret; it will throw light on many puzzling questions, on the meaning and relations of events that come to the general reader. The newspapers do not usually tell the beginnings of national and international troubles—there are usually "missing links" in their story. These lapses the Post will fill out.

"SPIRITED REMARKS" A strong editorial page. There are not many of them in the country—clever, vigorous, striking editorials from an individual point of view. The best writers have been secured to write regularly for the Post editorial page, which will be made one of its strongest features.

SHORT STORIES AND SKETCHES Nearly one-half of each issue of the Post will be given to fiction. The stories will be selected wholly for their interest, variety and literary value, and not because of the name or fame of the author. Every story will be fully illustrated by the Post's artists.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST as it is To-day

A good magazine is a good newspaper in a dress suit. It should have all the brightness, interest, enterprise and variety of the newspaper, with the dignity, refinement and poise of the magazine. The Saturday Evening Post, the oldest periodical in America, is a high-grade illustrated weekly magazine, equal in tone and character to the best of the monthlies.

CONSECRATION.

JESUS I yield my all,
Obedient to thy call,
Into thy hand;
I place my life in whole,
Beneath thy wise control,
And just command,
And trust it all to thee,
To prosecute in me
What thou hast planned.

I am all worthlessness,
And, shamefaced, must confess
My load of sin;
I have no righteousness,
No recommending dress,
Thy grace to win:
But, where my efforts fail,
Make thy rich love prevail,
Dwell thou me in.

I do not ask to see
What lies in store for me,
In future days;
I only ask to be
In all resigned to thee,
To work thy praise;
To guide my steps aright,
By walking in thy light,
Throughout life's maze.

Mine not to reason why,
Mine solely to rely,
Upon thy word;
In it thou'st promised me,
Thou ever nigh wilt be,
My way to guard;
And if I faithful be
I shall not fail to see,
My meet reward.

The Education of Moses.

Adopted Son of Pharaoh's Daughter the Avenues of Highest Egyptian Culture were Open to Him.

EDUCATION in Egypt in the time of Moses, is very interestingly and instructively described in a recent article in an English magazine by Athol Forbes. "A education," he writes, "depended, course, on the profession he was design to adopt. As a rule, certain appointments ran in families, and the son succeeded to his father; but it was by no a strict rule. A sharp, intelligent could rise from the lowest position the very highest. Merit had to go side with education, though, of course, ce played its part. A youngster's ties commenced with the alphabet, was intricate and complex. Thot, Egyptian god, is said to have revealed genious art of painting words and aking to the eyes,' who taught it to Thamos, and through the Egyptians ed to mankind generally. An old e relates that when Thot unfolded scovery to Thamos, the monarch mediately objected to it and declined the advantage of the art. He that children and young people had hitherto been compelled to apmselves diligently to learn by heart tain what was taught them, now ey possessed the means of storing owledge without trouble, would as to apply themselves, and would t to exercise their memories. The stem was most complex, and many must have been shed by the infant of those early days in their efforts hold of the 'new learning.' The ters united most of the methods for giving expression to thought. , those which were limited to the tment of the idea, and those which tended to suggest sounds. At the the use was confined to signs, in- to awaken the idea of the object mind of the reader by the picture. or less faithful, of the object itself. the educated classes there were: Priesthood; (2) the Army; (3) the ervice. These were the three great sions, and the subjects taught at eat centres of learning, like Heliopr Hermopolis, would include religionomy and astrology; magic and e of incantations; medicine, anatuse of amulets and charms; ; probably one extra language; ering, mensuration; land surveying, ction, architecture, geometry; military exercises—all athletic sports were aged; arithmetic, said to have been d by Thot; law.

The Civil Service was, perhaps, the profession, as it included the posts in the King's household, Office of Taxes, and Superintendence of Public Works. The chief butler and the chief baker in the time of Joseph would come under this head, and were probably men of refinement and education. There would also be under this head the Record Office, where a large number of men would be employed writing the national annals.

"The highest education, of course, was demanded for admission to the priesthood. Indeed the training never stopped, and embraced almost everything. The priesthood had the pick of the men. Certainly, next came the civil service. For the army the requirements were not severe, more regard being paid to the military athletic exercises. The priests were not only the ministers of religion; they were doctors and magicians, and probably lawyers. It would seem that there was in existence a degree corresponding to our M. A. Certain people were termed 'Masters of the Secrets of Heaven.'

"Great attention was paid to magic and occult science, and if a student made some happy hit, or by some cleverness made himself famous, rapid promotion was sure to come—quite independent of birth. Brains had their solid value, as is illustrated in the treatment of Joseph by his royal master. A most desirable post was to get into the regal household, in immediate attendance upon the king. Magicians were specially favored, hence the diligent study of magic. Moses, as the protege and the adopted son of a princess, would have within reach the whole range of education which I have endeavored briefly to describe. His adopted mother, as a princess royal, would have her own estate, palace, and retinue of attendants. Probably she would be a patroness of one or more of the colleges, so the lad Moses would have every facility which wealth and influence could give. His training, as proved by his after life, points to a system of education which very few people would believe to be possible at such a period. There is the flash of genius, there is the solidity of the scholar, in the man who made Israel a nation and the first fighting power of his age. No man in all the world's history has done so much as Moses. As statesman, soldier, lawyer, historian, poet, the story which fascinates us retains its attraction and redoubles its force when we read it as men in the light of modern research. How much of his marvelous success is due to his education we cannot estimate. The country of his adoption has passed away like a watch in the night, but its educational system has put its impress upon the nations which can never be effaced. The palm of being the greatest man in the world's history must be awarded to Moses, a public school lad of the time when the Pharaohs ruled in Egypt, before the first mud huts were built in the Valley of the Tiber, and when this country of ours, as it were, was not."

STARVING
in the Midst of Plenty.

That's what people with poor digestion are doing every day. They have no appetite or if they do have an appetite and eat what they require it does them no good, because the stomach does not digest it and the fermenting mass of food becomes a source of disease, of headache, sleeplessness, languor and the thousand and one symptoms of disordered digestion. Mr. Judson A. Stanion, the great Church and Sunday School worker and president Christian Endeavor Union, St. Louis, Mo., says:

"I have had to be extremely careful what I ate. Many things were indigestible, and after a hearty dinner I could scarcely keep awake. I never have been sick in bed, but have had a great deal of inconvenience from indigestion. Since I learned of the merits of Stuart's Tablets I keep them in my desk or carry them in my pocket, and find that I can eat anything at all without discomfort. They were recommended to me by a friend who is enthusiastic in their praise. I cannot afford to be drowsy after lunch, and find these tablets just the thing to aid digestion and keep all my faculties wide-awake." Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets promptly relieve and cure all forms of indigestion. They have done it in thousands of cases and will do it in yours. The reason is simple. They digest the food whether the stomach works or not and that's the whole secret. At all druggists, 50 cents a box. For book on stomach diseases giving valuable advice address F. A. BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Case of Mrs. Dr. F. J. Gregory, of Virginia, reported by F. J. Gregory, M. D., Keysville, Va.

"For eighteen months my wife, aged forty-one years, was a sufferer from a Gastro-Intestinal Catarrh, which resisted my best-directed efforts at relief. The taking of the smallest quantity of the most-easily digested food on the stomach would produce an attack of nausea and vomiting, the severity of which is seldom witnessed, and when the stomach was free of food she would have attacks of Gastralgia of the most excruciating nature. She also suffered from habitual constipation, at times with hemorrhages from the bowels. I pursued the usual line of treatment, such as simple Bitters, dilute Hydrocyanic Acid, Bismuth, etc., and called to my help two of the most skilled physicians in Southside Virginia, who supplemented my treatment with some of the newer drugs, such as Effervescing Bicarb. Potass., Lactopeptine, Carlsbad Mineral Salts, etc., but with no benefit, and so her condition went on from bad to worse until death seemed almost imminent from inanition. I then put her on a milk diet with a glass of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 2, every hour or so during the day, and after the use of the first bottle improvement was marked, and before a case of it had been used I regarded her cure as complete. It has been nearly two years since, and there has been only one slight recurrence, which was a few days since, and it readily disappeared on the use of the water for a few days."

Welcome and Forgiveness

WHAT an eloquent story such a picture as this conveys! Here, clearly, is the culminating chapter in the career of a wanderer, who has strayed far from home and friends, but who, after many vicissitudes, has turned his face toward the old roof-tree at last. THE RETURN OF THE WANDERER.

Such was the condition found in the camps by many of the workers of the Christian Commission. Mere lads in uniform were fast being reduced to the level of the worst elements around them. Vice fascinated and allured on every side, and they yielded. How many of these pitiful cases were searched out by the zealous evangelists, and the men led to forsake their sinful lives and accept Christ, may never be fully known. Thousands have been redeemed from a slavery worse than death itself. Many have been led to renew the dear old home associations, and not a few (like the subject of the picture), have gone home, footsore, weak and weary, but right with God and glad at heart, despite all humiliation, to be back in the old dwelling, every nook of which is so well remembered, and to hear the fond familiar voices in trembling accents welcoming them, whom they had perhaps mourned as dead, or given up as among the "missing" whose fate may never be known.

When such a wanderer returns, there is joy in the home which cannot be described. It is like the joy unspeakable which moved the father's heart at the return of the prodigal. A great pity and an all-embracing, generous, forgiving love, go out toward the wanderer. His mean garments, worn shoes, his wan, pinched face and thin limbs, and all the evidences of suffering and privation, are in painful contrast with the comfort and abundance of the home, which to his eyes now appears like a veritable palace with all that is needed to make one happy. If the artist had portrayed a case of this character in actual life, and from personal observation, he could hardly have been either more artistically faithful or realistically true. All the love and pity of friends go out to the unfortunate one who has come back to the fold. And if earthly friends are thus kind and forgiving, how much kinder is our Heavenly Father, who welcomes back the sin-sick, repentant child. He is nigh unto them that be of a broken heart (Ps. 34:18), and He bindeth up their wounds (Ps. 147:3). His is a pity and love deeper and broader than that of an earthly father, and however wayward the child may have been, He has no pleasure in the death of the erring one, but desires rather that he should return from his ways and live (Ezek. 18:23), and for all who do repent and accept the invitation there is the Divine promise: "If thou turn to the Lord thy God and shalt be obedient to His voice (for the Lord thy God is a merciful God), He will not forsake thee" (Deut. 4:30).

OUR MAIL-BAG

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Inquirer, Dalton, Ga. 1. What is the nature of the "preconcerted signal" agreed upon between the papal authorities and the Italian police as notice of the Pope's death? 2. Has the Pope a valet and what are his duties?

1. A window in the Vatican, near the papal apartments, is kept open by day, and with a light behind it at night. The closing of the window during the day or the extinguishing of the light at night, would mean that something serious had happened to the Pope. This custom has been in existence for some time; previous we think, to the papacy of Leo XIII. An Italian sentinel keeps constant watch of this window. 2. The Cavalier Pio Centra, the close personal attendant of the Pope, is sometimes spoken of as his valet. His bedroom is divided from that of the Pope by a partition so thin that he can hear the pontiff's breathing, and through a glass window at the head of the bed, keep his master under observation when necessary. At six A. M. he wakes the Pope, and then retires. Leo always having insisted upon robing himself. Lately, however, this routine has been modified to suit his enfeebled condition.

G. R. T., Green Top, Mo. I have heard a minister declare that the Commandments and the law were abolished by Christ. That is not true, is it?

Christ's own definition of his work was that he did not come to destroy, but to fulfil. It is somelike thing this: So long as your child is young, you put him under rules. He must not do this, he must do that, and he is obliged to give up his own inclinations, and to obey the will of his father. But you know that when he grows to manhood he will not be under your control. You naturally hope that then, he will have sense enough to see the wisdom of the course followed in his training, and will adopt voluntarily the principles he learned as a child. If he proves a good man, you know that there is no further need of your commands. Your son will do, of his own accord, the things you would command him to do, and probably do them a great deal better than when he did them under compulsion. He is not under law, but the law cannot be said to be abolished, when it is in his heart, operating as a controlling principle over his life. You know how it may be with a servant. You would get better service from one who loved you and was anxious to please you, than from one who perfunctorily obeyed the orders you gave.

A TYPICAL FRUIT FARM IN CALIFORNIA.

J. K., Vincennes, Ind. Is any principle of Christian ethics violated by a merchant who offers a prize, to be drawn for by customers who hold tickets, which show the amount of goods they have purchased from him during the year?

The principle appears to be practically that of the lottery. The only difference is that the holder does not purchase tickets, but obtains them through dealing with the merchant. The element of chance thus brings it into the category of gambling. If the tickets entitled the holder to a certain percentage on the amount he had expended, the practice would be legitimate, providing it treated all alike.

W. H. H., Washington, D. C. Is there a formula, or rule, in use here with, or at application, will determine positively and definitely, under all circumstances and conditions, whether or not a man is existent—everybody and matter [illegible]?

The question is an unusual one, and leaves the exact purpose of the inquirer somewhat obscure, although it would appear that our correspondent means to inquire if there is any rule whereby a man may know whether or not his life has been a spiritual failure. There is an infallible rule. God has implanted in our hearts a monitor which indicates what is right and what is wrong. Human nature is apt to choose the wrong, and will inevitably have its way, unless we seek and receive spiritual strength to choose the right. It sometimes happens that a man has gone so far on the wrong road that he becomes such a slave to sin that conscience is dulled, and the voice of the inward monitor is almost silenced. Such an one, if led to seek God anew, and to accept Christ and ask Divine strength to follow him as Master and Teacher, will have his conscience quickened, and will be once more able to see and walk in the path which was obscured by sin. If he be living in Christ, his life cannot be a failure; if out of Christ and in sin, it cannot be a success, no matter how many favors the world may heap upon him.

O. P. C., Shepherdsville, Ky. 1. To what race of people did the Moors, who conquered Spain, belong? 2. How long did their kings govern the Spanish nation? 3. How and when were the Moors driven out of Spain, and where are their descendants now?

1. The Moors are a mixture of Numidian, Phoenician, Roman and Arab. When the Arab conquerors of Spain invaded that country from Africa, they were called Moors. 2. The battle of Xerxes de la Frontera, in 711, gave them undisputed mastery of nearly the whole of Spain. For forty years the country was governed by emirs, appointed by the Caliphs of Damascus, after which portions of the country were reconquered, and independent Christian kingdoms arose, which were constantly at war with the Moors. 3. The conquest of Granada by Ferdinand, in 1492, which was the culmination of a long series of bitter wars, ended Moorish domination. Their descendants, who remained in Spain, were known as Moriscoes. They were expelled in 1615, to the number of 500,000, by Philip III., but a remnant of the Moriscoes, it is said, can still be found dwelling in one of the Spanish provinces.

H. W., Butte, Mont. 1. Exactly how long did the Spanish-American War last? 2. With what official acts did it definitely begin and end?

1. 114 days. 2. It began, politically speaking, with the Act of Congress, April 21, declaring that a state of war existed; and with Spain's declaration of war, dated April 25. It ended August 12, 1898, with signing of the protocol by our Secretary of State, and the French Ambassador, acting for Spain.

Subscriber, Cortland, N. Y. By whom was the following first spoken: "All is not gold that glitters"?

"All that glitters is not gold," is an expression used in Shakspeare's "Merchant of Venice." It is used by other writers also. Gray, in one of his poems, says: "Nor all that glitters, gold." Dryden, in his "Hind and Panther," has this line: "All, as they say, that glitters is not gold." Chaucer, in his "Canterbury Tales" (much earlier than any one we have quoted), makes one of his characters say:

> But althing, which shineth as the gold,
> Is naught gold, as that I have heard tolde.

This would indicate that Chaucer also had borrowed the line from some still earlier source.

M. F., Philadelphia. What are the proposed additions to our Navy—the vessels building and projected? Kindly supply whatever information you can on the matter and oblige.

The United States naval vessels under construction are as follows: First-class battleships, 8, 5 of which are well advanced. 3 just contracted for; monitors, 4, contracts just awarded; sailing gunboat, 1, for the Naval Academy; gunboat, 1, for service in the lakes; submarine torpedo boat, 1; torpedo boat destroyers, 16, contracts just being given out; torpedo boats, 23, 9 nearing completion, 2 purchased abroad, contracts for 12 just being given out; cruisers, New Orleans and Albany purchased abroad, the former is in service, the latter is not yet completed. These vessels would of themselves constitute a fair-sized navy, quite strong enough to compete with any, except the great naval powers.

Subscriber, ——, Mich. 1. Is it right for a congregation to comprise godly and ungodly members? 2. Should unconverted persons, leading good, moral lives, be admitted to church-membership? 3. Should Christian people who do not believe such methods of conducting a church is right, continue working in that church?

1. Yes, if by the word congregation you mean hearers, pew-holders and attendants. It is well that unconverted people should attend church. They should be encouraged to do so in the hope that through hearing the Gospel they may by God's grace be converted. 2. No. The church should consist of those only who have been born again and are trusting in Christ for salvation from present sin and future punishment, and are following his example in love and service to men. 3. We see no objection to their doing so. Perhaps by example and Christian kindliness and helpfulness, they may win unconverted members for Christ.

How and by whom are appointments made to the navy; what examinations and grades must be passed; what is the number of pupils, and how many years are required to complete a course?

There are allowed at the Naval Academy, one naval cadet for each member or delegate of the U. S. House of Representatives, one for the District of Columbia, and ten at large. The Secretary of the Navy notifies each Member and Delegate of any vacancy in his district. The nomination of a candidate to fill the vacancy is made (on the recommendation of the Member or Delegate), by the Secretary of the Navy. The appointments of the cadets at large, and for the District of Columbia, are made by the President. Candidates must be actual residents of the districts from which they are nominated. The examination for admission consists of reading, writing, orthography, arithmetic, grammar, geography, and history of the United States. Candidates must not be under fifteen nor over twenty years of age, and must be physically sound, well-formed and robust. The course is six years—the last two being spent at sea. It is not so plainly taught in the O[ld] tament as in the New, but there is s[ome] to show that the belief in a future [life] held by the Bible writers. The Psaln[ist] (Psa 49:15): "God will redeem my so[ul] the grave," and, again (73:24), "Th[ou] guide me with thy counsel and af[ter] receive me to glory." A HAVEN FOR SHIPWRECKED LIVES.

"Keswick Colony of Mercy" and Its Good Samaritan Work Among Fallen Men—The Settlement at Whitings, N. J.

KESWICK COLONISTS FARMING.

N the long category of moral shipwrecks, it is difficult to find one more utterly hopeless and helpless than the confirmed drunkard. His will power gone, his bodily vigor sacrificed to a baleful vice, his social position a thing of the past, his friends alienated, and, even those who should be the nearest and dearest to him, made the worst sufferers by his sin, it is not surprising that the wretched slave of alcohol should take the gloomiest view of existence, and that, with the sacrifice of his manhood, he should also have lost whatever he might have had of religion. For such cases, no ordinary remedy is adequate. Restraint, drugs, friendly counsel, the remonstrance of relatives, are all alike ineffective. Nothing short of the regenerating power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and the practical cooperation of Christian people in winning the victim of drink away from his sin, and surrounding him with wholesome influences, will accomplish the desired result.

This, in substance, is the method employed by the Keswick Colony of Mercy, of Whitings, N. J., of which a short description appeared in these columns some time ago. The colony is the creation of Mr. William Raws, for many years Superintendent of the Whosoever Mission and Rescue Home, Germantown, Pa. Mr. Raws had a wide experience among drunkards, and after many efforts of a reformatory character, came to the conclusion that a retreat in some healthful, secluded district, far from the temptations of the great cities, was a necessity in this class of Christian work.

Nearly midway between New York and Philadelphia, on the line of the Pennsylvania railroad, is Whitings, a small village in the pine wood district of New Jersey. Two miles from the village, four hundred acres of pine lands have been laid out as an industrial colony, where farming, gardening, saw-mill work, broom making, carpet-weaving and various other branches of industry are carried on. A few plain, but comfortable, buildings have been erected; and here, out of reach of saloons and breweries, and amid pure, invigorating surroundings, a number of men, broken down in body and spirit by drink, have been gathered.

The governing principle of the colony, as Mr. Raws explains it, is Christian love. "At the outset it was determined never to let sectarianism gain a foothold. And the men who come are allowed the utmost freedom. They are impressed with the idea that no man is too far gone to be redeemed, and the results have shown that here, at Keswick, men can, with God's help, break away from the drink habit and become useful, self-respecting, industrious citizens. The Bible is our book of rules. Our gates are never closed against any who have the desire to reform; but we demand sincerity of the applicant. If he is in earnest, he will find every one here ready to lend him a helping hand.

"Among our colonists are men who have been in the various professions, engineers, carpenters, etc., and all have greatly improved since they came here. Experience has proved that by building men up physically, it is much easier to bring about the work of reform."

Three of the buildings at Keswick are occupied by the colonists, two being old buildings that have been remodeled and repaired. A chapel, built entirely by the colonists, is used for regular evening services, week days, and Sunday mornings. In cutting the trees, hauling to the sawmill, building, planing, fencing, and all other labor connected with the chapel, no other hands than those of the men of the colony have been employed. For this work no wages were asked; it was performed as a labor of love, and almost every one of the thirty colonists did his share willingly.

A SCENE ON THE LAKESIDE, AT WHITINGS, N. J.

Concerning the Colony and its work, Mr. C. F. Cripps, who has long been associated with Mr. Raws in rescue work in Philadelphia and Germantown, speaks very enthusiastically, after a visit. The neighbors come in numbers to attend the services, some coming many miles. The chapel, which seats 225, will soon be too small for the crowds that gather there. Although at present the work is somewhat limited, its rapid growth encourages the hope that it may yet prove the nucleus of a colony as large as that founded by Pastor Von Bodelschwingh, in Germany, thirty-two years ago, on the banks of the Rhine, near Bielefeld, and which now covers a territory of many miles and has a population of 3,000 colonists. No salaries are paid at Keswick and there are no office expenses. Thus far the work has been purely one of faith, the necessary funds being given by Christian people in different States, according as they felt it incumbent upon them to support an effort so thoroughly unselfish and Christlike. Many of the men who have been with the Colony for a time, have been restored to their families and society, changed in heart and in body, and are now living Christian lives. One of the former writes of the Colony:

> The consecrated men at the head of this movement are building not only for to-day, but for years to come. This place is to be, under the guiding hand of God, a "City of Refuge," where the way-worn, the wounded, the storm-driven, the sin-battered, may come for a time, away from old associates and habits, and grow strong in body, while reaching out after the source of all true strength. The Gospel is preached; but best of all, it is lived in the hearts and lives of those associated with the management. . . Here are some forty men of all classes, from all conditions of society, brought to one common level by the soul and body-destroying agency—drink; voices in time past heard in some barroom or gambling hell, loud in curses and ribaldry, are now raised in sacred song. . . The central idea of the entire work is: Get right with God! The practical results attained are but the guarantee of greater and more blessed results to follow.

Superintendent Raws and his faithful wife, who is his companion in the work, relate many very remarkable experiences of answered prayer in connection with the Colony and its needs, showing how close is their dependence upon the Heavenly Father for all that is required. Never, since the day movement began, have the means failed, although the faith of the workers has, at times, been sorely tried, and they have had to undergo many privations. Many friends have been raised up for the Colony, and visitors frequently come there from different States, being interested in the peculiar character of the work and the wonderful spiritual and physical results that have been already accomplished since it was started.

From either the social or religious point of view, the Keswick Colony is unique and interesting, and well worth a visit by any who have the opportunity to investigate for themselves this remarkable illustration of practical Christian work on simple lines. Mr. Raws will gladly answer any inquiries that may be addressed to him on the subject, at Whitings, N. J.

CHAPEL BUILT BY THE COLONISTS.

Civilizing Africa.

Reports from the districts of Central Africa which have passed under the control of Great Britain, show that already the condition of the people is bettered. One traveler says: "Formerly the country was desolated by constant inter-tribal wars. The stronger peoples raided the weaker, killing thousands every year, and carrying thousands more into slavery. What is known as "the poison ordeal" was frightfully common. On the slightest charge of witchcraft sometimes an entire village was compelled to drink the poison, with the result that the majority died. A missionary has described how he has seen rows of corpses lying outside a village, killed by the poison, and left there to be devoured by the hyenas. But all this is now changed. The administration have subdued and removed most of the turbulent chiefs. They have forbidden the poison ordeal under the heaviest penalties, and now almost throughout the protectorate there is a sense of security. Villagers, who had taken refuge in marshes, and inaccessible ravines, are returning to the open country, and on the very war paths of their old enemies are building villages, and hoeing gardens. The introduction of all kinds of intoxicating liquor is forbidden, so that British Central Africa is saved from the greatest curse of South Africa.

RESCUED MEN WORKING AT THE SAW MILL.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Texts: Isaiah 35: 6; Psalms 104: 32, } Streams in the desert. } He toucheth the hills and they smoke.

MY first text means irrigation. It means the waters of the Himalaya, or the Pyrenees, or the Sierra Nevadas poured through canals and aqueducts for the fertilization of the valleys. It means the process by which the last mile of American barrenness will be made an apple orchard, or an orange grove, or a wheat field, or a cotton plantation, or a vineyard —"streams in the desert." My second text means a volcano like Vesuvius or Cotopaxi, or it means the geysers of Yellowstone Park or of California. You see a hill calm and still, and for ages immovable, but the Lord out of the heavens puts his finger on the top of it, and from it rise thick and impressive vapors: "He toucheth the hills and they smoke!"

Although my journey across the continent this summer was for the eighth time, more and more am I impressed with the divine hand in its construction, and with its greatness and grandeur, and more and more am I thrilled with the fact that it is all to be irrigated, glorified and Edenized. What a change from the time when Daniel Webster on yonder Captoline Hill said to the American Senate in regard to the centre of this continent, and to the regions on the Pacific Coast: "What do you want with this vast, worthless area, this region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts and cactus, of shifting sands and prairie dogs? To what use could we ever put these great deserts or these great mountains, impenetrable and covered with eternal snow? What can we ever hope to do with the Western coast, rock-bound, cheerless and uninviting, and not a harbor on it? I will never vote one cent from the public treasury to place the Pacific coast one inch nearer Boston than it now is." What a mistake the great statesman made when he said that! All who have crossed the continent realize that the States on the Pacific Ocean will have quite as grand opportunities as the States on the Atlantic, and all this realm from sea to sea to be the Lord's cultivated possession.

Do you know what, in some respects, is the most remarkable thing between the Atlantic and Pacific? It is the figure of a cross on a mountain in Colorado. It is called the "Mount of the Holy Cross." A horizontal crevice filled with perpetual snow, and a perpendicular crevice filled with snow, but both the horizontal line and the perpendicular line so marked, so bold, so significant, so unmistakable, that all who pass in the daytime within many miles are compelled to see it. There are some figures, some contours, some mountain appearances that you gradually make out after your attention is called to them. So a man's face on the rocks in the White Mountains. So a maiden's form cut in the granite of the Adirondacks. So a city in the moving clouds. Yet you have to look under the pointing of your friend or guide for some time before you can see the similarity. But the first instant you glance at this side of the mountain in Colorado, you cry out: "A cross! A cross!" Do you say that this geological inscription just happens so? No! That cross on the Colorado mountain is not a human device, or an accident of nature, or the freak of an earthquake. The hand of God cut it there and set it up for the nation to look at. Whether set up in rock before the cross of wood was set up on the bluff back of Jerusalem, or set up at some time since that assassination, I believe the Creator meant it to suggest the most notable event in all the history of this planet, and he hung it there over the heart of this continent to indicate that the only hope for this nation is in the Cross on which our Immanuel died. The clouds were vocal at our Saviour's birth, the rocks rent at his martyrdom, why not the walls of Colorado bear the record of the Crucifixion?

First, consider the immensity of this continental possession. If it were only a small tract of land, capable of nothing better than sage-brush, and with ability only to support prairie-dogs, I should not have much enthusiasm in wanting Christ to have it added to his dominion. But its immensity and affluence no one can imagine, unless, in immigrant wagon or stage-coach, or in rail train of the Union Pacific or the Northern Pacific or the Canadian Pacific or the Southern Pacific, he has traversed it.

I supposed in my boyhood, from its size on the map that California was a few yards across, a ridge of land on which one must walk cautiously lest he hit his head against the Sierra Nevada on one side, or slip off into the Pacific waters on the other—California, the thin slice of land, as I supposed it to be in boyhood, I have found to be larger than all the States of New England and all New York State and all Pennsylvania added together; and if you add them together their square miles fall far short of California. And then all those new-born States of the Union, North and South Dakota, Washington, Montana, Idaho and Wyoming. Each State an empire in size.

"But," says some one, "in calculating the immensity of our continental acreage you must remember that vast reaches of our public domain are uncultivated heaps of dry sand, and the 'Bad Lands' of Montana and the Great American Desert." I am glad you mentioned that. Within twenty-five years there will not be between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts a hundred miles of land not reclaimed either by farmers' plough or miners' crowbar. By irrigation, the waters of the rivers and the showers of heaven, in what are called the rainy season, will be gathered into great reservoirs, and through aqueducts let down where and when the people want them. Utah is an object lesson. Some parts of that Territory which were so barren that a spear of grass could not have been raised there in a hundred years, are now rich as Lancaster County farms of Pennsylvania, or Westchester farms of New York, or Somerset County farms of New Jersey. Experiments have proved that ten acres of ground irrigated from waters gathered in great hydrological basins will produce as much as fifty acres from the downpour of rain as seen in our regions. We have our freshets and our droughts, but in those lands which are to be scientifically irrigated there will be neither freshets nor droughts. As you take a pitcher and get it full of water, and then set it on a table and take a drink out of it when you are thirsty and never think of drinking a pitcherful all at once, so Montana, and Wyoming and Idaho will catch the rains of their rainy season and take up all the waters of their rivers in great pitchers of reservoirs, and refresh their land whenever they will.

The work has already been grandly begun by the United States Government. Over four hundred lakes have already been officially taken possession of by the nation for the great enterprise of irrigation. Rivers that have been rolling idly through these regions, doing nothing on their way to the sea, will be lassoed and corralled and penned up until such time as the farmers need them. Under the same processes the Ohio, the Mississippi, and all the other rivers will be taught to behave themselves better, and great basins will be made to catch the surplus of waters in times of freshet, and keep them for times of drought. The irrigating process by which all the arid lands between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans are to be fertilized is no new experiment.

It has been going on successfully hundreds of years in Spain, in China, in India, in Russia, in Egypt. About eight hundred millions of people of the earth to-day are kept alive by food raised on irrigated land. And here we have allowed to be waste, given up to rattlesnake and bat and prairie-dog, lands enough to support whole nations of industrious population. The work begun will be consummated. Here and there exceptional lands may be stubborn and refuse to yield any wheat or corn from their hard fists, but if the hoe fail to make an impression, the miner's pickaxe will discover the reason for it, and bring up from beneath those unproductive surfaces coal and iron and lead and copper and silver and gold. God speed the geologists and the surveyors, the engineers and the senatorial commissions, and the capitalists and the new settlers and the husbandmen, who put their brain and hand and heart to this transfiguration of the American continent! "Streams in the desert!"

But while I speak of the immensity of the continent, I must remark it is not an immensity of monotone or tameness. The larger some countries are, the worse for the world. This continent is not more remarkable for its magnitude than for its wonders of construction. Yosemite and the adjoining California regions! Who that has seen them can think of them without having his blood tingle? Trees now standing there that were old when Christ lived! These monarchs of foliage reigned before Cæsar or Alexander, and the next thousand years will not shatter their sceptre! They are the masts of the continent, their canvas spread on the winds, while the old ship bears on its way through the ages!

That valley of the Yosemite is eight miles long and a half-mile wide and three thousand feet deep. It seems as if it had been the meaning of Omnipotence to crowd into as small a place as possible some of the most stupendous scenery of the world. Some of the cliffs you do not stop to measure by feet, for they are literally a mile high. Steep so that neither foot of man or beast ever scaled them, they stand in everlasting defiance. If Jehovah has a throne on earth, these are its white pillars! Standing down in this great chasm of the valley you look up, and yonder is Cathedral Rock, vast, gloomy minster built for the silent worship of the mountains! Yonder is Sentinel Rock, 3,270 feet high, bold, solitary, standing guard among the ages, its top seldom touched, until a bride, one Fourth of July, mounted it and planted the national standards, and the people down in the valley looked up and saw the head of the mountain turbaned with stars and stripes! Yonder are the Three Brothers, four thousand feet high; Cloud's Rest, North and South Dome, and the heights never captured save by the fiery bayonets of the thunder-storm!

No pause for the eye, no stopping-place for the mind. Mountains hurled on mountains. Mountains in the wake of mountains. Mountains flanked by mountains. Mountains split. Mountains ground. Mountains fallen. Mountains triumphant. As though Mont Blanc and the Adirondacks and Mount Washington were here uttering themselves in one magnificent chorus of rock and precipice and water-fall. Sifting and dashing through the rocks the water comes down. The Bridal Veil Falls so thin you can see the face of the mountain behind it. Yonder is Yosemite Falls, dropping 2,634 feet, sixteen times greater descent than that of Niagara. These waters dashed to death on the rocks, so that the white spirit of these slain waters ascending in robe of mist seeks the heavens. Yonder is Nevada Falls, plunging seven hundred feet, the water in arrows, the water in rockets, the water in pearls, the water in amethysts, the water in diamonds. That cascade flings down the rocks enough jewels to array all the earth in beauty, and rushes on until it drops into a very hell of waters, the smoke of their torment ascending forever and ever.

But the most wonderful part of this American continent is the Yellowstone Park. My two visits there made upon me an impression that will last forever. Go in by the Moneida route as we did this summer and save 250 miles of railroading, your stage-coach taking you through a day of scenery as captivating and sublime as the Yellowstone Park itself. After all poetry has exhausted itself concerning Yellowstone Park, and all the Morans and Bierstadts and the other enchanting artists have completed their canvas, there will be other revelations to make, and other stories of its beauty and wrath, splendor and agony, to be recited. I mean literally that this Amer- ntinent is going to be all gospel- do. Christopher Columbus, when t ashore from the Santa Maria, s second brother Alonzo, when ashore from the Pinta, and his rother Vincent, when he went from the Nina, took possession of ntry in the name of the Father Son and the Holy Ghost. Satan more right to this country than I your pocket-book. To hear him the roof of the temple, where he d to give Christ the kingdoms of rld and the glory of them, you suppose that Satan was a great or that he was loaded up with ate, when the old miscreant never an acre or an inch of ground on net. For that reason I protest something I heard and saw this r and other summers in Montana egon and Wyoming and Idaho orado and California. They have vilistic names to many places in West and Northwest.

on as you get in Yellowstone Park ornia you have pointed out to you rsed with such names as "The l Slide," "The Devil's Kitchen," evil's Thumb," "The Devil's Pul- The Devil's Mush-Pot." "The Tea-Kettle," "The Devil's Saw- The Devil's Machine-Shop," "The Gate," and so on. Now it is very ch eeded that geological surveyor or sional committee or group of dis- ed tourists go through Montana oming and California and Color- ado and give other names to these places. All these regions belong to the Lord, and to a Christian nation; and away with such Plutonic nomenclature! But how is this continent to be gospelized? The pulpit and a Christian printing-press harnessed together will be the mightiest team for the first plough. Not by the power of cold, formalistic theology, not by ecclesiastical technicalities. I am sick of them, and the world is sick of them. But it will be done by the warm-hearted, sympathetic presentation of the fact that Christ is ready to pardon all our sins, and heal all our wounds, and save us both for this world and the next. Let your religion of glaciers crack off and fall into the Gulf Stream and get melted. Take all your creeds of all denominations and drop out of them all human phraseology and put in only scriptural phraseology, and you will see how quick the people will jump after them.

On the Columbia River we saw the salmon jump clear out of the water in different places, I suppose for the purpose of getting the insects. And if when we want to fish for men we could only have the right kind of bait, they will spring out above the flood of their sins and sorrows to reach it. The Young Men's Christian Associations of America will also do part of the work. They are going to take the young men of this nation for God. These institutions seem in better favor with God and man than ever before. Business men and capitalists are awaking to the fact that they can do nothing better in the way of living beneficence or in last will and testament than to do what Mr. Marquand did for Brooklyn when he made the Young Men's Christian palace possible. These institutions will get our young men all over the land into a stampede for heaven. Thus we will all in some way help on the work, you with your ten talents, I with five, somebody else with three. It is estimated that to irrigate the arid and desert lands of America as they ought to be irrigated, it will cost about one hundred million dollars to gather the waters into reservoirs. As much contribution and effort as that would irrigate with Gospel influences all the waste places of this continent. Let us by prayer and contribution and right living all help to fill the reservoirs. You will carry a bucket, and you a cup, and even a thimbleful would help. And after a while God will send the floods of mercy so gathered, pouring down over all the land, and some of us on earth and some of us in heaven will sing with Isaiah, "In the wilderness waters have broken out, and streams in the desert," and with David, "There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the sight of God." Oh, fill up the reservoirs! America for God!

Laid in a Hero's Grave.

One of Trooper Hoffmeister's Comrades at Camp Jewett, Tells the Touching Story of His Death and Funeral.

THERE are now over twenty convalescent soldiers, heroes of the Cuban War, at Camp Jewett, where they are being nursed back to health and strength. This camp, as our readers already know, is THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, at Mont-Lawn, which has been transformed into a reception camp for the invalid heroes. In these bracing October days, the convalescents may be seen sitting around the roomy porches, or strolling around the shady walks. They are great favorites with the good people of Nyack, and many delicacies are sent to them every day, through the Committee of which Mrs. G. H. Crawford is Chairman. The camp is under the management of the Women's National War Relief Association of New York, of which Miss Helen Gould is Managing Director. That benevolent lady, who has distinguished herself among American women by her kindness to the soldiers, is greatly charmed with the place and its surroundings.

C. M. Atwood, one of the soldiers at Camp Jewett, and a comrade of Peter Hoffmeister (who came there in a very weak condition and died two days after arrival), has written for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the following account of the death and funeral of his friend. Coming from one who knew Hoffmeister so well, it can hardly fail to interest our readers:

"Camp Jewett, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S pretty home for children, situated on Mont-Lawn, two miles north of Nyack, was the scene of the funeral of one of our country's heroes, returned from Santiago, Peter Hoffmeister, formerly a member of the band of the 16th U. S. Regulars, and an old soldier, arrived at Camp Jewett, Saturday evening, in company with the first instalment of convalescents, in a very weak condition as the result of much hardship and privation suffered during the campaign. Though so weak, his comrades little dreamed Hoffmeister was so soon to be claimed for a more enduring life.

"'It was so good,' were among the last words he uttered, in his quiet way. These words he was heard to use after the brief Sunday morning service at the Home. Before another sun had risen, the hero had passed into another world.

"Funeral services were held Monday afternoon in Camp Jewett chapel. The remains were escorted from the house to the chapel by six members of Waldron Post, G. A. R., of Nyack, and placed, draped with the Stars and Stripes, and covered with roses and maiden-hair fern, under the little pulpit. Rev. A. F. Pape, of the Nyack Lutheran Church, officiated, with the text, 'The beauty of Israel is slain upon thy high places. How are the mighty fallen and the weapons of war perished.' Mr. Pape delivered, briefly, a most appropriate tribute to the dead soldier. As the funeral procession approached Oak Hill Cemetery, it was met by a detail of cadets of the Hudson River Military Academy and conducted to the 'Soldiers' Plot,' where the remains of the veteran were given a military burial.

A leading preacher of Nyack, Rev. Mr. Pape uttered a committal prayer, and, as the sods were being turned on to the grave, the cadets fired a salute of three rounds.

"Among those who attended the funeral, aside from members of Waldron Post were: Mrs. E. H. Maynard, President of the Nyack Auxiliary of the Womens' War Relief Association; Mrs. G. H. Crawford, of the Committee on Convalescents' Home; Miss Collins and Miss Maynard, the matron and nurse in charge at Camp Jewett; the late comrades of the deceased, and a number of convalescent soldiers from the Home in Central Nyack. C. M. ATWOOD."

Religious services are held in the chapel at Camp Jewett every Sunday afternoon. On these occasions, the convalescent soldiers gladly attend, and the audience is further augmented by visitors from the villages nearby, and by friends who are interested in the welfare of the Camp. On Sunday, October 9, the services were conducted by Col. L. L. Robbins, a Grand Army man, and the soldiers, as well as all present, joined with enthusiasm in the singing of the beautiful Gospel hymns which the little occupants of our Children's Home have sung there for the last five summers. Interesting addresses were delivered by Mr. Robbins, Captain Joel Wilson, and Dr. Louis Klopsch. After the chapel service, supper was served in the dining-room, grace being sung before the meal.

The efficiency of the work done by the Women's War Relief Association has quickly commanded public recognition, and many facilities for housing sick soldiers in the country have been provided. The Convalescent Home at Tarrytown; St. John's and St. Joseph's Hospitals at Yonkers; the Vassar Hospital at Poughkeepsie; the hospital at White Plains; the Convalescent Home at Summit, and the hospital at Bayonne, N. J., have each given many beds. At Irvington, under care of the Irvington Auxiliary, is Woody-Crest, Miss Gould's beautiful summer retreat for crippled children, which has been enlarged and opened as a soldier's home. At Nyack, besides Camp Jewett, is the Lana-Ac-Tela Home. In New York, as a receiving and distributing centre, is Camp Walworth, lent by the Salvation Army, and named for the Director-General, Mrs. Ellen Hardin Walworth. Here Dr. and Mrs. Gallant and their assistants, welcome soldiers every day, provide for their needs in town, get their furloughs and start them home, or send them to the country, as the cases demand. Before it had been open four weeks, 1,154 men had been received and provided for. An hour spent in Dr. Gallant's office is interesting. At one moment a lot of pale, sick fellows enter, and are sent to the country; at another, a party of soldiers, brown and hale, stride in to let the doctor know how much good the country air has done them, and to be started on a happy homeward journey. The youngest guest of the association, and its special pet, is an officer's baby; its grandmother, mother and its small self came all the way from Ohio to see its soldier father.

All sorts of work drifts into the hands of the association. Where soldiers are in their own homes, and their families are too poor to provide for them, their cases, if reported, are investigated, and if found worthy, medical attention and other relief is furnished. In every detail of the work, Miss Gould has shown warm personal interest. Frank Gould, her youngest brother and her ward, has supplemented his sister's generosity with a timely gift of $5,000.

Her tender interest in this brother, who desired intensely to offer himself for the army, had much to do with Helen Gould's first sympathetic promptings towards war relief work—a sympathy which constantly broadened and deepened when she saw how much the poor, invalid soldier boys needed help.

Messiah's Kingdom Foretold.

S. S. Lesson for Oct. 30. Isaiah 11: 1-10. Golden Text, Isaiah 11: 9.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE Prophet Isaiah and the King Hezekiah had been laboring fervently in prayer against the Assyrian enemy of their land (II. Chron. 32: 20), and God had mightily intervened, and cut off in one night the host of Sennacherib which besieged Jerusalem. But in the prophecy against the Assyrian (Isa. 10: 5-34), and the "King of Babylon" (Isa. 14: 4-27), the Holy Spirit, who inspired this prophecy, has another enemy of God's people in view, the great Antichrist of the future. And in the promises here given of future glory, there is something far more than present deliverance, for the kingdom of Christ which shall be set up on the ruins of the power of the Antichrist is distinctly foretold. Isaiah 11: 1-10 is one of many passages which speak of the first and second coming of Christ as though they were one and the same, leaving no room for the present dispensation and the Christian Church, the mystery or secret which was kept hidden in Old Testament times, leaving us to infer that if the Jews, the ancient people, had received their Messiah, the Bride of Christ might have been a Jewish Bride, and the development of the Antichrist might have taken place, and the kingdom of Christ been set up about, or soon after, the time of Pentecost. But the Jews desired what so many so-called Christians desire now, Christ without the Cross, and the glory without the humiliations and the suffering, and so God's purpose was postponed.

"And there shall come forth a shoot out of the stock of Jesse, and a branch out of his roots shall bear fruit; and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and his delight shall be in the fear of the Lord" (R. V). Thus far we have the perfect, unmistakable portrait of Jesus of Nazareth. He said himself in the synagogue of Nazareth, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because he hath anointed me," etc. (Luke 4: 18), and he knew that this was written of him. And his whole life is witness to the spirit of wisdom and understanding; the spirit of counsel and might. Might "just because he had the spirit to take counsel of his Father and therefore the authority of his Father was with him, though he emptied himself" (Phil. 2: 7, R. V.), "and would of himself do nothing" (John 5: 30). "The spirit of knowledge" which he possessed, was "in the fear of the Lord." He was never independent of his Father; the fear of the Lord was his atmosphere as man all through his life on earth. It was as man with the Spirit of the Lord resting upon him that he did always those things which pleased his Father (John 8: 29), it will be as man, but in glory instead of humiliation, that he who once rode into his royal city "lowly, and riding upon an ass," shall from Jerusalem "speak peace unto the nations, and his dominion shall be from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth" (Zech. 9: 9, 10).

But the very same characteristics which marked his life on earth will mark his future reign. And this is intensely important for those who have understood that "if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him" (II. Tim. 2: 12). He learned obedience by the things which he suffered, and being made perfect or, R.V., having been made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him (Heb. 5: 8, 9). His obedience is the guarantee and power for theirs. All who reign with him must have graduated in his school. We can only be hereafter what we have yielded ourselves to him to make us while we are here on earth. It is preposterous to think that the pure and holy God-man must learn obedience, and that we, the fallen and redeemed, can step into it without learning. It is an utter misapprehension of divine realities to think that he as man must needs be made perfect, and that we, whose whole nature is evil and perverse, can ever reign with him except he succeeds in perfecting us likewise.

In his future reign as in his earthly life, Christ's delight shall be in the fear of the Lord, or, R. V., margin, "He shall be of quick understanding or scent in the fear of the Lord." When our Lord was upon earth he lived in a moment-by-moment intercourse with his Father; "the Lord God hath given me the tongue of them that are taught, that I should know how to sustain with words, or speak a word in season to him that is weary. He wakeneth morning by morning," he said (Isa. 50: 4.5, R.V.). His quick scent came from his life of prayer and dependence upon his Father. "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." "He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes nor reprove after the hearing of his ears," was literally fulfilled by the Man of Nazareth, and this will be repeated, or rather carried on, by the glorified Son of Man in his future reign over the earth when "they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem, neither shall they walk any more after the stubbornness of their evil heart" (Jer. 3: 17).

"But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth." Oh how the oppressed, the persecuted Jews in Russia, Algeria, and many other parts; the decimated Armenians, the persecuted converts from Mohamedanism who are all in danger of death; and then the weak who suffer at the hands of the strong, the widows in India, and the oppressed all over the earth, will rejoice when there shall be a reign of righteousness upon the earth! It is not right, but might which rules the world now; money is the power to which the politics of nations, national conscience, all else but the Spirit of God in his people, bends. It shall be otherwise when the Righteous One shall reign, when the law of God shall be enforced, and decisions in the courts of the land shall be made from heaven itself.

Then "the meek of the earth" shall get their rights. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5: 5), shall then be fulfilled to the letter. He shall reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. They are his own brethren, for he said, "I am meek and lowly in heart" (Matt. 11: 29). They have learned not to resist evil, they have learned to trust their interests to him, and they come into his inheritance. "He shall smite the earth with the rod of his wrath, and with the breath of his lips he shall slay the wicked." Few can estimate the power of the Word of God; what thousands of stout hearts have been broken, of stubborn wills bent, of evil lives transformed; how many broken hearts healed, how many sad ones comforted, how much darkness, turned into light. But when he shall reign, a whole land, perhaps the whole earth at one time may feel the power of that mighty Word. When Ananias and Sapphira had lied to the Holy Ghost, a word from Peter, who was full of the Holy Ghost, was enough, and the liars fell lifeless, one after the other at his feet. When the two witnesses shall testify in the awful three and a-half years of tribulation, so soon perhaps to come upon this earth, "fire proceedeth out of their mouth and devoureth their enemies" (Rev. 11: 5).

"THEY SHALL BEAT THEIR SWORDS INTO PLOWSHARES."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

FAITH in God's wisdom and love must have been very strong in Isaiah's heart when he penned the words of the lesson. Gloomy as were the prospects of the nation, Isaiah saw before it a golden future. As we have seen, he was a statesman as well as a preacher. He realized that the nation must fall a prey to the mighty power of Assyria. There was only one way in which it might be saved. If the nation had fulfilled its mission of being a teacher of righteousness to the world, God would have protected it from its enemies. But so far from being a teacher of righteousness, it was itself unrighteous. The interposition of God could not be expected, for the people had forsaken him. The nation must fall: but it would not be lost. It must go under the harrow of affliction, the cities must be desolated and the people carried away captive. But what then? In their misery the people would turn to God and he would deliver them, as he had delivered their fathers from Egypt. They would be restored to their own land and become foremost among the nations. Isaiah comforted himself with the thought, and dwelling upon it filled in the details of the picture. The chief feature was the king of the restored nation. In prophetic vision he saw him springing like a sapling from the old Davidic tree—a rod out of the stem of Jesse—and through his rule it was that the nation would develop. Isaiah sketches his ideal king, one having the spirit of wisdom and quick understanding, protecting the poor and crushing the wicked. So beneficent would be his rule, that other nations would voluntarily submit to it, and an era of peace would ensue. Hatred, envy and jealousy would disappear; there would be no more war, but men would love one another. Even the animal kingdom would feel the influence. ferocious beasts would become that a child might lead them beautiful picture of a golden a Isaiah saw dimly, but in which nize the rule of the Prince of Pe

E FALL OF THE CRESCENT IN AFRICA

w Ruthless Mohammedan Fanatic Conquered a Province—Gordon's Heroic Death—His Fall Avenged—Religious Service in His Memory.

) of the most thrilling chapters of odern history was closed by the battle of Omdurman, which, as already stated in this journal, was fought on Sept 2. It put an end to the most formidable development of Mohammedan power that has been witnessed in this century. Ten years ago, the whole of the vast region lying between Egypt and Abyssinia, which is known as the Soudan, was held by the Mahdi, whose fanat-

In e emergency, England, then newly co responsible for Egypt, determin- to fer the task of saving the Soudan General Gordon. Twice before, in 4 d 1877 he had ruled the country a half of Egypt. But that was before e r of the Mahdi. The task was very different in 1883. But Gordon was confident of his power to pacify the people, and he went out expecting to find the same enthusiasm and reverence for him that had been manifested during his former term of office. Early in 1884 Gordon reached Khartoum and received the hearty welcome he expected. But outside the city the wave of Mahdism was rising higher and higher. Flushed with victory, the Mahdi and his followers were dreaming of world-wide conquest and were growing stronger daily. It was with the utmost difficulty that Gordon could encourage the trembling garrison to hold out. His name and fame put spirit into the soldiers for a time, but the dread of the all-conquering Mahdi was in every heart. Gordon managed to get several messages through the enemy's ranks to his government. In these he told of his danger, and warned the men at the head of it that, sooner or later, they would have to deal with the Mahdi. If they postponed the task he would become master of the whole Soudan and would then invade Egypt. Gordon urged immediate action and assured his timid troops that if they would hold out, relief would soon come. Unhappily there were weeks of delay while the government considered the best means of reaching the brave commander. It was not until September, 1884, that an expedition was actually on its way. Then, instead of proceeding to Suakin, on the Red Sea, and thence westward to Khartoum—a distance of 480 miles—it started from Cairo and proceeded southward by the Nile—a distance of 1,650 miles. Hindered by difficulties on the river and harassed by the enemy, it did not come within sight of Khartoum until January 28, 1885.

Meanwhile Gordon was closely pressed in Khartoum. Provisions were running short, the garrison had lost heart, and the Mahdi was demanding its surrender. But Gordon still held out, believing that his appeals for succor must avail. Besides this, he was a devout Christian, and had unwavering faith in God. The people who were near him in those last days of suspense describe him as spending long hours in Bible reading and prayer, and then coming forth to encourage the garrison and to take new measures for the defence of the city. Eleven months he had held it against overwhelming numbers, and with a garrison sick with despair. But the end came at last.

On the morning of Jan. 26, 1885, Gordon could see from the windows of his house the Mahdi's banners within his lines. He went on the roof to see the full extent of the disaster. He knew that help was near at hand, but he could not persuade his soldiers to make another stand. He had so often assured them of the succor that did not come, that now, when it was near, they would not believe him. He left the roof, whether intending to inspire them by his presence, or to meet the death that he saw was inevitable, is not known. He had reached the head of the staircase on his way, when an Arab rushed upon him and drove his spear into his body. Gordon fell, and other Arabs set upon him, slashing him with their knives. His head was cut off and sent to the Mahdi, who had it fixed to a tree, and every one who passed threw a stone at it.

THE SOUDAN.

Two days afterwards, the British force arrived opposite Khartoum. It was easy to see that it had fallen, and hearing that Gordon had been killed, no attempt to land was made. Some unimportant battles were fought, but no real success was gained, and eventually the Soudan was left to the tender mercies of the Mahdi.

That potentate was no longer the humble dervish of three years before. His success had developed the sensualism of his nature. For several months he had left the conduct of the war to Osman Digna and Abdullah, whom he named the Khalifa and nominated as his successor. He increased his harem and led a self-indulgent life, not caring even for the adulation, akin to worship, which the people had paid to the man who had won glory for Islam. In six months from the day Gordon died the Mahdi himself succumbed. Accounts differ as to the cause of his death. Some say that he was poisoned by a woman he had foully wronged; others that he was killed by one of his generals, and others that his debauched life had its natural end. "Thus," writes a historian, "ended the Mahdi—whose career had involved the murder of a hundred thousand men, women and children, and hundreds of devastated towns and villages." The Khalifa, his successor, erected a magnificent mausoleum over his remains. Its walls are six feet thick: it is thirty-six feet square, and thirty feet high. Above this is a hexagonal wall fifteen feet high, from which springs a loft dome. The British fire, however, in the recent battle, injured the edifice, and when the city was captured, Sir H. Kitchener ordered its destruction.

Gordon's prediction of the Soudan proved true. The safety of Egypt was involved. The Khalifa, more vigorous and ruthless than the Mahdi, put down with unrelenting hand, the opposition to his own rule, and swept through the Soudan with fire and sword, destroying the enemies among his own people who would not give him the reverence they had given the Mahdi. Having suppressed all rebellion, he invaded Egypt, and was with difficulty driven out. Four years later, he made another determined invasion, but was again forced to retire. Then England realized that its declared purpose of abandoning the Soudan could not be carried out. There would be no peace in Egypt while the Soudan was in the hands of the Khalifa. Two years ago the expedition which has just won so decisive a victory was fitted out. Slowly but surely it penetrated southward from Cairo, fighting its way and strengthening its positions, until, in the last days of August, it was near Khartoum. There, under the walls of Omdurman, the Khalifa's capital, the great battle was fought which completed the discomfiture of Mahdism. The city was taken and the troops crossed over to Khartoum where, in the gardens of the house in which Gordon died, a religious service was held in his memory.

THE DEATH OF GENERAL GORDON.

A Heathen Deity in Debt.

Missionaries in India write that the natives have a peculiar explanation of the total eclipse of the sun. Such an eclipse took place last January. "The sun-god is in danger," said the crowds who gathered near Patna to watch the phenomenon. They believed they were needed to help him. He was in debt, and every one must give money to pay his debt, or a huge monster was about to swallow him! Bathing in the holy Ganges, and praying there to the sun, they were told, would help. The priests said the early morning would be most efficacious, and the people went to river and temple in immense numbers. The eclipse began soon after noon, and was total about two o'clock. During the totality the crowd became very excited. Men were trembling from head to foot with excitement and fear. "Ram, Ram, victory!" was the cry all round. Then at the instant the light reappeared there arose a loud triumphant shout, as from many thousands of voices, of "Victory!" Rapidly the multitudes melted away.

A New Campaign.

THIS autumn let all our churches start anew. The business world is waking up. Why not the religious world? If churches are a mere financial speculation, we cannot do better than keep on in the present way. If sermons were intended to be specimens of rhetoric, with approved proportions of introduction, three propositions and one application, winding up with the stereotyped "Finally, brethren!" "To be brief!" "Not to weary your patience!" "Now to conclude!" "One word more!" then we are all right now. If church prosperity is in proportion to the thousand-dollar carriages that roll up to the front of the church, and the number of tunes by the choir that the congregation cannot sing, and the length of the silk dresses that trail the aisle, then we have come to the climax of church prosperity now. But if everything which does not change a heart, or improve a life, or help populate heaven, goes for nothing in God's estimate, then we need a new campaign, harder fighting, better acquaintance with the enemy's country, sharper shooting, longer marches, hotter besiegement, more enthusiasm, holier consecration.

A Commercial Question.

THE Isthmian Canal is a commercial question. A waterway across the Isthmus will bring Oregon and Washington eight thousand miles nearer the market than they are now. The grain and lumber in which those States are so productive cannot be brought here by rail. It would not pay. But, by a cheaper water route, they can find their natural market. Let us hesitate no longer. The Suez Canal divides $12,000,000 annually among its stockholders. We have had territorial enlargement thrust upon us; let us make haste to improve the commercial facilities so long neglected. Our capitalists, the capitalists of the world, are looking for a holding for themselves and the generations to come. They will jump at the chance of such an investment.

Enlarged Churches.

THERE are those who like a church to be somewhat exclusive. They call great assemblages mobs. They want things quiet and gentle, and not made common by the masses. I knew a minister who prided himself on the fewness of his congregation. He said they were the elect. I saw that they had been elected to be bored. He preached until all had left the church save the sexton and my father. The sexton stayed because he was paid, and father endured it because he could sleep soundly whenever he willed, and, beside that, since the minister had ruined the church in every other way, it was important that somebody be on hand to see that he did not steal the cushions and carpets. The sexton would not have seen any such depredations, because he was out in front of the church, whittling sticks during the service.

Do not let us boast of our smallness. Let our churches and Conferences and General Assemblies be crowded with earnest souls.

Forward Movement.

RELIGIOUS enterprise must be a characteristic of every church that would do its duty in our day. Invention and discovery have quickened the world's pace. The age, no more afoot, is on wheels and wings. Quiet villages have been roused up by the hum of machinery, the clang of foundries, and the shriek of steam whistles. We rise after a short night's sleep, and find that the world has advanced mighty leagues. The pulse of the world beats stronger, the arm of industrious achievement strikes harder, the eye of human ingenuity sees further, the heart of Christian philanthropy throbs warmer. The earth shakes under the quick tread of scientific, moral, and religious enterprises. In such a time, a torpid, lethargic, timid church is both a farce and a blasphemy. If it do not march when God commands it to march, if it do not strike when God commands it to strike, if, when the mountains round about are full of horses and chariots of fire, it shrinks back from the conflict, God will mark it for ruin, and Christians will become inconsistent, and the minister will sleep in the pulpit, and the choir will quarrel in the gallery, and the shingles will rot, and sinners will perish, and the cause of God will be dishonored.

Merciless Politics.

WE take up our morning paper, and find that a distinguished member of our National Legislature has been arrested for dishonesty, and we know that it is merely an attempt to defeat him for a high position for which he is a candidate, and we say to ourselves: "Only another evidence of the mercilessness of American politics!" A modern mode of blackmail is to have a man arrested without reference to culpability or innocence. The intention is to put a black mark upon him, so that he can be spoken of as a criminal or a jail-bird. But the best men have been in prison. Witness Paul and Silas and John Bunyan. Jesus Christ was arrested. The fact that a man is in jail may really mean that he is a martyr.

There is enough malevolence, and revenge, and retaliation, and cruelty abroad in the world to imprison all good men and women, if the aforesaid demons of the pit could have their own way. We advise all people to decline candidature for office unless they have unbounded prowess, an all conquering spirit of patriotism, and nerves like whale-bone. Politics broke the heart and put to death Webster, and Clay, and Calhoun, and Chester A. Arthur, and Schuyler Colfax, and the most distinguished Americans who ever lived.

Political life is the roughest, most unappreciated, and most destructive to body, mind and soul. Those who have completely triumphed over the perils of such a career you could count on your eight fingers and two thumbs. But the roll of the victims it would take whole days and nights to call. American politics are a slaughter house.

America's New Responsibility.

IF the flag of the United States floats over the countries conquered in the war with Spain, fully twelve millions of people will be brought under our protection. The Philippines comprise 1,400 islands, of which 1,000 are practically uninhabited. Ten millions of people are distributed among the 400 larger ones, varying from a few hundred on the smaller islands, to over one million on Luzon, the largest of the group. In the city of Manila, its capital, are 175,000 people. In this entire territory, but one mission station exists to-day, which has been fortunate in converting less than five hundred people. The most accurate data gives the island of Cuba one million seven hundred and fifty thousand people. A year ago seven mission stations were located on the island, their representatives preaching to about fifteen hundred converts. Porto Rico has eight hundred thousand population, yet so far as can be learned, but one Protestant clergyman is officiating on the entire island.

It may be said that practically no effort has been made to evangelize Cuba. This is not due to lack of interest among religious people in this section of the globe, but no doubt to the great opposition manifested by the controlling power—the opposition shown by Spain to every effort of religious denominations, almost from the beginning of the Christian era. Pioneers of Gospel work in Mexico and Central America had every obstacle thrown in their way by the representatives of the Spanish government, and have had to overcome the bigotry and ignorance of centuries of priest craft to obtain what success they have achieved.

Spain has had a system of "instruction" in her colonies, but it is a question whether the instruction has not been more injurious than beneficial. Following the policy which has existed for centuries, the Spanish rule limited the "instruction" to a mere smattering from an educational standpoint. The system has been controlled entirely by the church, which has in many instances had much more power than the civil government itself. This is especially true in the territories we are discussing. While grand cathedrals have been built in every important city in the West Indies, many areas of country can be found, fifty to a hundred miles square, in which no schools whatever are located, and in which the natives are entirely ignorant. While many of the cathedrals have the services of a bishop or higher prelate, with an attendant train of twenty or more priests, in some of the Cuban cities having from ten to twenty thousand population, not a half dozen school teachers exist. While in the "mother country" twelve millions out of the seventeen millions can neither read nor write, and less than a million people can read only, the illiteracy in the colonies is far greater. Take the Philippines for example: It is stated on the best authority, that less than five hundred thousand of their population have knowledge of these two branches. By this is meant the Spanish language, but a few thousand knowing anything of French, German, or English.

Since Spanish domination in the West Indies and Philippines, the priests and monks sent to these portions of her possessions have had as much power over the people as the military and civil officials. As already intimated, they control the educational system, also collect a large portion of the taxes, and are more respected and feared than the soldiers and officers of the law. In addition to sharing a large share of the revenue from taxes, the representatives of the church are actually supported by the Spanish government. Of the revenue from the Philippines in 1895, about $14,000,000, it is calculated that fully $4,000,000 went into the treasury of the church. Revolution in China.

EVENTS in China have taken a turn which is deplored by the best friends of that country. It is but a few weeks ago that the young Emperor issued a manifesto intimating his conversion to Western ideas of civilization. He promised reforms in the system of education, in government and in commerce, which would have liberated China from the effect of the antiquated restrictions which had crippled her. The next news received was of his practical abdication and the transfer of his power to the Empress Dowager, one of the widows of the late Emperor. This lady is a very remarkable character. She is extremely autocratic and arbitrary, and has a capacity for government which is respected throughout China. During the Emperor's long minority the whole power of the government was vested in her hands and it was with manifest reluctance that she yielded her place to him when he came of age. She has now resumed the reins of government and the young Emperor was sent into seclusion. The announcement of the change of rulers was followed by an ominous statement of regret that his health was in a critical condition and that the services of the ablest physicians in the empire were needed for him. The persons most familiar with court life in China regard this statement as a preparation for the announcement of his death. Rumors, indeed, are in circulation that he is already dead. One has it that the Empress-Dowager rated him severely for his concessions to Western policy, and bade him drink the contents of a cup which she had caused to be prepared. Another has it that assassins followed him to the palace assigned to him by the Empress and there murdered him, by a method which left no outward trace of violence. The real facts are not known, but there is no question as to the policy which the Empress intends to pursue. She is acting under the advice of Li Hung Chang, who is the friend of Russia and the predetermined opponent of the interests of the United States, England and Japan. The Empress has already shown her animus by arresting Chang Yin Huan, the chief adviser of the Emperor, and holding him for the action of the Board of Punishments. His other adviser, Kang Yu Wei, saved himself from the same fate by taking refuge on board a British ship, which has carried him to Hong Kong. He entreats England to interfere to save the Emperor. But there is little probability of any effort being made to restore him to the throne. He is so mentally and morally weak that it would be useless to champion his cause. China is likely to learn by sad experience the truth of the Preacher's words:

Woe to thee O land when thy king is a child (Eccles. 10:16).

The Transformed Steamers.

The first of the big liners to resume her peaceful occupation, after doing duty as transport in the war, arrived at New York last week. This was the St. Louis, which is about to sail for Southampton. She has been at the shipyard of the Cramps, in Philadelphia since the Government relinquished her, and has been restored to her old form as a passenger steamer. The St. Paul and the Paris, her sister ships, will follow her across the Atlantic, and the process of overhauling and restoration in their case will be done on the other side. The revenue cutter Hudson, which distinguished herself by towing the disabled torpedo boat Winslow out of danger at Cardenas, after Ensign Bagley had been killed by a fragment of a Spanish shell, has also returned from the Norfolk Navy Yard. There was no berth at the battery for her, and she went to Erie Basin. She will resume her old occupation of taking customs officers down the bay to board incoming vessels. Very little required to be done to any of the vessels to put them in shape for their old work, and every one is thankful that the time has come for them to resume it. It would be gratifying to know that they would never more be called on to leave it for warlike operations. That time has not yet come, but we are assured that the world will yet see it.

They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more (Isa. 2:4).

A Poet's Funeral Pyre.

A singular arrangement has been made by an American poet for the disposition of his body after death. A San Francisco journal says that the poet has erected a funeral pyre on which he has ordered that his body be burned after death. This pyre is a solidly constructed rectangular piece of masonry, covers one hundred square feet and is eight feet high. It is made of boulders of various sizes set in cement. At the top of the pyre is a coffin-shaped depression in which the poet has left orders that his body be placed and cremated and the ashes then flung to all points of the compass. Nearby a granite boulder, which weighs two tons, will form the poet's tombstone. No name is carved on it, but in white letters has been painted, "To the unknown." It is difficult to understand the motive for directions so eccentric. We may hope that, as he has evidently looked forward to the time of his death, he has not forgotten that there is another part of his being which will survive. He cannot have his will as to that, but he may be at peace regarding its future if he has followed the example of the Apostle:

I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day (II. Timothy 1:12).

Two Days in a Freight Car.

Two boys were committed to the care of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children last week in New York, under peculiar circumstances. They went late one night to a police station and asked for lodging. They said that they lived at Providence, R. I., and had come to New York involuntarily. They had been playing about the railroad depot at Providence, and had noticed a car laden with bananas and other fruit. They climbed into the car and were filling their pockets with bananas, when one of the railroad employees shut the doors of the car. They were very much frightened, and shouted and hammered on the doors of the car, but could make no one hear. Presently their alarm increased, for the car began to move. They had no idea in what direction it was going, nor how far it would go before they would be released. They fell asleep eventually, and for a time were oblivious to their situation. When they awoke the car was still going, and they presumed it had continued in motion while they slept. They were hungry and thirsty, but the bananas kept them from suffering. It seemed to the boys that they were a week imprisoned, but it was really only forty-eight hours before the doors were opened. Then they found themselves in New York. They did not know what to do, so went to the police station in the hope of getting at least a night's lodging. They were turned over to the Children's Society, pending the arrival of their parents to whom a telegram was sent. We may hope that their experience will teach them a lesson. As they grow older, they will find that people who have a desire for forbidden fruit, are sometimes carried away against their will, and do not find it so easy, as they did, to get back to their Father's house:

Woe to him that coveteth an evil covetousness to his house that he may set his nest on high (Hab. 2:9).

Hanged, but Lives.

An effort is being made to secure the pardon of a prisoner now serving a sentence of imprisonment for life in the penitentiary of Jackson, Miss. The man was present at the murder of a witness, who had made certain disclosures to the Grand Jury. The victim had been warned that if he testified, he would be killed, and the threat was executed within an hour of his leaving the Grand Jury room. A brother of the murdered man singled out one member of the crowd, who had a rifle in his hand, as the one who fired the fatal shot. It now appears that he was mistaken. Evidence has been secured that the accused man was innocent of the crime. Providentially it is not too late to rectify the mistake as the man is still living. He was condemned to be hanged, but at the execution the rope broke and he fell to the ground unconscious. He was taken back to prison and revived, and it was proposed to hang him over again, but his counsel interposed with the objection that his client was already dead in the eyes of the law. The objection, however, was overruled, but the Governor was induced to commute his sentence to one of imprisonment for life. Though the ingenious plea of his counsel failed in court, the prisoner is, like all the human race, to appear before a tribunal at which an analogous plea would avail. He who has trusted in the sacrifice of Christ is dead to the law by virtue of the death Christ suffered for him.

Wherefore, my brethren ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ (Rom. 7:4.)

THE EMPRESS OF CHINA.

THE EMPEROR OF CHINA.

A Lost Art Discovered.

The wonderful power of the ancient Egyptians to preserve the bodies of the dead has been lost to the world for thousands of years. How they succeeded in keeping from decay bodies which have been found intact four-thousand years after death, many have vainly tried to find out. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat reports that a farmer of Barbour County, W. Va., has recently succeeded in making the discovery. His process is a secret at present, but he is always ready to show its results. A reporter, who called at his house a few weeks ago, saw actual proofs of his power. A little colored baby was shown to him, which was perfectly natural and lifelike, three years after death. Other bodies which are supple and of natural color after being embalmed two years, are those of a man and two women. The skin is not shrivelled or discolored as in Egyptian mummies. It appears that the farmer began his experiments one winter when there was little to do on the farm. Some friend had sent him some skins of wildcat, fox, coon and bear, and these the farmer wanted to use as rugs for his floor. He had some little chemical knowledge, which he brought into play, and he accidentally discovered a compound which, when applied to the skins, kept them soft and pliable and with their original gloss. He was interested in the discovery, and began to test its value. He treated the body of a peacock with the fluid and found that decay was arrested. Other birds and animals were treated with the same result. He shrank from touching the human form with it until a friend urged him to do so, by reminding him how thankful many bereaved people would be to know that the bodies of their loved ones could be preserved for many years. Then he obtained the body of the colored baby from the almshouse, and his experiment proved that the long lost art which had kept the Pharaohs for the sight of this generation had been discovered. When the secret is disclosed, it will doubtless be extensively used; but it can avail nothing for the dead that their bodies should be preserved. Their concern is rather that of the Apostle Paul:

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens (II. Cor. 5:1).

After an Erring Father.

The police of Columbus, O., received a novel application a few days ago. A young man from New York informed them that his father was in the city, and wanted them to detail an officer to watch him. The old gentleman, he said, had a fifteen hundred dollar draft with him and a number of other valuable documents. It was probable that he would squander the whole sum in saloons, or still more likely be robbed of them while intoxicated. The police inquired if the father was demented, but the son had to acknowledge that he had the full use of his faculties, although he was morally weak. With regret, the police declined to assist the young man, as they had no right to interfere with the liberty of any person of sound mind who did not break the laws. The son therefore failed in his mission, for his father would not yield to moral suasion. This is the reverse of the usual situation: it is generally the father who is concerned about the wastefulness and prodigality of the son. It shows how necessary was the qualification that the wise king attached to his praise of the aged:

The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness (Prov. 16:31).

Cuba's Silent Sufferers.

The Special Relief Committee Tells How They Were Helped at a Critical Time Through "The Christian Herald."

READERS of this journal, who have been interested in the relief work in Cuba, both before the blockade and since, will doubtless remember the effort that was made, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, to reach and relieve the "silent sufferers" in Havana, and elsewhere. With this object in view, a committee was appointed in March last, consisting of General Lee, ex-Officio Chairman; Mr. E. R. Johnstone, Treasurer; Mr. Charles M. Pepper, Secretary, and several other journalists, the purpose being to afford relief to those families who had been reduced through the war, from a condition of comparative comfort to destitution, and who, too sensitive to let their sufferings be known, hid themselves in the privacy of their own wretched homes, rather than apply for public relief. There were hundreds of such families in Havana. Mr. Carbonell, a business man of that city, was appointed the disbursing agent of the Committee, and a Sub-Committee of ladies (the wives of American residents of the Cuban capital), was also appointed to cooperate with the principal Committee.

We take pleasure in presenting below, the official report of the Committee, just received, which shows how thoroughly and conscientiously the work was performed. We feel assured that it will meet the warm approval of our readers, as showing how their benevolence reached many worthy cases.

Secretary Pepper's Report:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 6.

"'The Christian Herald,' New York City:

"I take the first opportunity to render an accounting of the stewardship of the American Committee for the relief of the 'silent sufferers,' which was formed in Havana last March. When we parted, the day on which Consul-General Lee withdrew from the island, it was with the expectation that, within a short time, we would be able to come together again and close up the matter; but it so happened that we scattered widely, and while I was at Santiago and Mr. Johnstone in Porto Rico, Gen. Lee was at Jacksonville, and Mr. Johnstone and I were without means of communication. Now Mr. Johnstone is in Minneapolis, and I am off for Cuba again, so that there is not much opportunity of getting together. However, I have been able to see Gen. Lee, and inasmuch as there is a balance of the fund you placed at our disposal, he agrees with Mr. Johnstone and me that it should be turned back to you. This will be done as soon as the necessary statement can be obtained, and a draft will be made out in Mr. Johnstone's name, as treasurer, and forwarded to you.

"Before this is done it is proper to give a brief account of the fund which was placed at our disposal, and the uses to which it was put. Last March when you were in Havana, personally supervising the disbursement of the money collected through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for the relief of the starving people of Cuba, I had occasion to mention to you a class of sufferers who were not reconcentrados, and who could not be reached by ordinary means of charitable distribution. These were people who had formerly been well-to-do, many of them rich. Through the war, and the causes incident to it, they had been impoverished to the degree that some of them were literally on the verge of starvation. Cases were within my personal knowledge of families who had formerly entertained American visitors, and who were now reduced to extremities which almost passed belief. With some of them it was a question either of begging, or of starving to death; and it was not to their discredit that they did not know how to beg. Other Americans in Cuba had the same experience as myself. We were satisfied that this class of people would not be reached by the ordinary agencies established for the relief of the reconcentrados. When the situation was explained to you, with the suggestion that something might be done privately for these 'silent sufferers,' you promptly met the suggestion with an offer to place a stated sum at the disposal of a responsible Committee.

"After some difficulty, a Committee, informal in its character, was formed. Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee, notwithstanding the pressure of his official duties, kindly consented to act as chairman. Though it was not possible for Gen. Lee to supervise in detail the work of the Committee, he gave it what attention he could. While he could not personally overlook the disbursement of funds, he knew those to whom this work could be trusted, and what was done, was done with his consent and approval. It is needless to say that Gen. Lee's identification with the Committee, while unofficial, was a guarantee of public confidence. Mr. E. R. Johnstone agreed to act as treasurer, while I became secretary of the Committee. A number of newspaper correspondents in Havana were informed of the plan of the work, and with the understanding that no publicity should be given their names, they approved it.

Americans as Distributors.

"Your check for $2,500 was immediately placed in our possession, and was deposited with the banking house of Zaldo & Co., the certificate of deposit being made out in Spanish gold. The amount realized through the premium on American money gave the committee a credit of $2,725, Spanish gold. This was held, subject to the check of Mr. Johnstone as treasurer, and checks were drawn by him only after consultation with other members of the Committee, and on their approval. In distributing this fund, the disbursements were kept as far as possible in the hands of Americans. No discrimination was made among the beneficiaries, because you had placed no restriction on the uses to which the money should be put, beyond the understanding that it was to be for the class known as the 'silent sufferers.'

"Of the money actually disbursed, the larger sum was paid out through a sub-Committee designated by Mr. C. F. Carbonell. Mr. Carbonell was the cashier of Zaldo & Company. Though a Cuban by birth, he was educated in the United States, and is an American citizen. He had special means of knowing the suffering among the class to which reference is made. A list of families was made up, and they were personally visited under Mr. Carbonell's direction. Mrs. Margarita Todd, the wife of Mr. Charles Todd, an American, connected with one of the steamship lines, gave her time to the work. She was assisted by a Cuban young woman and others, in whom reliance could be placed. A regular weekly allowance was made to some fifty families in proportion to their numbers and their needs. After the declaration of war Mr. Carbonell was appointed by President McKinley on the staff of Gen. Lee, and is now with the Seventh Army Corps, at Jacksonville. I have not had the opportunity of communicating with him regarding the details of the work done under his direction, but much of it came under my personal observation, and it is a pleasure to bear testimony to its efficiency. In addition to the amounts disbursed through Mr. Carbonell, I personally made disbursements of various sums through agencies known to me as trustworthy, and to meet cases which had come within my knowledge as deserving. In one or two instances, similar disbursements were made by other members of the Committee, but in every case it was on personal information regarding the persons who were succored. I do not believe a dollar went to unworthy beneficiaries.

Worthy Beneficiaries.

"In every case the relief was given with the assurance that it would be without publicity, and that the parties receiving it should have their distressing condition respected. For that reason it can be readily seen why no names can be given. However, without impropriety, it may be mentioned that among the beneficiaries were the families and relatives of several of the leading Cuban insurgents. I recall the mother of one Cuban patriot, whose life was sacrificed to the cause of freedom in the first year of the insurrection, while the mother and sister of another, who was then in the field, were relieved from distress. There were also American families aided in the same private manner. Among the receipts handed me by Mr. Johnstone, I find one which will give a better idea of the work done than would a full statement of the case. It is from one of the leading American merchants and bankers in Havana.

"'HAVANA, Cuba, March 29, 1898.

"'I have received from Mr. E. R. Johnstone the sum of $63.50, Spanish gold (twelve centenes), for which I give most sincere thanks, and I promise that said money shall be used only for relief of a widow and two daughters—American citizens—who are now in very reduced circumstances and are really worthy of this noble assistance.

"'G. LAWTON CHILDS.'

"When it became evident that diplomatic relations would be broken off with Spain, and Americans withdrawn from Cuba, assistance was given a number of persons so that they might leave for the United States. Subsequently in individual cases slight aid was afforded after their arrival in this country. For those who were not aided to leave, a special effort was made to provide, but it was of course not possible to fully insure them against suffering in the future. The best that could be done was to increase the allowance that had been made for them. This plan was followed. When Consul-General Lee was recalled from Havana in April, Mr. Carbonell, Mr. Johnstone, others who had been interested in the work of the Committee and myself accompanied him to Key West. I am informed that the banking house of Zaldo & Co., has now resumed business, and the balance of the fund, may therefore, on Mr. Johnstone's order, be returned to you.

"This ends the story of the effort which you enabled us to make towards relieving the 'silent sufferers' in Cuba. I think the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may feel assured that the quota of their contributions which went for that purpose did not go astray. Very truly yours,

"CHARLES M. PEPPER."

THE MEN-OF-WARS MEN'S READING-ROOM AT KEY WEST.

Soul-Saving in the Navy.

A PECULIAR condition of affairs exists for the seamen of our navy released from ship's duties and granted "liberty" on shore, which drops back to the beginning of the service. Yet, very few sailors are not irretrievably connected with things piratical, here and any conception of it. To the dweller on terra firma, Jack always seems a jolly, reckless sort of fellow, full of fun, and out for a "good time," which consists principally in drink and the dance-house, and with but little taste or desire for anything better.

CHAPLAIN R. E. STEELE.

Many a poor fellow, with the wages of a year, perhaps, in his pocket, landed on the Key West government dock in the afternoon, and woke next morning to find himself stiff and sore, if not bruised and bleeding, with his clothes dirty and torn, and turned-out pockets telling too clearly the story of Key West hospitality. So bad had this state of affairs become in the early part of June, that Commodore Remey was compelled to order a patrol of marines every night, and the closing of all saloons at midnight. These sailors were not all hardened old tars, who had grown used to sin in all its forms, but lads just from their mother's arms, and fine, bright young men, who had enlisted for the war or who belonged to the Naval Reserves, mingled also in the interested crowd.

The problem which confronted the writer when he landed in Key West as the authorized Naval Agent of the Army and Navy Christian Commission of the Y. M. C. A., was a hard one. What shall we do to stem this flood of temptation and vice?

A well-situated room was the first requisite, and this was easily found in the one location entirely adapted to the purpose. It was at the head of the government wharf and just across the street from the naval station. The lowest resort of all in Key West faced it on another side, and furnished the element of competition in a rivalry in which the immortal souls of the seamen were at stake. The room was brightened by the free use of cheery pictures on the pine-ceiled walls, and magazines and newspapers in great abundance covered the tables. Writing material of the best quality was supplied abundantly, and everything to meet the wants of the men were freely furnished. And with it all there was the heartiest possible welcome for every one who climbed the staircase. Every night at eight o'clock the singing of a stirring patriotic song, marked the beginning of the short evangelistic song-service which was planned for the sowing of the precious seed. Life after life has been touched and brightened, and the earnest requests for prayer, the bowed heads and tear-stained eyes, gave such evidence as satisfied the worker that some, at least, of his labor was not in vain.

Crowds, after the opening, soon began to find their way up the stairs, and in less than a month the room became too small for their accommodation, and it was necessary to move into a large factory a block away from the first location.

The men fully appreciated the efforts in their behalf. This has led to the determination to make such institutions permanent features of Christian work in the Navy, and already the plan is taking definite shape for the organization of a Navy Branch of the Y. M. C. A., with all the helpful machinery of that successful organization in use for the salvation of the sailor; not only from the temptations and sins of his life, but, through the power of Jesus, from sin itself.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

HE OLD-FASHIONED SINGING-SCHOOL.

w It Enlivened the Past—A Part of Life To-day—Music in Public Schools.

OUR picture will, no doubt, revive recollections in many minds, of old times, in which old-fashioned singing-schools and country choirs played a rt—times when in Sunday School and urch, the people, led by a chorus of sh young voices, were expected to do singing, and not to sit silent, listening operatic trills, or anthems in which they ld not join. In many an American mestead, a treasured old spinet in the ner of the parlor, and an old chest upirs, bear witness to a period when mual instruments, as well as garments, me from over the sea; and the leader of home-class was some gentle relative ose fingers lost not cunning with adncing years, and who loved to gather sweet-voiced young girls about her, d train them in the melodious art.

The old-fashioned singing-school, to ich the young people came from far d near, was a blessed outlet for youthful spirits in Colonial days, when our forefathers were inclined to take life sadly, d when amusements were few. The ging-master was an important element village life, and young men and maidens greatly enjoyed the opportunities afded for social intercourse which the ging-school gave them, and many a dding was the result of acquaintance stered in the weekly gathering, where nture lads and lassies learned to sing y rule," or "by note," under guidance of master's tuning fork and time-beat. hen part singing—with soprano, tenor, nter, alto, bass—came into vogue a et commended it thus:

As if some warbling brood should build
Of bits of tunes a singing-nest;
Each bringing that with which it thrilled,
And weaving it with all the rest.

The old-fashioned singing-school is by means obsolete; it is too pleasing an institution to fall into easy oblivion, and ntributes to the social and religious life many country neighborhoods of to-day. fact, since our public school system is ring such an impulse to popular sing-, perhaps a fresh lease on life may be parted to rural classes, who meet tother to retain their hold on the art of orus singing, and possibly after awhile ole congregations will be great choirs trained voices. At the last convention the National Educational Association Washington, Professor Winship said: Music is of service to a greater number of sons than any other art. The poorest get m it comfort and enjoyment, and the rich and peace. It may be so taught as to ch the foundations of character, and the mmon school is especially the place for ching singing.

r Little Flag.

'I hope you'll bring it back safe. I'll y for you while you're gone." It was ne6. The Eighth Ohio was boarding the Paul. Near the gangplank stood a triotic maid of less than ten summers side her mother. She had a little metal g, of which she thought highly; she nted to do something for her country. Major Edward Vollrath passed her, held out her flag, and as he bent down take it, she whispered the above words. What is your name dear?" asked the solr. Her mother, the wife of the Superindent of Pier 14, gave it. The major ried the little flag with him to the front: felt that the prayers of the child renred it talismanic. He returned home ely, and wrote to the Sup't of Docks. w York City, asking the child's address. ceiving it, he wrote her a letter of knowledgment, enclosing the little banr consecrated by her prayers, which cording to her hope and petition, he had ought "back safe." Many a soldier in life's battle—the struggle for existence, the warfare with sin—would be stronger and safer, and fight a better fight, for some little talisman that you or I could give him, or her, to "bring back safe," though that talisman be only a cheery word, a hopeful, prayerful thought, a loving smile.

Macaroni-Making.

Macaroni, the Italian dish, has become very popular in this country of late years. Until recently all the macaroni used here was imported from Italy. But the demand for it has been so great that large factories for its manufacture have been started in New York and other cities. Some of these are said to turn out five or six tons daily. All the work is done by Italians, who take great pride in making their national dish. Almost every Italian woman knows how to make macaroni. She sifts the flour, mixes, and kneads it, and rolls it out by hand; and the strings of macaroni can be seen hanging up to dry outside the little cottages in many of the Italian towns. In the factories, however, the latest improved machinery is used. The flour and water are put into a large wooden vat, in which a heavy millstone revolves and mixes and kneads the dough. After being kneaded for about half an hour, the dough is put into a large cylinder, the bottom of which is perforated. Over the cylinder is an iron lid or cover, with a strong screw attached to it. When the cover is screwed down, the dough is forced through the holes in the bottom of the cylinder and comes out in the shape in which we get it. Here men stand ready with knives to cut it to the proper lengths; it is then laid on wire trays and taken to the girls who spread it out straight to dry, and cover it with paper. The drying usually takes a week or eight days, and the room must be kept at an even temperature. After the macaroni is thoroughly dried, it is packed by Italian girls, and labeled ready for shipment.

Housekeeping on a Warship.

The housewifery of a ship of war is the envy and despair of the hearts of feminine visitors. The spotlessly clean decks, shining metal everywhere, immaculate appointments of every kind, are the result of "Jackie's" assiduous holystoning, scrubbing and painting, all of which is done like clock-work, under the eye of the executive officer. "Jackie" rises early. At 5.30 he is waked with drum-beat and bugle-call, and up from the berth-deck he climbs, carrying his hammock, which he deposits in its special receptacle, goes to his mess where hot coffee, without milk and barely sweetened, awaits him. Holystoning decks and scrubbing ladders, etc., occupies him till eight bells, when breakfast is ready. At nine the ship is cleaned up for quarters; mustering, drilling, and inspection of guns is in order. After dinner at noon there are still multifarious duties to occupy the men, for housekeeping on a man-o'-war is a complicated matter. After supper comes the play time, when "Jackie" spins his yarn and amuses himself until the boatswain's whistle echoes the last call of the day, "pipe down," and sends "Jackie" to bed. Saturday afternoon is a half-holiday, and he is let off from house-cleaning.

Oi hope yez hev no laws agin furrin kittens in this country, because she is well-mannered, an' wouldn't harm no one." Thus, Mrs. O'Sullivan, of Kerry, Ireland, explained to interested Barge Officials why she brought her cat three thousand miles.

A PRAYER.

DEAR Lord, I do not pray
The load be lifted from my weary heart;
There is a nobler way:
I would not with one single burden part.
Thou knowest best
When I may lay this duty down
And calmly rest,
Or take for weary cross a welcome crown.
But this I pray: for strength
And grace to bear e'en more
Of burdens through the length
Of life, and trials sore,
For added power to bear
Not only mine but other crosses, too,
Of sorrow and of care—
Aye, I would do e'en more; I crave but strength to do.

About Mirrors.

EIGHT million dollars worth of mirrors are sold in the United States every year. The mirror-making industry gives constant employment to over two thousand persons. According to the last Federal census, New York has 26 factories, Illinois 7, Pennsylvania 5, Massachusetts 2, Louisiana 1, California 1. By rights the latter should have more, for about one-quarter of the quicksilver of the world comes from that state. What becomes of all these mirrors? Mirrors are rarely lost and infrequently broken—even superstition lends a hand in guarding mirrors from breakage.

It has been said that women are the chief users of mirrors, but figures show that a very large proportion of the mirrors manufactured are bought by and for men. There is really nothing to be ashamed of in looking at oneself in a mirror; in fact, many of us should practice this a little more. To be indifferent to one's appearance is not a virtue, but rather the contrary. Care as to how one looks is perfectly consistent with true humility. To look the best we can is a service to those who see us. To look into a mirror day after day and see one's face growing finer and purer and sweeter, should be a lesson and a comfort. Making oneself look well does not begin and end with the toilette, though this should not be disregarded. It is in one's closet, in communion with the Highest, that one drinks in true beauty that shows itself in face, form and voice.

A Novel "Domestic Aid" System.

News of a novel and interesting plan for solving vexing domestic problems reaches us from England. It has been set afoot by the Domestic Aiders, a lately created organization, and has been dubbed a "Nickel in Slot" service.

All employees of the Domestic Aiders are uniformed, and may be found at various stations. Suppose your brasswork on the outside of the house needs burnishing. The Aiders will supply you with a man who will polish up the handle of the big front door, and polish it up right cheerfully for a cent. For three cents a day the English householder may have his steps cleaned; if there is an area to his residence, that will be put in neat order for an additional three cents. It costs three cents to have the dust and dirt removed from a window, and the pane polished inside and out. The consideration for cleaning the sills is an extra cent. Stairs, blinds, carpet rods and fireplace will receive careful attention, each article according to a schedule of rates; mending and laundry also.

"Should Wives Work?"

This question has been undergoing lively discussion in the daily press and women's journals across the Atlantic, and many views have been given pro and con. The three forcible objections urged to the wife being family bread-winner, are: 1. The man, whose wife does what he should do, deteriorates. 2. The home suffers because her time and attention is taken from it. 3. She, to support her husband and his children, dispossesses some man, willing and otherwise able to support his family. To these objections it was urged: 1. A husband, falling sick or happening to other misfortunes, needs and has a rightful claim to his wife's assistance: and that, certainly, if he is disabled through any cause whatever, she has a right to provide for herself and those who thus become dependent upon her. 2. That no natural woman will neglect her home unless the necessity to preserve it drives her forth. 3. That if necessity to support herself and family devolves upon her, she is obliged to compete with men similarly placed.

INDIA'S HALF-MILLION LEPERS.

A Great Army of Sufferers, of whom the World Knows Little — What Christianity is Doing for These Afflicted Ones.

THE HOME FOR LEPERS AT PODALPUR, BOMBAY PRESIDENCY.

TO many it will be a startling announcement that in India there are about five hundred thousand of our fellow-creatures suffering from the dread and painful disease of leprosy. In Japan there are said to be two hundred thousand, and in China the number is greater in proportion to the population than either of these.

In the vast majority of cases these poor sufferers are utter outcasts, thousands of them roaming about in a hopeless, aimless way, from place to place, receiving the bare sustenance of life from charitable passers-by; whilst others are huddled together in little groups—companions in their misery. The disease from which they suffer is the same as mentioned in the Old Testament, and with which the Lord Jesus stood face to face during his ministry of healing on earth.

The appearance of an afflicted one in whom the disease has much advanced is appalling and repulsive. The symptoms generally are the loss of fingers and toes, the sinking in of the cartilage of the nose, loss of sight, and decaying of the flesh on the limbs. This, accompanied with a husky and almost unintelligible voice, makes the poor leper one of the most pitiable sights on earth. In many cases the first appearance of the disease is only the too-sure signal for the severing of all earthly ties, be they never so dear. The afflicted one, whether husband or wife, father or child, brother or sister, is at once turned adrift as a homeless wanderer on the face of the earth, and the distinction of caste, which means almost as much as life itself to many a native of India, becomes a thing of the past; but it is due to some to record that there have been instances where parental love has overcome all fear of contagion and feelings of objection to the dread disease. "This," said the father of a terribly distorted boy (pointing to his child), is my all, my very life, for him I live; they tell me I ought to keep him separate and give him his food alone, but I never can do it, and I never will."

OLD LEPER SITTING BY HIS HUT AT KANDALA, INDIA.

The sad condition of these sufferers was laid heavily on the heart and sympathy of Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, a missionary in India, and when he returned to Ireland in 1874 his description of what he saw, touched deeply the hearts of a few personal friends, when it was proposed to try, with God's help, to do something to relieve their sufferings. For the purpose the sum of £30 (thirty pounds) annually was promised, and thus was founded the "Mission to Lepers in India." The interest spread, the publication of Mr Bailey's little pamphlet, "Lepers in India," awakened public sympathy, and at the end of that year, instead of the modest sum first guaranteed, the contributions amounted to nearly $3,000. Such an indication of divine favor was not to be mistaken, and hence trusting that yet a larger blessing would be vouchsafed, it was resolved to go forward.

From that time up to the present the mission has gone on steadily progressing in its noble and Christ like work; its object being to relieve the leper's suffering, supply their temporal wants, proclaim to them the glad news of salvation through Jesus Christ, and provide homes, not only for themselves, but also for their untainted children, who, by segregation, have been saved from the disease to the extent of 99 per cent.

The latest report shows that the society is working in fifty different centres, including China and Japan; has twenty asylums or hospitals of its own, fourteen homes for untainted children, and gives aid to eleven institutions, where work is now carried on for lepers by others.

The total number of lepers receiving help through the society's operations is 2,700. The total receipts for the past year was $38,974. The number of baptisms recorded for the year is 469. The mission has no paid agents of its own in the field, but works through the agents of whatever evangelical missionary society may be occupying the station, and is at present working in connection with eighteen different missionary societies.

From the commencement no appeals have been made, all the needs having been presented in prayer to God, who has done "exceeding abundantly" above all that was asked for. Although several times severely tested, the mission has never yet been in debt.

The famine of 1897 drove many starving lepers to the doors of some of the asylums, and through the kindness of sympathetic friends, who gave special help, the missionaries in charge were able to receive all comers. Besides this, in places where no asylum existed, there was such an influx of lepers among other starving ones that the society, in response to earnest appeals, gave grants for the building of new asylums. It will be readily understood that people in such a condition are easily impressed with the truths of the Christian religion, and the results of this work from the spiritual standpoint have been most encouraging in the past, and arouse buoyant hopes for the future. Not only has there been a large percentage of baptisms and fearless confession of Christ by most of those baptized, but a great many of these people have manifested the true spirit of their Master by patience in suffering, self-sacrifice in the interest of others, and earnest consecrated efforts to lead their fellow-sufferers to Christ. Many stories are recorded of loyalty, devotion and self-forgetfulness, amidst suffering and bodily affliction.

Out of 1,700 inmates in the various institutions, there are 1,000 Christians. That such a work as this must have a most helpful effect upon missionary work in general is beyond doubt. In some parts of India the relatives of lepers occasionally visit them and hear from their own lips the truths which have brought such peace and joy: they also see what the followers of Jesus do for the outcast and afflicted. Besides this, the thinking natives must surely feel that there is a power in the religion (as contrasted with their own), of those who give such practical help where no tie of religion or kinship binds them, when they themselves cast adrift their nearest and dearest. Notwithstanding all that has been accomplished in the past, there remains a much larger sphere of usefulness lying before the mission than they have yet been able to attain to.

In more than one instance the government representatives have offered to hand over to the mission large numbers of lepers (in one case about 200), who have been on their hands since the famine. If the mission is enabled to accept them, there will, ere long, probably be a great number of them who will enter into newness of life through believing the Gospel, of which at present they know nothing.

There are also many appeals for increased accommodations and enlargement of premises, which the mission would gladly respond to was their income sufficiently increased.

Further information concerning this intensely interesting work can be obtained from Mr. Thomas A. Bailey, 9 Phayre Road, Poona, India.

Old Versions of the Lord's Prayer.

How the English language has changed in six centuries may be seen by the following versions of the Lord's Prayer:

In A.D. 1258 it was printed thus: Fader ure in heune, haleeweide beeth thi neune, cumen thi kuneriche, thi wille beoth idon in heune and in erthe. The euerych dawe bried gif ous thilk dawe. And worzif ure dettes as vi vorzifen ure dettoures. And leve ous nought into temptation, bat delvvor of uvel. Amen.

A. D. 1300.—Fadir our in hevene, Halewyd be hi name, thi kingdom come, Thi wille be done as in hevene and in erthe. Oure urche dayes bred give us to-day. And forgive us oure dettes, as we forgive our dettoures. And lede us not into temptation, Bote delyvere us of yvel. Amen.

A. D. 1582.—Our father which art in heaven, sanctified be thy name. Let thy kingdom come. Thy wil be done, as in heaven in earth also. Giue vs today our super substantial bread. And lead vs not into temptation. But deliuer us from evil.

MR. MOODY'S BLACKBOAR

Drawing a Comparison Between the R wards of Sin and Righteousness.

IN his latest Colportage Library Volun Mr. D. L. Moody relates the f lowing experience:

When I was in California I went into Sunday School and asked:

"Have you got some one who can write plain hand?"

"Yes."

We got up the blackboard, and the less upon it proved to be the text, "Lay up yourselves treasures in heaven."

I said, "Suppose we write upon that boa some of the earthly treasures? We will gin with 'gold.'"

The teacher readily put down "gold," a they all comprehended it, for all had run that country in hope of finding it.

"Well, we will put down 'houses' next a then 'land.' Next we will put down 'f horses.'"

They all understood what fast horses w —they knew a good deal more about f horses than they knew about the kingdom God. Some of them, I think, actually ma fast horses serve as gods.

"Next we will put down 'tobacco.'" T teacher seemed to shrink at this. "Put down," said I; "many a man thinks more tobacco than he does of God. Well, then will put down 'rum.'"

He objected to this—didn't like to put down at all.

"Down with it? Many a man will sell i reputation, his home, his wife, his childr everything he has, for rum. It is the god some men. Many here are ready to sell th present and their eternal welfare for it. "I it down," and down it went.

"Now," said I, "suppose we put down so of the heavenly treasures. Put down 'Jesu to head the list, then 'heaven,' then 'River Life,' then 'Crown of Glory,' and went until the column was filled, and then just dr a line and showed the heavenly and earthly things in contrast. They could r stand comparison. If a man does that, then cannot help seeing the superiority of the he enly over the earth treasures.

It turned out th this teacher was a Christian. He h gone to California the usual hunt—go and when he s the two column placed side by si the excellence of one over the oth was irresistible, a he was the first s God gave me on th Pacific coast. He a cepted Christ, a that man came to s station when I w coming away a blessed me for co ing to that place.

HE WROTE "SWEET BY-AND-BY"...

Death of S. F. Bennett, the Author of the Famous Rescue Mission Hymn — Words that are Sung in Many Lands.

By HEZEKIAH BUTTERWORTH.

There's a land that is fairer than day,
And by faith we can see it afar,

SANG a consecrated worker late on a Saturday night, in a Rescue Mission room. A half intoxicated man, who had been struggling against the habit, started up, and listened. "Evangelist," said he, "that goes to my heart. It is song with rainbow on the cloud. But is that hope for me?"

"To the uttermost," said the evangelist. "He is able to save to the uttermost."

"I cannot resist such love as that," said the man. "But can there be a 'land that is fairer than day' for such as I? I would give the world to be able to sing, with the spirit I have seen in your face, Hallelujah, what a Saviour!'"

The tempted man was brought under the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit, and was able to sing both hymns in the divine light of his new experience.

The author of the first hymn, "There's a land that is fairer than day," or, as it is known, "The Sweet By-and-By," has recently died, and some account of the song, a rainbow song in evangelical work, will be interesting. The song has held the hearts of the people for a generation. It has been sung in evangelical work, in rescue work, in the Sunday School, in cars and on steamers, in troubled homes, beside the poor man's coffin, and in the most hopeless places; chimes have pealed it on the air. It has gone over the world, and entered into the common language of the Christian heart.

It has little merit as literature; it is hardly an Ambrosian tone, but the first two lines are very beautiful; and "a little, well written, is immortal."

The author of the words, Dr. Samuel Fillmore Bennett, of Richmond, Ill., recently died at an advanced age. Mr. Silas J. Pratt, a Western composer and director of music, has related the circumstances of the composition of the song, and a correspondent of the Boston Herald, at the time of Mr. Bennett's death, thus carefully gives the history of the ballad from Mr. Pratt's narrative:

"The music of the song was written by A. P. Webster, of Elkhorn, Wis. He was a lovable young fellow, it is said, but could not get on in this world, for he had absolutely no business ability, and his health was far from good—in fact he was a victim of consumption. Music was everything to him, and he composed many songs, some of which, like the now almost forgotten Lorena, Paul Vane and Little Maud, had become quite popular. Two or three times a year he was accustomed to go to Chicago with a roll of manuscript songs which he offered to the publishers at $25 each. His most intimate friend along in the sixties was Dr. Bennett, then lately graduated from Ann Arbor, and trying to build up a practice. One day he went into the doctor's office in a very despondent state of mind.

"'What's the matter now?' asked the physician.

"'It's no matter,' Webster replied; 'it will be all right by and by.'

"The phrase struck Bennett, who had a fancy for writing verses, and he said: 'Why not make a song of the sweet by and by?'

"'You write the words and I'll make the music,' was Webster's answer. The doctor turned to his desk and began to scribble, and in less than a half hour had accomplished his task. Webster had his violin, and after reading the lines, drew his bow, and without the least hesitation played the tune that has since been sung the world over. Two friends happened in, and when the composer had jotted down the air and supplied the other three parts, the four men sung for the first time 'The Sweet By-and-By.'

"Not long afterward Webster took a number of songs to Chicago. Root & Cady bought all of them but one, and that was "The Sweet By-and-By" which they said they didn't think worth publishing. Then he went to Lyon & Healy's, where Pratt, who had known him for several years, introduced him to the junior member of the firm. Mr. Healy, after hearing the new song played on the piano, offered $20 for it, which Webster immediately accepted. 'Poor fellow,' said Healey, after he had gone, 'I didn't have the heart to send him away without taking it.' This was in 1867. A small edition of the song was printed in the cheapest form and placed on the retail counter; but nobody wanted it, and after a time, not a dozen copies having been sold, the whole lot was consigned to an obsure corner in the wholesale department, where it remained uncalled for for a year or more."

The ballad at length found a place in a Western Sunday School song book. There grew up a popular demand for the book containing the song. Sunday Schools took up the song, and after them the evangelical world.

The singular history of the song has striking lessons for evangelical workers. One is that that which is needed will find a place. Christian work needed a song containing an expression of hope in its first lines, a bow on the cloud of sorrow. Dr. Bennett uttered the true words, and the young consumptive gave to them the interpretation of the heart in his simple music: the ballad voiced a need. It was ignored, slighted, and had to await recognition. But the heart is sure to recognize its interpreter, in all literature, music and art.

Again, the two very beautiful lines, with which the ballad begins, expresses the Gospel of Hope. Christ came with the message of hope, and the evangelist must go forth with the same message. It is said that anyone can reform if he have a sufficient reason. The darkest soul in the dives of a great city would be likely to restrain himself for a week, were one to offer him an hundred dollars. The bruised soul, in suffering or in sin, is lifted by the assurance that he may find in Christ the hope of a better world than this, and that he may make this world better by a new life. "What I have done," said poor Jerry McAuley, reviewing his revival work, "any man may do." Hope was the star that led this man to Christ.

The refrain of the song is almost childish in its simplicity, but it makes the impression, in an irresistible way, that to have the prospect of a happy future is the most desirable thing of life. It awakens this desire. What is the way to this valley of blessing? The cross. Who can uplift the eyes that weep, and lead the penitent to the hills of the goodly prospects? Christ!

For ills like this,
Christ is the only cure: Say less than this,
And say it to the winds.

The power of this song of hope in street mission work points the way of success to the evangelist. The message of life must set the cross in the sky, the bow on the cloud, and find its expression in the things that relate to the future, rather than the past. It must glow with promise.

There's a land that is fairer than day,
And by faith we may see it afar.

The Canteen in the Army.

Probably no more forceful arraignment of the canteen, which has done so much toward demoralizing the young men of our armies, has ever been uttered than that spoken by Rev. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, in a recent sermon on the subject. He said:

"I regard the canteen system, as it is worked in the camp, as the most diabolical piece of infernalism of which a government has ever been guilty. I studied its workings while I was in Tampa, and I do not hesitate to say that parents, when they give their boys to the service of their country, have more cause to fear the canteen than they have to fear Spanish bullets or Cuban fevers. It brings the worst tone of the regiment down to the barroom level. Around it gather all kinds of iniquities. It is the slums of the regiment, with forces at work helping to turn the whole regiment into a slum district. Let all who love their country, their honor and their fellowmen unite in an effort to remove this blot from our civilization."

SEEK THE SAVIOUR.

SEEK the Saviour—he is calling—
Give him now your loving heart.
He will break sin's chain enthralling,
And his blessed peace impart.

Seek the Saviour—he has sought you—
Came your sinful soul to save.
Peace and pardon he has brought you,
Love and life he freely gave.

Seek the Saviour—once he perished
Thro' his love for sinful man—
Wondrous love for you he cherished
Since the world itself began.

Seek the Saviour—gladly own him—
Let surrender be complete.
King of kings, let love enthrone him,
Lay your life at Jesus' feet.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Young Writer's Troubles—The Visiting-card Problem—Duties of a Governess, Etc.

THE story of your perplexities and ambitions, dear Edna D., touches me very closely. As I read your letter I was carried back in memory many a long year to the girl I used to be, my heart full of eager desire for service, and life, with all its possibilities lying bright before me. You have the gift of writing a very charming and interesting letter. Whether or not you can successfully write for publication remains to be seen. The only thing which makes me a little doubtful about your success is the fact that you tell me you cannot think of subjects for yourself, but must have them suggested to you by some one else. I have always held that to the born writer subjects come flying on the wings of every wind, and it appears to me, after long experience and observation, that I am right in this. However, it is not every one who can write fairly well to order.

WILL you be vexed if I remind you that commonplace things, such as hand writing, spelling and grammar are of as much importance to the successful author as are the subjects of which she writes. A common school education, which has given a young woman a thorough grounding in these particulars, will do much for her, if she be fitted in other respects for authorship, as the best college in the land can do; for once having laid a good foundation one may build on it to suit herself. Some of our best authors never went to college. Mr. William Dean Howells is a case in point, and who writes more delightfully than he, and with a more fascinating style? Endeavor every day to read a little while in some good author. Remember that the purest example of style in the world is our English Bible, and that between its covers, quite apart from spiritual help and strength, you find history, poetry, philosophy and rhetoric. The best English authors show the influence upon them of familiarity with the Bible, and a weak point of some of our younger authors to-day is their absence of acquaintance with this best of books. Rudyard Kipling, J. M. Barrie, S. H. Crockett, Wm. Black, and other able writers of the period show, unconsciously, how much they have gained from early study and constant reading of the Holy Scriptures.

TO COME back to your question, why are your manuscripts so often returned, I can only explain that there is room at the top, but the lower stages in literary work are extremely crowded. A great many people are writing very well, and you are trying to enter a field where the competition is tremendous. In the long run the persevering person succeeds, providing she has something to say and knows how to say it well. The best market is for short stories; the poorest for poetry, so do not expect to make a living by selling verses, because the probability is that depending on this you will starve. Short and sensible papers on housekeeping have a good chance of acceptance in periodicals which are devoted to woman's interests.

LUCY R. L. asks me what one is to do with visiting cards when attending a reception. If the maid at the door, holding a little tray, takes them from you, then you have no further care in the matter. At large receptions, however, it is quite usual for the guest herself to leave her cards in a receptacle provided for the purpose on the hall table, or she may, if she choose, leave her cards in the dressing room. The question of cards, puzzling as it seems to some people, is easily settled by the exercise of common sense. We leave cards when calling upon people, that they may know we have not forgotten them, and in large cities that we may tell them where we live and what are our at-home days. Dear friends who live in the country with perhaps few neighbors, and who enjoy the pleasure of neighborly visiting, have no idea how hard it is to keep up one's round of friends and acquaintances in a big town. In cities most women find it convenient to have a certain afternoon or evening in the week when they will be found at home. Then their friends may confidently go to see them, sure that they will be welcome and their hostess at leisure. For large and formal At-Homes, cards are usually sent in advance. Those who attend should leave their own cards so that there may be no mistake about their having been present. Of course you will take pains to speak to your hostess on entering, and if possible take leave of her when you go away. Beyond this, in a crowd, you have no duty to your hostess. A handsome street dress is all that is necessary to wear to an ordinary afternoon reception.

MRS. R. N. B. The colors worn this season will be quieter and richer in tone than they have been for several years. You can easily renovate your old gowns by using velvet trimming, which is always beautiful, and is this year quite in fashion.

EMELINE W. From what you tell me I should be afraid that the trouble might be cancerous. Still, you say there is no predisposition of that sort in your family history. Do not be afraid. Such troubles are often curable and the great thing is to take them in time. Consult your physician at once, and follow his advice. The difficulty of which you speak may be simply due to a little congestion. In any event, do not dwell on this, but say every day, "I will trust and not be afraid, for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and song."

ELLA P. I have written to several people about your desire to obtain the position of governess, but I think you should not make a point of being invariably one of the family. All families like, at times, to be by themselves. Especially is this so where the husband is a busy man of affairs who has very little time to be with his wife. If people give you a pleasant room of your own, you should be contented to sit there in the evening, not always expecting to be one of the household group. You can certainly entertain yourself there by reading a pleasant book or writing letters.

STARVING

In the Midst of Plenty.

That's what people with poor digestion are doing every day. They have no appetite or if they do have an appetite and eat what they require it does them no good, because the stomach does not digest it and the fermenting mass of food becomes a source of disease, of headache, sleeplessness, languor and the thousand and one symptoms of disordered digestion. Mr. Judson A. Stanion, the great Church and Sunday School worker and president Christian Endeavor Union, St. Louis, Mo., says:

"I have had to be extremely careful what I ate. Many things were indigestible, and after a hearty dinner I could scarcely keep awake. I never have been sick in bed, but have had a great deal of inconvenience from indigestion. Since I learned of the merits of Stuart's Tablets I keep them in my desk or carry them in my pocket, and find that I can eat anything at all without discomfort. They were recommended to me by a friend who is enthusiastic in their praise. I cannot afford to be drowsy after lunch, and find these tablets just the thing to aid digestion and keep all my faculties wide awake." Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets promptly relieve and cure all forms of indigestion. They have done it in thousands of cases and will do it in yours. The reason is simple. They digest the food whether the stomach works or not and that's the whole secret. At all druggists, 50 cents a box. For book on stomach diseases giving valuable advice address F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

To Catarrh Sufferers.

For twenty-five years the most successful treatment of nasal and throat catarrh has been in the New York and Philadelphia Nose and Throat Hospitals. Years of careful observation and experiment led them to put supreme confidence in the treatment of cleanliness and antisepsis. This they use continually, and this is the treatment by EUCALOL.

But the enormous prevalence of Catarrhal troubles (afflicting 90 per cent. of the inhabitants of the United States) made it impossible to treat one in ten thousand cases. Hence, at the suggestion of one of the most eminent specialists, the EUCALOL COMPANY was formed to open to the public at a nominal price the benefits of this remarkable treatment.

EUCALOL is, to repeat, a treatment based on antiseptic cleanliness—the method used in the Nose and Throat Hospitals of New York and Philadelphia. It is not the catch-penny cure-all of the quack, but a prescription perfected by years of scientific trial and study by the leading specialists in the world

Unequaled Free Trial Offer.

In order to prove the curative power of Eucalol and our confidence in it, we will gladly send to any reputable person a complete outfit, with full directions, for two weeks' trial. If at the end of that time it has not benefitted you, return it and no charge will be made. If you find it helpful, send us 75 cents by mail or express money order.

EXPERT TREATMENT.—For 75c. you may have a month of the treatment given by the most successful and expensive nose and throat specialists. This unparalleled offer cannot be of long duration, so send in your name and address without delay.

THE EUCALOL TREATMENT is the only real scientific treatment of Catarrh and Catarrhal affections. It is in no sense a quack remedy, but the essence of the combined knowledge of the greatest physicians of the world.

It is based on absolute cleanliness. It consists of an antiseptic wash to thoroughly cleanse the nostrils, removing all accumulated mucous and dry scabs, and the application of an antiseptic balm, healing and soothing to the irritated mucous membrane. Both are pleasant to use, the effect is instantaneous and delightful, and persistency in their use is sure to effect a cure. The Eucalol Treatment is so cheap as to be within the means of everyone. The free trial offer makes it possible to try it without risking a cent. Address

Millions Need the Gospel.

South America, "The Neglected Continent" and its Teeming Populations—Great Opportunities for Missionary Work.

SOUTH AMERICA is 4,700 miles long, and is to-day the grandest and neediest of all mission fields. Over 3,000 miles wide, with an area of 7,750,000 square miles, it has a coast line of nearly 13,000 miles. It has been smoked in the fire of centuries of persecution and superstition. It is twice the size of all Europe, more than twice the size of the United States, and contains one-fifth of the land surface of the globe. Within the territory of this land is to be found every variety of climate. With the exception of a few peaks in the Himalayas, it has the largest and highest mountain range in the world. Its river system is matchless in proportion. The Mississippi and the Nile combined do not equal in extent the Amazon and its confluents, within the basin of which, all the States of the Union, Texas excepted, might be comfortably located.

God has been profuse in the bestowment of his bounties upon the country. Its natural resources are well-nigh inexhaustible. The mineral wealth exceeds California and Colorado combined. The great pampas are capable of feeding the flocks of the world. Famed are the tropical productions also. India is out-classed by its coffee, spices and fruits, and for centuries the wealth of its timber and precious woods have been the admiration of Europe. The agricultural resources have not been developed, but they are unlimited. It is difficult to comprehend the exceeding fulness of the riches undeveloped in this wonderful land, and yet almost all of its States are bankrupt, owing to the indolence of the people, political corruption and continual rebellions. The estimated population of South America is about 37,000,000, one-fifth of whom are Europeans of unmixed descent, and about 4,000,000 negroes, 5,000,000 Indians and the remainder mixed races, with a preponderance of Indian blood. Among the latter, the Zamboes, offsprings of Indians and negroes, are the most immoral and degraded.

Educational advantages are meagre: far behind those of enlightened nations. Much advance has been made, however, during the last twenty years. In some parts, countries chiefly under the control of the priesthood, are most backward in establishing public schools. Ecuador and Bolivia, with a population of nearly 4,000,000, have barely 900 schools, which is less than one-third compared with Venezuela and Colombia, where a more liberal government exists. It is difficult to speak of the religious condition of the people without seeming to desire to reflect upon a system which has been largely responsible for the condition of affairs already cited. However, high officials of the Roman Church in this country have acknowledged that the religious condition of South America is a disgrace to Catholicism. There is nothing to which it can be compared but the condition which prevailed in Europe in the sixteenth century.

The interior provinces of Brazil, Matto Grosso, Amazonas, a large portion of Goyaz and Para, the Gran Chaco, and the eastern part of Bolivia, are pagan. The rest of the continent, along both coasts, is under the control of the Church of Rome.

Frank Vincent, in a recently issued book, speaking of a procession during Passion week, says:

At night, about nine o'clock, a large religious procession paraded the principal streets. The houses were all illuminated by lamps and candles, and fireworks were intermittently discharged. First came a number of men with rattles, then followed a sacristan, bearing a large cross, boys swinging incense censers, then two long lines of torch-bearers in red and black gowns. Children came next, dressed in gay-colored gauze with wings to counterfeit angels. A wooden effigy of Christ was then in order, and the priest followed, singing a plaintive hymn. All the bells of the church were tolled. The people seemed quite ignorant of the significance and solemnity of the ceremony in which they were participants. All were laughing and talking; many of the men were smoking and some of the women were behaving in the most sportive manner. The bearers of the effigy were so overwhelmed with the humor of some joke which had been passed around, that they staggered in a manner which threatened to make the image topple over on their heads.

The secret of the difference between the northern and southern halves of this hemisphere is to be traced, we believe, to the fact that the one had an open Bible, and the other had not. These people need the humanizing, civilizing, Christianizing influence of the Word of God. They need the ringing voice of the evangel of righteousness. They need laws which will give to Protestants the same liberty of conscience in that Catholic country which the Catholics have been granted in this Protestant country.

Already some little work has been done in the direction indicated. Some three hundred missionaries are scattered throughout the continent, but what are they among so many millions? There needs to be an awakened interest. The facts concerning the country need to be spread broadcast, and messengers of the Gospel of Peace need to be despatched with the Word of Life. In addition to the mission work already in progress, the South American Evangelical Mission entered this much neglected field. It has sent out a number of consecrated workers and its headquarters in St. Paul, Minn., is a centre of active preparation for the evangelization of "dark places" of that land, whose people have lain for centuries in the bondage of ignorance and superstition.

The Paper in His Pocket is an indication of a boy's taste and character, and much of his success in life depends on the answer to the question, "What is the paper in his pocket?" Does it draw him upward or drag him downward? If he carries YOUNG PEOPLE'S WEEKLY in his pocket to read in odd moments it is bound to make him a brighter and better boy. YOUNG PEOPLE'S WEEKLY is a paper with a purpose. That it succeeds in arousing young folks' interest and sustaining it from week to week and year to year is shown by its circulation of nearly 225,000 copies a week. If you know a boy who should be learning to like good reading, see that he is supplied with becomes a pleasing occupation, provided it was stitched on a Singer Automatic. The elastic seam made by this machine is perfectly safe when locked, but can be taken apart in an instant when unlocked. Thus its use is especially desirable for the clever woman who wishes to make over a garment so that it may conform to the changing styles. Whether in the hands of the amateur or the expert, this simple bit of mechanism is the most convenient and effective of any.

Remodeling a Gown

Having all the advantages claimed for other "automatic" sewing machines, the Silent Singer has many points of preference that can easily be demonstrated by comparison. Of faultless construction and finish, it is absolutely the lightest-running, the simplest and most compact. It is more easily threaded, and its parts are better protected from dust. The broad treadle better promotes the health and comfort of the operator, because it is lower and the position of the feet can be changed at will. These points are worthy careful consideration by those of delicate health or unaccustomed to continuous use of a sewing machine.

God's Work in the Camps.

Sick and Well Coming to the Cross—Many Conversions Reported by the Christian Commission's Faithful Evangelists.

GLORIOUS results are reported from the Southern military camps where spiritual work is being earnestly carried on by the faithful laborers of the Christian Commission. From Camp Cuba Libre, Jacksonville, Fla., comes the following:

The boys came down here full of patriotism, ready to fight for their country, but now that hostilities are suspended they are longing for home. They are face to face with an enemy far more fatal than the Spanish bullet—the dreaded fever. It is a sad sight as I pass through the hospital wards and see so many strong, noble forms wasting away, far from home and loved ones.

The other day I sat beside the cot of a fine-looking young fellow who was so low that he could scarcely speak, but oh, the look of joy and peace that came over his face as I told him of the Great Physician, Jesus; and in husky whispers he asked me to pray for him.

It is terrible to think that so many are going down without the comfort of Jesus, but I know it will gladden your hearts when I tell you that many are daily accepting Christ.

I am stationed in the Second Illinois Regiment; they are all from Chicago, and are a fine-looking lot of men. They all think a good deal of the Y. M. C. A. tent, and would do anything for me. Nearly every hour of the day the tent is filled with them, writing letters and reading. They appreciate the work and know we are their friends.

A deep spiritual work is now going on in this regiment. Sin has got an awful foothold here, but grace is abounding and many souls are being daily converted. We are trying to get the army canteen out of the regiment. It is ruining many a man. E. H. CHAPIN.

From Camp Hamilton, Lexington, Ky., Rev. D. S. Toy writes:

Two weeks ago I approached a young man from the Fifth Pennsylvania, but he would not talk with me. The next day I tried him with the same success. On the third day I missed him, he having been transferred. I did not see him again until Tuesday of this week, when I saw him in one of the worst typhoid wards. As I approached him, I said: "Are you from the Fifth Pennsylvania?" His reply was: "Yes, I am." I knew then it was my man. I said to him: "Your regiment has gone, and your chaplain has gone; is there anything I can do for you?" And looking into my face with such a sad look, he said: "Yes, please pray for me." I prayed for him as requested. After prayer, I asked him if he were a Christian; he said he was not, but wanted to be. I explained the plan of salvation, and before I left he accepted Christ. The next day when I called, I said: "Well, how is it to-day?" With a cheerful look and smile, he said: "It is much better. I am satisfied." When I asked him if there was anything I could do for him, he said: "I wish you would write to my father and tell him I have accepted Christ and intend living a Christian life." I did as he requested.

Next to him was a man from the Ninth Pennsylvania. I had several colportage books in my hand, and was about passing him when he said: "Would you let me read one of those books?" Handing him what I had from which to make a selection, I noticed that he took The Way to God. I then asked him if he was a Christian. His reply was: "I am not, but I want to be. You gave me a Testament several weeks ago in one of the other wards, and it has been the only companion I have had since my regiment has gone; but, sir, the more I read it, the more desire I have to be saved, and I have resolved, when I return home, I will be a Christian." I argued that it was not wise to wait until then. Before I left him, he put my hand in his and said: "By God's help I will live to serve him."

Our tent work is not void of interest. On Wednesday evening we had a great meeting in our Brigade tent; this tent is close to the Second Missouri, Third Mississippi and the First Territorial (composed of men from Arizona, Oklahoma, New Mexico, etc., etc.). This was the first appearance of this latter regiment, and the tent was crowded inside and many were on the outside. My subject was: "What must I do to be Saved?" At the close fully one hundred raised their hands for prayer, and some came forward, showing their earnestness in their request. Just as I was about to close, one young man stepped to the platform by my side and said: "Will you let me say a word?" I said: "Yes, say on." He said: "Boys, I was a Christian when I left home; since I have been in the army I have not lived as a Christian should. I am ashamed of myself. I promise here to-night, God helping me, to live differently in the future, and I want you all to help me." It was simply grand to see those noble young men come forward and grasp his hand, with a "God bless you, comrade, we will stand by you." D. S. TOY

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST has been published weekly since 1728—170 years—and is unique in illustration and literary excellence.

AMERICAN KINGS AND THEIR KINGDOMS
Will tell the stories of the several greatest money-monarchs of our country—how they acquired and how they retain their power.

THE POST'S SERIES OF PRACTICAL SERMONS
By the great preachers of the world; it gives real, personal non-sectarian help toward better living.

A page bearing this title gives an entertaining collection of short bits of that sort of reading that one does not care to miss—anecdotes, information, the strange and the wonderful are all touched upon interestingly.

THE PASSING OF THE OLD NAVY
Two charming articles on the romance, antique customs and duties of the old trading-vessels, the progress of modern naval science, and how invention has killed much of the poetry of sea life. One of the best American illustrators of marine life is now painting pictures that will accompany this series.

THE PERSONAL SIDE OF AMERICA'S GREATEST ACTORS A series of articles portraying our best-known actors in their home life, and showing its relation to their struggles and successes. The series will open in an early number with the "Personal Side of Sol. Smith Russell," to be followed by four others, profusely illustrated by photographs and original drawings.

The regular subscription price of the POST is $2.50 per year. It is offered on trial for so small a sum simply to introduce it.

There are 16 pages every week, the same size as THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, and as handsomely illustrated and printed.

THE CALL OF ELISHA.

he Turning-Point in the Career of the Prophet. I. Kings 19:19–21.

How severe is the struggle that some men have to make when the call to service comes to them! Wesley relates how long he hesitated before he could bring himself to the distasteful duty of pen-air preaching. Cromwell declared iat he prayed God not to put him to his rrible work. Father Matthew did not egin his great temperance work until fter long prayer, he found there was no ternative that he could conscientiously ke. Many a young man with the honors graduation fresh upon him, has gone me with a sinking heart to the father id mother whose sacrifices have made s success possible, knowing that he ust almost break their hearts by telling em of his call to preach the Gospel in a athen land. In the brief narrative of lisha's call, there is the pathetic tone of similar struggle. Elijah asked, "What ave I done to thee?" but he knew. To e conscientious young man the home e, with all its joys and family associa- ons, was no longer possible. He must and leave all, and Elijah knew that he ould do so. His request for permission go home and bid father and mother rewell, showed that he was an affec- onate son. It was no light matter to ave them, and to leave them for such a t. Elijah even then was a fugitive. His ork had put his life in peril and it was is work that Elisha was invited to con- ue. Not every Christian youth would ve heard or heeded such a call. But lisha went, marking his entrance on a new reer by an act which indicated the ality of his decision. He had no rther use for oxen and he lays them id the plough on the altar. Henceforth is the servant of God and of Elijah. was the same spirit which dwelt in braham and Moses, and the disciples o left their nets to follow Christ. In ery age God has such men, who will rve him at any cost. The call may not me to us, but the spirit that would re- ond to it should be in every redeemed ul. The need may never come, but all earth should be held so lightly, that if e call should come there will be no hesi- tion or shrinking from the sacrifice and e service.

Progress in China.

From Foochow, Rev. W. L. Beard rites to the Missionary Herald, that the ogress reported in April last is being adily maintained. A very large num- r of applications for membership have en received in all the churches of that strict. Many have been deferred, not cause the candidates do not give satis- ctory evidence of conversion, but in der to give the test of time in cases of cent change. Three chapels have been dicated in connection with the station cently, and all were paid for with native nds. At one of the chapels which has en dedicated the place was secured by tive Christians, and the expense borne ainly by two persons, one of whom is in a all way of business as a seller of cakes. is in spite of the fact that the Chinese e heavily taxed to pay the war indemnity.

ntinuance of the Through Express Train between New York and Atlantic City, via Pennsylvania Railroad.

On account of the heavy autumn travel between w York and Atlantic City, the Pennsylvania ilroad Company will continue its through ex- ss train during the Fall and Winter seasons. has always been customary heretofore to with- aw this train about the first of October, but the vel has continued so heavy this year that for the t time it has been found necessary to keep it in vice throughout the Fall and Winter months. is train leaves West Twenty-third Street Sta- n at 1.50 P. M. (Cortlandt and Desbrosses eets 2.10 P. M.) week-days. It is a vestibuled in composed of Pullman buffet parlor cars and nnsylvania Railroad standard couches. Atlantic City was never so attractive at this sea- . The weather is superb. Outdoor exercise, ich has always been a feature of its Fall and inter life, has received a new impetus from the endid golf links of the new Country Club. The ks rank very high and are attracting a great deal attention among eastern players. All the large beach front hotels will remain open rough the Winter.

It is stated that the soldier boys who had kept eir blood rich and pure with Hood's Sarsapa- la stood the long hard marches in the tropics uch better than those who were less wise.

FREE RHEUMATISM CURE

A Liberal Way to Prove that Gloria Tonic Cures Rheumatism — Thousands of Sufferers Have Been Permanently Cured — A Free Trial Package Mailed to All Who Apply.

It is safe to say that nearly everybody who has rheumatic pains has doctored till they are discouraged. They are disgusted with remedies that cost money and won't try another unless it is proven to be a specific for the disease and not a mere drug to sell. This is why John A. Smith who discovered a remarkable cure for rheumatism sends free to all a trial of his remedy so that the sufferer may know positively that Gloria Tonic cures the disease.

There are many people who are afraid to try even this free sample package fearing that it may contain something harmful. But all such are assured that Gloria Tonic is entirely safe and cannot harm even a baby.

Write for a free sample today. If you have a friend who suffers ask him to write also to Mr. Smith so that every person afflicted with rheumatism may be released from the terrible pains of this ruthless disease.

Address Mr. John A. Smith, 642 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis., and he will send a free trial package of Gloria Tonic by return mail, prepaid, or a full sized box may be obtained from your druggist for $1.00.

HELPFULNESS.

How Sympathy and Tact May Help a Brother to Bear His Burden. Ex. 17:8-13; Gal. 6:1-5.

At first sight there seems a contradiction in Paul's two statements as to the bearing of burdens. Having said that "every man shall bear his own burden," it does not appear reasonable to enjoin us to "bear one another's burdens." But in experience we learn how much truth there is in both the statement and the command. Every one has his burden. With some it is poverty, with others domestic trial, with others horrible proclivities which are continually trying to get control, with others some other of the multitude of ills that afflict humanity. In every lot, even the most enviable, there is the one source of sorrow or worry. We may be sure when we see a man irritable or depressed, that there is a cause for it. He is bearing his burden, and he finds it heavier and more galling than usual. He must bear it himself, as the Apostle says, but is it not possible for his brethren to make it lighter for him by their sympathy? Sometimes practical help may lighten it, especially if the burden is poverty. In other cases a little effort and tact will help. There is in New York a man who is afflicted with a periodical desire for intoxicating liquor. For a few weeks he is not troubled by it, but then comes a day when he feels that he will die if he does not get drink, and the craving is intolerable. At such times, instead of yielding to it, as he used to do, he goes to the house of a friend, who knows his burden, and has promised to help him bear it. When he appears, his friend lays aside his business, or his pleasure, and gives himself up entirely to the miserable man's diversion. He will go with him for a day's fishing, or to visit a picture gallery, or in some other way help to occupy his thoughts, or in any case give him cheerful companionship in his ordeal. It may be inconvenient, it certainly is never a pleasant task, but it is obedience to the Apostle's injunction. He bears his brother's burden. So it is in sickness. The friendly visit to the sick-room does not make the sufferer's pain any less, but how often he derives from the visit new strength and courage to bear it! If the love of Christ be really in the heart, it is sure to manifest itself in this way. Our brother's burden becomes ours by divine right, and our strength helps to sustain him.

The New Tabernacle.

Progress is being made with the rebuilding of the Metropolitan Tabernacle in London, which was the scene of the labors of the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon. The amount contributed so far is $22,920, which with the $110,000 received from the insurance companies, leaves a comparatively small sum to be raised. The portico and walls of the Tabernacle left by the fire are retained, and will be repaired. The materials will, as far as possible, be fire-proof, wood being replaced by iron. The auditorium will be of the same width as before, but the length will be reduced by thirteen feet six inches. This reduced length, while it enables the pastor to get nearer to the audience, and improves the proportions of the building, also gives opportunity to add to the number and size of the vestries, and to provide commodious baptizing rooms. The total seating capacity will be about 4,500.

Have You Asthma In Any Form?

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for every form of Asthma in the West African Kola Plant. Kola which has lately been sold in the medical journals. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, West Va. writes: I was a victim of Asthma of thirty years standing, and Mrs. J. Reinhardt of No. 117 Second St. Washington D. C. writes that for years she had to sleep propped up in a chair. The Kola Plant cured her at once. Marshall C. Lewis, editor of the Farmers' Magazine, of Washington D. C. was also cured when he could not lie down for fear of choking, and Hon. J. C. Clute, of Greely, Iowa and others have sent similar testimony, proving it truly a wonderful remedy. If you suffer from Asthma in any form we advise you to send your address to the Kola Importing Company, No. 1164 Broadway, New York, who to prove its power will send a Large Case by mail free to every reader of The Christian Herald who needs it. In return they only request that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. It costs you nothing and you should surely send for it.

HOW LUNG DISEASES BEGIN.

Dr. Hunter's Lecture. No. 3.

Lung diseases always begin in the mucous membrane lining the air passages. This membrane is peculiarly exposed to every cause of disease which exists in the atmosphere. Our breathing carries the air into and through every tube and cell of the lungs. Cold raw air, sudden variations of its temperature, smoke, dust, poisonous gases, malaria and all other floating impurities in it, are inhaled with our breath. Were it not for the epithelium which covers and protects this mucous lining of the air passages and lungs, it would be impossible for us to maintain life amid the perils threatening life through our breathing.

ACUTE CATARRH.

In health the mucous lining of the air passages is kept moist by natural exhalations of mucus. When anything inflames it, the lubricating mucus ceases to flow and the membrane becomes dry, swollen, redder than natural and very tender, and there is a feeling of heat, itching and fullness in the affected part. We can see the changes produced by the inflammation in the mucous lining of the nostrils and throat, and know that the same changes are taking place lower down in the larynx, wind-pipe and bronchial tubes, which are lined by the same membrane. The swelling of the mucous lining of the nose shuts up the passages and any effort to breath through them excites sneezing. If the attack is at all severe it is followed by a general feeling of chilliness, or a tendency to shiver with some fever and a quickened pulse. The dry membrane, after a time, begins to secrete a clear acrid water which scalds the nostrils and upper lip over which it flows. Gradually it becomes opaque, then thicker, less irritating and more yellow in color. As this change takes place the swelling subsides, the soreness passes off and the patientis able to breathe again freely through the nostrils.

Such is the usual course of a cold in the head or acute catarrh of the nostrils. When it goes down the larynx into the lungs, as it is liable to do, we call it a catarrh of the lungs or bronchitis. If often travels from one part to another, the one that it leaves growing better as the others gets worse. If often climbs up into the frontal sinuses, causing headache and oppression, or outward into the internal ears causing deafness, or through the lachrymal passages to the eyes causing tears to flow over the cheeks.

These acute catarrhal attacks are so common that few people are able to pass a winter without being affected by them in some degree. There usual cause is cold, but not so often from breathing cold air as from getting wet feet or being exposed to high winds or to draughts of air which chill some part of the body and drive the blood from it. The seat of the disease is not the part which is chilled, but that to which the blood is driven. The weakest part is the one that sufiers. If that be the head it shows itself in catarrh, if the lungs in bronchitis or pneumonia. These acute head colds are so common and so generally pass away withcut apparent injury to health that people are apt to think them unimportant, but they are the beginning of every serious and dangerous lung disease. They are never so slight that they do not leave some injury to the membrane and make us more liable to their return. They wear out the natural resistance of the body and make us subject to the slightest exposure. They always become chronic in time, and, when they do, we are never free from discomfort and danger. No affliction is more disgusting to sensitive people than a chronic catarrh, and none so liable to end in consumption as chronic bronchitis.

Colds are easily cured and the liability to them greatly diminished. A bottle of COLD CURE, costing a dollar, and a box of COLD TABLETS, costing fifty cents, will safeguard a family for six months from all dangers and save them from all doctors' bills for such attacks.

To be Continued.

Legh Richmond's Memory.

MISS Julia Balch, of Washington, D. C., a reader of this paper, a short time ago received a letter from a lady in London—a granddaughter of the celebrated Legh Richmond—containing some very interesting information. Miss Balch has forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this extract from the letter in question, which will be read with keen appreciation by many who know of the life-work and saintly character of Legh Richmond:

"A traveler in the Isle of Wight, England, has found, lately erected in the old Brading Church, a mural tablet to the memory of Legh Richmond, placed there by his descendants. A copy of the inscription lies before me, which many will be pleased to read. It is:

"To the memory of the Rev. Legh Richmond, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, Rector of Turvey, Bedfordshire, and Chaplain to His Royal Highness, the Duke of Kent.

"He began his ministry by acting as curate, in charge of Brading and Yaverland, from 1797 to 1805.

"He has left the record of his faithful and loving care for the people of Brading in the story of "Jane, the Young Cottager." This work is one of a volume, entitled, "The Annals of the Poor," including the "Dairyman's Daughter," which was translated into five foreign languages, besides having a wide circulation in England, Scotland, and America. The short and simple "Annals of the Poor" are remarkable for the graceful descriptions of the beautiful scenery of the Isle of Wight, and the vivid reality of the characters portrayed.

"This tablet was placed in Brading Church with the consent of the Rev. E. Summers, Vicar and Rural Dean, by Legh Richmond's descendants of the second, third, and fourth generations, Easter, 1898.

The Pennsylvania Railroad's Magnificent Service between New York and Washington.

Nowhere in America can be found a superior railway service to that on the Pennsylvania Railroad between New York and Washington. The most magnificent equipment which American genius has produced is in constant use on this line, and at the Pennsylvania Railroad stands for in this in comfort, in speed, and in general superiority is exhibited here. The "Congressional Limited," which is acknowledged to be the finest modern parlor car train in the world, leaves West Thirty-third Street Station daily at 3.20 P. M., for New York and Washington Limited, another example of Pennsylvania Railroad excellence, leaves weekdays at 0.50 A. M. Additional fast trains leave West Twenty-third Street Station at 8.20, 9.20, 10.50 A. M., 4.20, 4.50, 8.50 and 12.05 night, daily, and 7.50 A. M., 12.50 and 3.50 P. M., weekdays, affording a service as convenient as it is superior. Trains leave Cortlandt and Desbrosses Streets ten minutes later than Twenty-third Street. Pullman parlor or sleeping cars are attached to all the above trains, and Pennsylvania Railroad dining cars are attached to the "Congressional Limited," the New York and Washington Limited, and to trains leaving at 10.50 A. M., 4.20 and 4.50 P. M. daily.

The return service is equally complete and convenient. In fact, the matchless train service between New York and Washington presents the Standard Railroad of America," in its best light, and shows on what a solid foundation the fame of the Pennsylvania Railroad rests.

LARKIN SOAPS

The Whole Family Supplied with Laundry and Toilet Soaps for a year at Half Price. Sent Subject to Approval and Payment after.

On Thirty Days' Free Trial.

IT IS WISE ECONOMY TO USE GOOD SOAP. Our soaps are sold entirely on their merits, with our guarantee of purity. Thousands of Families Use Them, and have for many years, in every locality, many in your vicinity. Ask us for your neighbor's testimonials.

THE LARKIN PLAN

saves you half the regular retail prices; half the cost. You pay but the usual retail value of the soaps and all middlemen's profits are yours in a premium; itself of equal value.

"Chautauqua" Rocker and Reclining Chair.

Can be adjusted to any position, and changed at will by the occupant while reclining. Head-rest adjustable. Spring seat. A synonym of luxurious ease and comfort. It is built of oak, polished antique finish. The entire chair is upholstered with corduroy in crimson, old red, tobacco brown, blue or olive, as desired. It is very strong and perfectly simple in construction and fully guaranteed.

AFTER THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL if the purchaser finds all the Soaps, etc., of excellent quality and the premium entirely satisfactory and as represented, remit $10; if not, notify us goods are subject to our order. We make no charge for what you have used.

If you remit in advance, you will receive in addition a nice present for the lady of the house, and shipment day after order is received. Money refunded promptly if the BOX or PREMIUM does not prove all expected. Safe delivery guaranteed. The transaction is not complete until you are satisfied.

☞ Many youths and maidens easily earn a Chautauqua Desk or other premium free by dividing the contents of a Combination Box among a few neighbors, who readily pay the listed retail prices. This provides the $10 needful to pay our bill, and gives the young folk the premium as "a middleman's profit." The wide success of this plan confirms all our claims.

THE POOR OF HAVANA GATHERING ON O'REILLY STREET TO RECEIVE THEIR BREAD ALLOWANCE. (FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.)

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Robert McQ., Clarksfield, O. Who is Santiago, Cuba, named after?

Sant Iago, or Sant Iago, is the Spanish for St. James, regarded by Catholics as the patron saint of Spain. The remains of the apostle are said to repose in a church in the city of Santiago de Compostella, in Spain. Santiago de Cuba was doubtless named after the Spanish city.

Egyptus, Baltimore, O. Why do you say that the Khalita's defeat will alarm Moslem rulers? Is not the Khedive of Egypt, whose soldiers took an important part in the struggle, a Mohammedan?

The Khalifa's claims to sovereignty were based on religious grounds. The Mahdi, whose follower and successor he is, claimed to be a prophet, whose mission it was to conquer the world for Islam. He put in practice the doctrine that Mohammedans hold, that Christians are infidels who must be slain, unless they will embrace Mohammedanism. If such a man as he, with his reputation for sanctity, and with the enthusiastic devotion of a great army, failed, what hope can there be for other Moslem rulers, apart from their physical force? He put his trust in Allah, and his prophet, and made his campaigns a holy war on behalf of his religion. The result proved that such dependence was a broken reed. The Khedive is a Mohammedan, but he is regarded as a mere puppet in British hands.

Edward P., Huntington, W.Va. Who were the Nicolaitans mentioned in Rev. 2: 6, 15?

Scholars have spent much time in research on this question, with meagre result. The prevalent opinion based on references in the early Fathers, is that they were Gentile Christians, who perverted the declaration of the Apostle as to Christian liberty, making it an excuse for immorality and excesses of all kinds. They are said to have been led by Nicolas, who is mentioned in Acts 6: 5, but that may be a libel on the deacon.

J. McL., Ridgely, Md. What was the result of the vote on the Liquor Traffic in Canada?

There has been no official declaration of the full vote in Canada on the Prohibition Amendment, but it is certain that there was a majority (probably not less than 200,000), in favor of the Amendment. At the same time, the total vote recorded was so small, compared with the regular Prohibition vote in 1892 and 1894, as to make the result far from conclusive as a test of the attitude of the entire voting community on the subject. Thus, in the four provinces of Manitoba, Ontario, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, the Prohibition vote in the years named, aggregated over 200,000, while the Amendment vote this year was only 100,000.

Several friends have written us concerning the anti-canteen crusade, and inquiring as to its progress. For their information, we would say that Bishop Fallows, of Chicago, has publicly stated that he expects soon to be able to lay before President McKinley a protest against the canteen, signed by 5,000,000 earnest adult men and women, representing all Christian denominations.

Mary, Fond-du-Lac, Wis. 1. When was the columbine first proposed as our national emblem? 2. In what, besides name, does its appropriateness consist? 3. When was the last National Flower Convention? 4. When will the next be held, and who calls it?

1. The idea dates back to the Columbian year. 2. It is indigenous to wider territory than any other flower, blooming in almost every State; its time of flowering renders it available on Memorial Day and Fourth of July; is found in our national colors; in form it lends itself to decorative design, so as to be effective for reproduction in seals, medals, etc.; has thirteen species, and the terminal segment of the leaf is composed typically of thirteen lobes, answering to the thirteen original States and the thirteen stripes on our flag; a single petal forms a liberty cup or a horn of plenty, according as it is long or short-spurred; the form of the entire flower, in one position, suggesting a flock of doves, whence the name columbine, and in another, an eagle's talons, whence the botanical name of the species aquilegia (Latin, aquila, an eagle), symbolizes gentleness and fearlessness; in a third position it resembles a star, the emblem of the individual State. If you desire fuller information, address the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Boston, Mass. 3. Asheville, N. C., 1894. 4. The date is not set; the President is expected to call it.

Anxious, ——, Pa. Do you think it would be right for a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church to marry a Roman Catholic lady, if she was in all other respects congenial and showed a disposition to receive instruction in Protestant doctrine?

We do not think the marriage would be a happy one. The husband would naturally dislike the confessional, at which the wife would disclose to her confessor all the sacred confidences of the home. He would resent the influence of the priest, which would be more powerful than his own. There would be an absence of the union of feeling and interest in religion, which should be to the husband the most important element in his life. Neither do we think the prospects of the wife's conversion to Protestantism after marriage are encouraging. If she changes her faith at all it is more likely to be before marriage.

Reader, Wheeling, W. Va. Can you explain why we use "Xmas" for Christmas?

It is an old custom, dating from monkish times, whereby the mark of the cross, X, was used to represent the name of Christ; hence "Xmas" or "Christ-mass."

S. A. B., Bayard, Ia. What is the meaning of the grasshopper being a burden, as mentioned in Eccles. 12: 5?

The whole chapter is a subject of conjecture. The common explanation is that it is an allegorical picture of old age. On that theory, the grasshopper being a burden refers to the weakness, which would bend under a weight so light as a grasshopper. A more poetic and plausible explanation of the chapter is that suggested by Dr. Samuel Cox. He believed that the preacher was describing the approach of death, under the figure of a gathering storm, which in Palestine produced general terror. The women leave the windows, the maids cease their grinding, the sentinels at the palace doors tremble, and the men, sitting around the table at their evening meal, loathe even the almonds and the locusts, which are eaten to provoke appetite. So death causes a suspension of all occupations, and a terror which affects every faculty.

L. C. L., Lebanon, Pa., sends the following Scriptural puzzle, the solution of which may interest some of our readers:

What is the name of the apothecary's son mentioned in the Bible?

C. D. O., Md. Who wrote the book of Genesis?

As you are, of course, aware, it is ascribed to Moses, on the authority of Jewish tradition. The frequent utterances of Christ as to Moses being read, imply that he accepted the theory of his authorship. Whether Moses used material previously in existence, and was the compiler, rather than the author of the book, is a matter of dispute among scholars.

Father, Lexington, Ky. Do you think it right for me to permit my children to play innocent games on Sunday? They are good children, and sometimes when they have a little leisure on Sunday afternoons they feel like a game of croquet or something of that sort. Am I right in giving my consent?

We hardly think you can ask such a question seriously. Sunday should be devoted to spiritual duties, rest and recuperation, and Christian people should refrain from all worldly avocations and amusements on that day. There are six days in the week in which your children can indulge, to their heart's content, in innocent sport, but they should be taught that Sunday is the Lord's day, and that to play games on that day is desecration. If time hangs heavily on their hands, give them a good, helpful book to read—something that will entertain and, at the same time, turn their thoughts to a spiritual channel. Sacred song is another and most profitable way of spending a Sunday leisure hour or two. The very little ones can either be interested with Bible stories, or illustrated cards or books of Scripture lands and events.

Constant Reader, Detroit, Mich. As the work of the Christian Commission is practically over, some of those who contributed through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would like to know. 1. The spiritual outcome of the work as a whole. 2. Whether the conversions are not merely ephemeral and liable to lapse. 3. What THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has done, or is doing, outside of the aid it rendered to the Christian Commission.

1. Mr. Moody's estimate of 5,000 conversions has been corroborated from many sources and is probably under the mark. 2. It is impossible to judge of their permanency until time elapses to afford opportunity for such judgment. The indications, however, are that the work has been deep and will be lasting. 3. One of the curiosities of Alaska is a garden, near Sitka City, where a colony of Catholic missionaries grow all sorts of hardy cereals and vegetables. Within the present year Congress appropriated $10,000, to be expended in ascertaining the agricultural resources of the territory. Mr. Georgeson, the agent for conducting the investigation, with headquarters at Sitka, is establishing experimental farms. He carries with him all manner of Scandinavian, Canadian, Finland, Minnesota and Wyoming seed, and has made arrangements to exchange information with the agent of the Dominion Government, and is working in connection with Observer Ball, Chief of the Alaska Signal Service.

HAVANA AS IT IS TO-DAY.

Still Many Poor, but Help Now Abundant — A Hero of the Blockade — The Empty Spanish Churches—Missionary Opportunities.

(From a Special Correspondent.)

HAVANA, Cuba, Oct. 8.

AT the present moment Cuba is a land of desolation and want, of misery and death, yet a land that is soon destined to be one of milk and honey, of corn and plenty.

A excursion into the outlying suburban district gives one an idea of what a large part of this island looks like just now. I imagine what once was a beautiful garden now lying under a bed of black-gray ashes, and you have a picture of all the country districts of Cuba. This former garden-spot of the world, especially the provinces of Havana and Matanzas, reminds one of nothing so much as a huge ash-heap. Everything that would burn was burned. Every living, green thing was burned to the roots, every habitation is a heap of ruins, every habitation, every inhabitant in all Cuba is a sufferer. Such are the results of fire and sword left by the former Pearl of the Antilles.

I will try to paint you a picture of a scene that was enacted in Havana harbor upon the arrival of our steamer. No sooner had we passed Morro Castle and were within sight of the inner shores than hundreds of the poor, already gathered there, sent up a most heart-rending wail of distress in the form of a prayer. Some among us could see them stretching out their arms to us, and some of us could even distinguish the cry of "Pan, pan" ("Bread, Bread"). The miserable people evidently supposed that as we had come from America, the land of abundance we must have come with food and cargo of merchandise. Beside me, while witnessing this scene, stood Mrs. Sampson, wife of Admiral Sampson. She is a woman with a large heart and an executive head. She had just been telling me how glad she was to be able to join her husband, when a score of those on shore leaped into the water and began swimming toward the ship. Some would have drowned, but for the timely assistance of the boatmen, who were rowing out to take us ashore. It was then that Mrs. Admiral Sampson said: "Now, I perceive I have other duties than those pertaining to the Admiral. My new duty is to help these poor, suffering people, these starving ones who are mad for food—and I will. I will use what influence I possess, will spend what money I can, will give as much of my time as possible to alleviate their misery." And no doubt Mrs. Admiral Sampson will keep her word.

But there is a more hopeful side to the situation now. At the beginning of the war the situation was simply hopeless; now, with the revival of business, there are chances for the employment of heads of families and for all who can work. The ladies of Havana—and this is something they dared not do before the war—are visiting every store and business house, collecting relief supplies and medicines for the Cuban troops. And to this work, even the most conservative Spanish merchants are now contributing generously, because these ladies are also collecting supplies for the Spanish soldiers. These soldiers of Spain are dying as fast as the Cubans. The death rate in each of the camps, at present, is one hundred daily. The principal causes of death are malaria and dysentery, caused by a lack of food and the bad quality of that obtained. All the outgoing steamers are full of sick soldiers, bound for Spain.

Before leaving this subject, I would pay tribute to one real hero. He is Lucien J. Jerome, the British Consul-General in Havana. The inner history of the blockade can have no more valuable surviving witness than this gentleman. His services to citizens of the United States, who lived and suffered here during the war, will become a part of history. When the blockade began, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome had the foresight to lay in a supply of flour, in order that they might have bread, which soon became the rarest article of food in the city. Their English servant became ill, their negro servants deserted them, and, as a result of doing all the household work with her own hands, Mrs. Jerome herself became very ill. Mr. Jerome then went from shop to shop in Havana, trying to buy the things his wife needed, but was everywhere refused. The shop-keepers refused on the ground that Mr. Jerome represented American interests in Havana, and was therefore an enemy of Spain. As a consequence of this want of food and medicine, Mrs. Jerome grew worse, and finally died. Mr. Jerome bore his grief manfully, and continued to devote his time to lessening the suffering of others.

When Gen. Lee left Havana, he believed that every American citizen left with him. But such was not the case. On the day after his departure, sixty citizens of the United States presented themselves at the British Consulate, and within three days Mr. Jerome had on his list 135 destitute American families claiming his protection and assistance. For the relief of the destitute, Mr. Jerome was authorized to spend $2,000. This sum, for the period of the blockade, was wholly insufficient. Ten times that amount could have been used. How much Mr. Jerome paid out of his small salary of less than $200 a month, he will not say. At any rate, the pressure upon his time, his energy and his resources was prodigious.

E POOR OF HAVANA CROWDING AROUND THE "U. S. S. RESOLUTE."

One strange thing about Havana is that the Spanish churches are almost always empty, though their doors are always wide open. People go to the cafes, but rarely to the churches. Where are the large congregations one might expect to see in the churches under such sorrowful circumstances? On Sundays, and even on saint's days, one sees only the devout few, the ever-faithful, within the sacred portals. In the grand, old cathedral, which contains the bones of Columbus, two rapid-fire guns are mounted on the altar, their muzzles facing down the church, as if to say, "Beware of trespass here." In this cathedral, standing near the Columbus monument, I found a Spanish priest. Said he: "I have lived in America, and somehow your religion seems to make for character. But I look around me here in Havana, in all Cuba, and I see good Catholics always, but not so often good Christians. I see immorality. I see a Sunday without true sacredness. I see low standards of truth, of life, of honesty, of honor. In the family, in the state, I see that which no Christian priest can respect or conscientiously uphold. I do not know what the remedy is. Doubtless our blessed Lord will give it to us eventually. But meantime this country is in a far more terrible state religiously and morally than politically. I do all I can personally — that is all any man can do when things go wrong—and leave the result to God." The truth is, the people of Cuba are amiable, they have many excellent qualities, but their religious ideas need to be vitalized. There is abundant room for missionary work in Cuba.

FIND THE WANDERING ONES.

FIND the wandering ones and save them—
Save them for a Saviour's love—
Life and love and all, he gave them,
When he left his home above.
Stay not for the barren mountains,
Nor the deserts they have crossed—
Find the wandering ones and save them—
Jesus bids you save the lost.

In his mercy, Jesus found thee,
And he healed thy broken heart,
Haste to find some other wand'rers,
Make them blessed as thou art.
Find the wandering ones and save them
From the sinful paths they've trod,
Will you find them? Will you save them?
Save, O save them now for God.

Vineland, N. J. —MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

MAKE HOME HAPPY.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: John 20: 10, ... } The disciples went away again unto their own home.

A CHURCH within a church, a republic within a republic, a world within a world, is spelled by four letters—Home! If things go right there, they go right everywhere; if things go wrong there, they go wrong everywhere. The doorsill of the dwelling-house is the foundation of Church and State. A man never gets higher than his own garret or lower than his own cellar. Domestic life overarches and undergirdles all other life. The highest house of Congress is the domestic circle; the rocking-chair in the nursery is higher than a throne. George Washington commanded the forces of the United States, but Mary Washington commanded George. Chrysostom's mother made his pen for him. If a man should start out and run seventy years in a straight line, he could not get out from under the shadow of his own mantelpiece. I therefore talk to you about a matter of infinite and eternal moment when I speak of your home.

As individuals we are fragments. God makes the race in parts, and then he gradually puts us together. What I lack, you make up; what you lack, I make up; our deficits and surpluses of character being the cog wheels in the great social mechanism. One person has the patience, another has the courage, another has the placidity, another has the enthusiasm: that which is lacking in one is made up by another, or made up by all. Buffaloes in herds, grouse in broods, quails in flocks, the human race in circles. God has most beautifully arranged this. It is in this way that he balances society; this conservative and that radical keeping things even. Every ship must have its mast, cut-water, taffrail, ballast. Thank God, then, for Princeton and Andover, for the opposites. I have no more right to blame a man for being different from me than a driving-wheel has a right to blame the iron shaft that holds it to the centre. John Wesley balances Calvin's Institutes. A cold thinker gives to Scotland the strong bones of theology: Dr. Guthrie clothes them with a throbbing heart and warm flesh. The difficulty is that we are not satisfied with just the work that God has given us to do. The water-wheel wants to come inside the mill and grind the grist, and the hopper wants to go out and dabble in the water. Our usefulness and the welfare of society depend upon our staying in just the place that God has put us, or intended we should occupy.

For more compactness, and that we may be more useful, we are gathered in still smaller circles in the home group. And there you have the same variety again: brothers, sisters, husband, and wife; all different in temperaments and tastes. It is fortunate that it should be so. If the husband be all impulse, the wife must be all prudence. If one sister be sanguine in her temperament, the other must be lymphatic. Mary and Martha are necessities. There will be no dinner for Christ if there be no Martha; there will be no audience for Jesus if there be no Mary. The home organization is most beautifully constructed. Eden has gone; the bowers are all broken down; the animals that Adam stroked with his hand that morning when they came up to get their names have since shot forth tusk and sting, and growled panther at panther; and, mid air, iron beaks plunge, till with clotted wing and eyeless sockets the twain come whirling down from under the sun in blood and fire. Eden has gone, but there is just one little fragment left. It floated down on the River Hiddekel out of Paradise. It is the marriage institution. It does not, as at the beginning, take away from man a rib. Now it is an addition of ribs.

This institution of marriage has been defamed in our day. Socialism and polygamy, and the most damnable of all things, free-lovism, have been trying to turn this earth into a Turkish harem. While the pulpits have been comparatively silent, novels—their cheapness only equaled by their nastiness—are trying to educate, have taken upon themselves to educate, this nation in regard to holy marriage, which makes or breaks for time and eternity. Oh, this is not a mere question of residence or wardrobe! It is a question charged with gigantic joy or sorrow, with heaven or hell. Alas for this new dispensation of George Sands! Alas for this mingling of the nightshade with the marriage garlands! Alas for the venom of adders spit into the tankards! Alas for the white frosts of eternal death that kill the orange-blossoms! The Gospel of Jesus Christ is to assert what is right and to assail what is wrong. Attempt has been made to take the marriage institution, which was intended for the happiness and elevation of the race, and make it a mere commercial enterprise; an exchange of houses and lands and equipage; a business partnership of two stuffed up with the stories of romance and knight-errantry, and unfaithfulness and feminine angelhood. The two after a while have roused up to find that, instead of the paradise they dreamed of, they have got nothing but a Van Amburgh's menagerie, filled with tigers and wild cats. Eighty thousand divorces in Paris in one year preceded the worst revolution that France ever saw. And I tell you what you know as well as I do, that wrong notions on the subject of Christian marriage are the cause at this day of more moral outrage before God and man than any other cause.

There are some things that I want to bring before you. I know there are those of you who have had homes set up for a great many years; and, then, there are those here who have just established their home. They have only been in that home a few months or a few years. Then, there are those who will, after a while, set up for themselves a home, and it is right that I should speak out upon these themes.

My first counsel to you is, have God in your new home, if it be a new home; and let him who was a guest at Bethany be in your household; let the divine blessing drop upon your every hope and plan and expectation. Those young people who begin with God end with heaven. Have on your right hand the engagement ring of the Divine affection. If one of you be a Christian, let that one take the Bible and read a few verses in the evening-time, and then kneel down and commend yourselves to him who setteth the solitary in families. I want to tell you that the destroying angel passes by without touching or entering the door-post sprinkled with blood of the everlasting covenant. Why is it that in some families they never get along, and in others they always get along well? I have watched such cases, and have come to a conclusion. In the first instance, nothing seemed to go pleasantly, and after a while there came a devastation, domestic disaster, or estrangement. Why? They started wrong. In the other case, although there were hardships and trials and some things that had to be explained, still things went on pleasantly until the very last. Why? They started right.

My second advice to you in your home is, to exercise to the very last possibility of your nature the law of forbearance. Prayers in the household will not make up for everything. Some of the best people in the world are the hardest to get along with. There are people who stand up in prayer-meetings and pray like angels, who at home are uncompromising and cranky. You may not have everything just as you want it. Sometimes it will be the duty of the husband and sometimes of the wife to yield; but both stand punctiliously on your rights, and you will have a Waterloo with no Blucher coming up at night-fall to decide the conflict.

Never be ashamed to apologize when you have done wrong in domestic affairs. Let that be a law of your household. The best thing I ever heard of my grandfather, whom I never saw, was this: that once having unrighteously rebuked one of his children, he himself having lost his patience, and, perhaps, having been misinformed of the child's doings, found out his mistake, and in the evening of the same day gathered all his family together, and said, "Now, I have one explanation to make, and one thing to say. Thomas, this morning I rebuked you very unfairly. I am very sorry for it. I rebuked you in the presence of the whole family, and now I ask your forgiveness in their presence." It must have taken some courage to do that. It was right, was it not? Never be ashamed to apologize for domestic inaccuracy. Find out the points; what are the weak points, if I may call them so, of your companion, and then stand aloof from them. Do not carry the fire of your temper too near the gunpowder. If the wife be easily fretted by disorder in the household, let the husband be careful where he throws his slippers. If the husband come home from the store with his patience exhausted, do not let the wife unnecessarily cross his temper; but both stand up for your rights, and I will promise the everlasting sound of the war-whoop. Your life will be spent in making up, and marriage will be to you an unmitigated curse. Cowper said,

> The kindest and the happiest pair
> Will find occasion to forbear;
> And something, every day they live,
> To pity, and perhaps forgive.

I advise, also, that you make your chief pleasure circle around about that home. It is unfortunate when it is otherwise. If the husband spend the most of his nights away from home, of choice, and not of necessity, he is not the head of the household; he is only the cashier. If the wife throw the cares of the household into the servant's lap, and then spend five nights of the week at the opera or theatre, she may clothe her children with satins and laces and ribbons that would confound a French milliner, but they are orphans. It is sad when a child has no one to say its prayers to because mother has gone off to the evening entertainment! In India they bring children and throw them to the crocodiles, and it seems very cruel; but the jaws of social dissipation are swallowing down more little children to-day than all the monsters that ever crawled upon the banks of the Ganges!

I have seen the sorrow of a godless mother on the death of a child she had neglected. It was not so much grief that she felt from the fact that the child was dead as the fact that she had neglected it. She said, "If I had only watched over and cared for the child, I know God would not have taken it." The tears came not: it was a dry, blistering tempest—a scorching simoom of the desert. When she wrung her hands it seemed as if she would twist her fingers from their sockets; when she seized her hair, it seemed as if she had, in wild terror, grasped a coiling serpent with her right hand. No tears! Comrades of the little one came in and wept over the coffin; neighbors came in and the moment they saw the still face of the child the shower broke. No tears for her. God gives tears as the summer rain to the parched soul; but in all the universe the driest and hottest, the most scorching and consuming thing is a mother's heart if she has neglected her child, when once it is dead. God may forgive her, but she will never forgive herself. The memory will sink the eyes deeper into the sockets, and pinch the face, and whiten the hair, and eat up the heart with vultures that will not be satisfied, forever plunging deeper their iron beaks. Oh, you wanderers from your home, go back to your duty! The brightest flowers in all the earth are those which grow in the garden of a Christian household, clambering over the porch of a Christian home.

I advise you also to cultivate sympathy of occupation. Sir James Mc'Intosh, one of the most eminent and elegant men that ever lived, while standing at the very height of his eminence, said to a great company of scholars, "My wife made me." The wife ought to be the advising partner in every firm. She ought to be interested in all the losses and gains of shop and store. She ought to have a right—she has a right—to know everything. If a man goes into a business transaction that he dare not tell his wife of, you may depend that he is on the way either to bankruptcy or moral ruin. There may be some things which he does not wish to trouble his wife with; but if he dare not tell her, he is on the road to discomfiture. On the other hand, the husband ought to be sympathetic with the wife's occupation. It is no easy thing to keep house. Many a woman who could have endured martyrdom as well as Margaret, the Scotch queen, has actually been worn out by housekeeping. There are a thousand annoyances in the kitchen. It is very annoying to have the vexations of the day around the office or the register or the table, or in the nursery or parlor, to have the husband say, "You know nothing about trouble; you ought to be in the store half an hour." Sympathy of occupation! If the husband's work cover him with the soot of the furnace, or the odors of leather or the factories, let not the wife be easily disgusted at the begrimed hands or satisfactory aroma. Your gains are one, your interests are one, your losses are one. In the hold of the work of life with both hands. Four hands to fight the battles; four eyes to watch for the danger; four shoulders on which to carry the trials. It is a sad thing when the painter has a wife who does not like pictures. It is a sad thing for a pianist when she has a husband who does not like music. It is a very sad thing when a wife is not content unless her husband has what is called a "genteel busness." So far as I can stand a "genteel business," it is something to which a man goes at ten o'clock in the morning, and from which he comes home at two or three o'clock in the afternoon, and gets a large amount of money for doing nothing. I fear is, I believe, a "genteel business; and there has been many a wife who has made the mistake of not being satisfied until the husband has given up the planning of the hides, or the turning of the banisters, or the building of the ship, and put himself in circles where he has nothing to do but smoke cigars and indulge in wine, and get himself into habits that will set him, going down in the maelstrom, taking his wife and children with him. There are a good many trains running from earth to destruction. They start all hours of the day, and all hours of the night. There are the freight trains that go very slowly and very heavily, and there are the accommodation trains that on toward destruction, and they stop every often and let a man get out when he wants to. But genteel idleness is the express train: Satan is the stoker, and alcohol is the engineer; and though one may be out in front of it, and swing the red flag of "danger," or the lantern of God's Word, it makes just one shot into the station, coming down the embankment with a shout and a wail and a shriek—then a crash! There are two classes of people sure of destruction: first, those who will do nothing to do: secondly, those who will do something to do, but who are too lazy or too proud to do it.

I have one more word of advice to give to those who would have a happy home, and that is, let love preside in it. When your behavior in the domestic circle becomes a mere matter of calculation: even the caress you give is merely the result of deliberate study of the position you occupy, happiness lies stark dead on the hearth-stone. When the husband's position as head of the household is maintained by loudness of voice, by stress of arm, by fire of temper, the republic of domestic bliss has become a despotism that neither God nor man will abide! Ye, who promised to love each other at the altar! how dare you commit perjury! Let no shadow of suspicion come on the affection. It is easier to kill that flame than it is to make it live again. The dust from hell that puts out that light, leaves you in the blackness of darkness forever.

Here are a man and wife; they agree in nothing else, but they agree they will have a home. They will have a splendid house, and they think that if they have a house, they will have a home. Architects make the plan, and the mechanics execute it; the house to cost one hundred thousand dollars. It is done. The carpets are spread; lights are hoisted; curtains are hung; cards of invitation sent out. The horses in gold-plated harness prance at the gate; guests come in and take their

Mrs. Almira S. Steele's Consecrated Work Among the Needy Children of the South.

WHAT may be accomplished by a single earnest life, devoted to the spiritual and intellectual uplifting of its fellows, the world has already seen in the careers of such noble souls as Spurgeon, Cullis, Muller and Armstrong. These men, through their marvelous faith in God and his promises, and the force of their spiritual natures, were made instrumental in influencing countless thousands of lives. Many godly women, too, whose hearts have been touched by the same missionary fire, have done glorious work in similar fields. To their energy and devotion is due the foundation of many worthy homes and training institutions, whose beneficiaries are chiefly drawn from the needy and neglected classes.

One of the pioneers in this latter class of Christian work, is Mrs. Almira S. Steele, of Chattanooga, Tenn. Mrs. Steele is a New Englander, having been born in Chelsea, Mass. She belonged to an influential family, and received a superior education. She became Principal of the Shurtleff Grammar School at Chelsea, and afterward of the Beechmont School at the same place. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Steele and her daughter went South. In 1880 she began her missionary career under the auspices of the Woman's Home Missionary Association, her first field being at Hampton, S. C., but the disturbed condition of that section prevented satisfactory work and she was transferred to Chattanooga, Tenn. There she labored for a time as a city missionary. Her experience led her among the very poor—those who were almost wholly strangers to the social, educational, and religious advantages common to civilized communities. Her heart went out to them sympathetically, and she resolved to devote to the task of helping them, not only the rest of her life, but all the means at her disposal. Faithfully has she kept that solemn promise, and wonderfully has her work among the poor, ignorant whites and blacks of Chattanooga been blessed in consequence.

During her travels among the poor, after a visitation of yellow fever, cholera or smallpox—which claimed many victims, especially among the negroes—she found many homeless and sick little children, for whom no provision was made by the city or county authorities. Touched with pity for their condition, she consulted the American Missionary Association with reference to founding a home for them, but she soon learned that it was expected that her work, under its auspices, should be confined to the churches and schools. She was advised to make an effort to interest the people of Chattanooga on the subject. So she endeavored to do so by calling a meeting of citizens, which was attended by both Northern and Southern white men who gave her a most courteous hearing. It was quite clear, however, that she would have to trust to her own resources and the sympathy of Christian friends, rather than to official cooperation, in the work she proposed to undertake. She would receive but little encouragement from the tax-payers.

THE "HOME FOR NEEDY CHILDREN," CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Soon after this event, she severed her official connection with the Association and established the first of her series of Homes for Needy Children, using her own money in the enterprise, which soon absorbed all the accumulated savings of fifteen years. First, a plot of land was secured for $795, and upon it a house was built at a cost of about $800 more. For the want of better furniture, it was fitted up partially with dry-goods boxes for seats. Twenty children were taken and formed into classes, and the long delayed work was thus begun. It was, from the very outset, purely a work of faith, for she was resolved that there should be no begging or solicitation, and she felt that if it met with the Divine approval, it would be provided for, and that friends would be raised up in its behalf. People began to take an interest in the Home, and she received aid from many quarters unexpectedly. A second building and a third were added, and, like the first were filled with destitute children, black and white. In November, 1885, all three buildings were burned down, and the circumstances were such as to give rise to suspicions of incendiarism, although nothing was ever found out. This misfortune, however, did not daunt Mrs. Steele. The disaster brought her new friends and offers of assistance. Mayor Sharp, of Chattanooga, stood by her nobly, and public sympathy began to turn to her side. Besides, her daughter, Mrs. Prince, who inherited a sum of money, voluntarily placed her little fortune at her mother's disposal. Mrs. Steele, through the kindness of two business men of Chattanooga, was enabled to raise some $6,000 additional. A substantial brick building was erected at a cost of $15,000, with sufficient accommodations for 250 children.

MRS. STEELE AND A GROUP OF HER TRAINED HELPERS.

This structure (which is shown on this page), is now the scene of the work which was begun and carried on under so many disadvantages and discouragements. There are at the present time under Mrs. Steele's care 157 children, black and white. From the beginning of her work in Chattanooga to date, she has educated and trained 683 children, a majority of whom are now occupying useful and respectable positions. On these lowly lives the wholesome Gospel training, no less than the practical education received, has exercised a powerful influence for good. The average expense of supporting and educating a child in the Home has been about $125 a year.

The Chattanooga Home is conducted under the auspices of a responsible Board of Trustees, comprising citizens of Tennessee, Massachusetts and New York, and has among its band of workers many skilful and competent teachers. The Home is wholly undenominational. No child is rejected on account of color. The religious, literary and industrial education given to the inmates is well adapted to their needs, and the founder looks forward with confidence to the continued support of God's people for her efforts in behalf of the destitute black and white children of the Southern States.

A Fine Record.

A Sunday School teacher for seventy-four years! Surely that is a blessed record of usefulness. David Evans, of Horeb, Jackson Co., O., who died last year at the ripe age of ninety-six, began his work as a Sunday School teacher in his native Wales, and, after 1838, continued it in this country until four years before his death, when failing eyesight compelled him to lay it down. He was born in 1801, and could read Welsh, English, and Latin before he was ten. He joined the Welsh Presbyterian Church at fifteen, and never missed attendance at Sunday School, unless prevented by sickness. We are indebted to Thomas E. Davis, of Oak Hill, O., for the above facts.

Hezekiah's Great Passover.

S. S. Lesson for Nov. 6. II. Chron. 30: 1-13. Golden Text, II. Chron. 30: 8.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

A GOOD God-fearing king is, in any age of the world, in any land, a rare exception. King Hezekiah was one of these exceptions. "He did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, according to all that David his father had done." He began well. Son, as he was, of the wicked Ahaz, nurtured and brought up in wickedness, he had by some means been found out by God, and had yielded his heart to him. In the first year of his reign, in the first month, he opened the doors of the house of the Lord. He knew God well enough to be sure that he would stand by him in effecting a fundamental reformation in the land, and in spite of public opinion which might reproach him for casting such a slur on his father's memory, he made it his primary consideration to give God his place, and left no one in doubt that the new king served the living God.

Gathering together the Levites, he called upon them to sanctify themselves that they might also sanctify the house of God. He spoke freely of the abuses which had crept in, the cessation of the worship of Jehovah, and the consequent judgments which he had inflicted upon Judah, and declared, "Now it is in my heart to make a covenant with the Lord the God of Israel, that his fierce anger may turn away from us." A godly king makes a godly people. The Levites were shamed into the recognition of their duty; they followed the lead of their young king, and sanctified themselves and then proceeded to carry out the filthiness from the temple of the Lord. Worship had ceased there; and where worship goes out uncleanness comes in. Oh how often have attempts been made to bring about a revival in some church where the spiritual leaders have not first sanctified themselves! What a miserable failure it has been! How often parents have prayed for and made efforts for the conversion or sanctification of their children, while they themselves were sorely in need of a deeper work of God in their own hearts, and their efforts were unavailing.

When the Levites were sanctified and the temple was cleansed, Hezekiah gathered the princes of the city, not to some grand feast, but to offer a "sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah" (II. Chron. 29: 21). Atonement must be made; the princes, priests and Levites must all bear witness to this act; this solemn confession of national sin and national faith in the blood which maketh an atonement for the soul or the life" (Lev. 17: 11). Wonderful type of "the blood of Jesus which speaketh better things than that of Abel" (Heb. 12: 24). No wonder that "when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began" (II. Chron. 29: 27), not only had Hezekiah ordained it so, but whenever the burden of sin is gone, it is the instinct of the saved sinner to rejoice and praise God. How did the young king dare to go in direct antagonism to popular feeling, which at this time was all on the side of idolatry? Whence came this courage? How was it he did not act with more of worldly wisdom and do it by degrees? It was because Hezekiah really knew his God and counted upon him. His was no religion of mere custom, or mere sentiment, the things of God were in his eyes all important.

Hezekiah was not mistaken; God stood true to him and bowed the heart of the people, so that instead of raising up a revolution against the young king who brought in such an utter reformation, the people rejoiced as much as the king, and none could say that Hezekiah had brought this thing about; the hand of the Lord had done it. "Hezekiah rejoiced and all the people, because of that which God had prepared for the people, for the thing was done suddenly" (II. Chron. 29: 36, R.V.). It was a wonderful work, and the king might well have said, "This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it." The people had been so really wrought upon by God that they had not only confessed their sin and abandoned it by their taking part in the offering of the sin-offering, but also at the call of the king they offered sacrifices and thank-offerings, and those that were of a willing heart (for some followed suit only by constraint), brought burnt offerings. When men begin to give their all with a glad and willing heart, it is clear on which side their heart is.

It cannot be otherwise that when we ourselves have met with God, and he has blessed us, whether at the time when we are first born again, or whether at any time of special renewing of his grace, we long that others should partake of the same blessing. So it was with Hezekiah. The law, "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," is indeed the law of the spiritual life as well as, alas, of the life of nature, for the evil heart speaks out its pestilential corruption, spreading sin and misery around. Hezekiah was not satisfied that the glorious work of God which had commenced in his own country and his royal city should be confined to Judah and Jerusalem; therefore he sent to all Israel and Judah, and sent letters also to Ephraim and Manasseh, that they should come to the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, "to keep the passover unto Jehovah the God of Israel." In the days of Ahaz, Israel had been permitted to conquer Judah, and the Israelites had "slain the children of Judah in a rage which hath reached up into heaven," and intended to turn their brethren of Judah into slaves, when God sent the prophet Oded to rebuke them, and some of the elders of Ephraim took the matter to heart, and instead of making them slaves, they clothed them, shod them, fed them, carried the feeble (probably the wounded), on asses and brought them to Jericho (II. Chron. 28: 5, 15).

How could Hezekiah better repay this unwonted kindness to his people than in seeking the spiritual good of Israel? The thoroughness of the work in Judah was evidenced by the fact that the king was able to take counsel with his princes, and all the congregation of Israel to keep the passover. Having in the first place gone forward with God alone, he found that God had so turned the hearts of the princes and the people that it was no longer dangerous, but helpful, to take them into his counsels. How often do God's children take counsel in the first place with man, and then seek to bring God in! This cannot answer: God cannot take a second place, but can raise up useful counsellors wherever his counsel is first asked and taken. It was a bold stroke to publish the keeping of this passover from Dan to Beersheba, but Hezekiah spared neither pains nor money, and the advertising was done on a large scale.

Such a proclamation has rarely been met with in the history of any nation. It was a distinct appeal on the part of those who had turned to God, to others who had not turned to him. It was a distinct preaching of repentance and faith. After warnings on the ground of how their fathers had trespassed and been judged, it ran, "Now be ye not stiff-necked as your fathers were, but yield yourselves unto the Lord, and enter into his sanctuary which he hath sanctified forever, and serve the Lord your God, that his fierce anger may turn away from you . . . for the Lord your God is gracious and merciful and will not turn away his face from you if ye return unto him."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

SIXTEEN years of sin, loathsome idolatry and national misfortune under Ahaz, the grandson of Uzziah, had brought the Jewish nation to the verge of ruin, when Hezekiah, then a young man of twenty-five years of age, came to the throne. His father, Ahaz, is placed by the historian on a pillar of infamy, and receives at his hands the most scathing denunciation of all the kings. If we are right in supposing the historian to be a Levite, attached to the musical department of the Temple, as may be inferred from the character of his book, we can understand how heinous it would appear in his eyes for the king to close the doors of the Temple and suspend its services. He tells with manifest approval the fact, that his people buried Ahaz in the city and not among the kings of his house. The new king was a man of a different order. It would have been interesting to learn how it was that, surrounded in the court and nation with so much vice and superstition, King Hezekiah should have grown up so good a man. The Chronicler does not enlighten us, but it seems at least possible that he may have come under the influence of Isaiah, who belonged to the Jewish aristocracy, and would have been little likely to neglect the opportunities afforded by his station, of moulding the character of the heir to the throne. Though the Chronicler cannot bring himself to endorse the eulogium pronounced on Hezekiah (II. Kings 18: 5), by the writer of the Kings, with whose work he was familiar, he gives him credit for reforming zeal. A PHILANTHROPIST DEAD.

nel seph M. Bennett's Long Life of Business Prosperity and His Benefactions to the Poor of Philadelphia.

ANY religious and philanthropic institutions in the city of Philadelphia are mourning the death of a faithful and munificent friend. Col. Joseph M. L Bnett knew by experience the ditio of the boy who must enter the ena with deficient equipment. s rn over eighty years ago in a ve Jersey village. His father was r, t not a prosperous one. The ly put to work in his father's and was trained in habits of inand economy. The value of money pr sed upon him, but not the mis ous ve of it for its own sake, which in his heart, and that it was to her that the causes he served were indebted for the help he had rendered. There were other lessons, too, that godly mother taught her boy, which remained with him when he was beyond the reach of her voice—lessons which, by God's blessing, kept him from evil, and strengthened him to resist temptation.

The mill did not afford the lad the sphere that his business powers fitted him to occupy. He wanted to be in a great city where opportunities for rising in life might be found. He went to Philadelphia when little more than a boy, and began his career by learning the trade of a tailor. By the time he was twenty-one he had saved a little capital, with which he began business in a small way in the Kensington district. His progress from that time was steadily upward. He gave his attention unreservedly to business, working at it early and late, and soon won a connection which respected and trusted him. Some years were spent in the little store, and then an opportunity occurred of acquiring a large business in Market Street, Philadelphia. He secured a partner, and, with his aid, the business was bought. It developed rapidly; new premises had to be obtained, and even those proved inadequate. The firm began to work up an extensive wholesale trade, and the fine building known as Tower Hall, at that time one of the most handsome business edifices in the city, was erected. Advertising, tact, energy and sound principle contributed to make the business successful, and in a short time Mr. Bennett became known as the possessor of a considerable fortune. In 1879 he decided to quit the hard and trying life of the head of a large firm. The business was sold, and Mr. Bennett retired. During his successful career, he employed a large number of clerks, in whose welfare he took a lively interest. It is now recalled that among them was a young man, who is now known still more widely than his former employer. This was John Wanamaker, whose business career in many respects resembles Mr. Bennett's. After leaving his store, Mr. Bennett entered on a different kind of occupation, which, by his sound judgment and courageous enterprise, made his fortune still larger. This was the purchase of unimproved land in districts accessible to the city, on which he erected dwellings and stores that are now exceedingly valuable. In this way Mr. Bennett aided in building up the city, and secured large additions to his own wealth.

From the time of his retirement from business to the close of his life Col. Bennett made philanthropic helpfulness one of his chief occupations. His heart seemed to go out toward all who were in need and his mind to be concerned with the best methods of helping them. It did not content him to give and to give largely; he tried to solve the problem of permanent relief which is much more difficult than giving temporary assistance. Especially those who seemed to be handicapped in life's race were the objects of his sympathetic interest. The institute for the training of the deaf and dumb which must have cost him a large sum was a case in point. He took special interest, too, in the advancement of women, and was at no small pains to provide means for helping them to earn a livelihood. Besides his general gifts to the Women's Department of the University of Pennsylvania, he endowed two scholarships of $7,500 each for women who were studying for honors. Ten years ago he gave two large buildings toward the support of the graduate department for women, and subsequently he added four houses to his gift. In all, Col. Bennett's gifts to the University, aggregated $75,000, besides the sum bequeathed to it in his will. To the colored race Col. Bennett was a faithful and generous friend. He purchased a church building and presented it to the Zion M. E. Church, and subsequently had it torn down and rebuilt in granite when the needs of the congregation required a more substantial building. Of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he was a stanch supporter. The various benevolent institutions under its auspices were indebted to him for large benefactions. He built a Home for the Aged, and an Orphanage, both of which he endowed, at the same time modestly insisting that they should bear the name of the church, instead of his own name, which the trustees proposed to give them. Besides all these gifts, there were other institutions which owned him as their chief benefactor. Among these were the Hayes Mechanics' Home, the Home for Aged Men, the Women's Christian Association, St. Matthew's, the Covenant, the Cookman Churches, and the Deaconess' Home, which was his last gift. It was his delight to thus distribute the money he had acquired, and to see it bearing fruit in the lightening of other people's burdens. Many a poor struggler in years to come will bless him for the help obtained through his benefactions.

Such men as Col. Bennett are sorely needed by the church. It is in religion as it is in business; the enlarged opportunities of these days cannot be used without increased expenditures. Men offer themselves willingly for service, but the money that is needed is not so easily obtained. Yet it is a notorious fact that the men who are most liberal in giving, always have the prosperity which enables them to give. As the wise king said: "The liberal soul shall be made fat."

THE CHILDHOOD OF JESUS.

An Example which Encourages Work among Children. Luke 2: 40-52.

Most hopeful of all efforts for the betterment of the world, and the most fruitful, is that which aims to win children for Christ. Our League is wise in giving special attention to this work. It is proved by the experience of many generations that there are no Christians so faithful and so consistent as those who are converted in childhood. Famous examples there are of men who have done wonderful work in the church after being converted in middle life, but they are few compared with those who began their Christian life in the days of their youth. The future of the Church depends, therefore, in no small degree, on what is done now for the children. In the Sunday School and in the Junior League are the children on whom will come in a few years the responsibility for Christian work in the world. How important then is it for them to be well and wisely trained. If we were driven to the sad alternative of neglecting the young or the old, not even the urgency of the condition of men on the verge of the grave would justify us in choosing them as the sphere of labor. It is to the young that we may go with the greatest confidence before their spirits are soiled by contact with the world, and before their good impulses are warped by the maxims and selfish principles of everyday life. Happily two of the evangelists have given us a picture of Christ, which must appeal to the children's hearts. Jesus was himself a child, and though he was the son of God, he set an example of filial behavior, which, like all he did, was perfect. He was subject to his parents, and, as Luke tells us, he, like other children, increased in wisdom and in stature. It pleased God to have him start in this humble way, that children of every generation, to the end of the world, could feel that Jesus was once one of themselves, and can sympathize with them, having known by experience the sensations and impulses of childhood.

A Caldron of Iniquity.

CANADA'S prohibition plebiscite is a significant indication of the growing antagonism of civilized society toward the dram-shop, which is the greatest caldron of iniquity in our time. Anacharsis said that the vine bore three grapes: the first was pleasure, the next was drunkenness, and the next misery. Every saloon above ground or under ground is a fountain of iniquity. It may have a license, and it may go along quite respectably for a while, but after a while the cover will fall off and the color of the iniquity will be displayed.

"Oh!" says some one, "you ought to be easier on such a traffic as that when it pays such a large revenue to the government, and helps support your schools and your great institutions of mercy." And then I think of what William E. Gladstone said—I think it was the first time he was Chancellor of the Exchequer—when men engaged in the ruinous traffic came to him and said their business ought to have more consideration from the fact that it paid such a large revenue to the English government. Mr. Gladstone said: "Gentlemen, don't worry yourselves about the revenue; give me thirty millions of sober people, and we'll have revenue enough and a surplus."

We might in this country—this traffic perished—have less revenue, but we would have more happy homes, and we would have more peace, and we would have fewer people in the penitentiary, and there would be tens of thousands of men who are now on the road to hell who would start on the road for heaven.

A celebrated doctor of France has recently discovered something which all drinkers ought to know. He has found out that alcohol in every shape, whether of wine or brandy or beer, contains parasitic life, called bacillus potomaniæ. By a powerful microscope these living things are discovered, and when you take strong drink you take them into the stomach, and then into your blood, and getting into the crimson coals of life they go into every tissue of your body, and your entire organism is taken possession of by these noxious infinitesimals. When in delirium tremens a man sees every form of reptilian life, it is only these parasites of the brain in exaggerated size. It is not a hallucination that the victim is suffering from. He only sees in the room what is actually crawling and rioting in his own brain. Every time you take strong drink you swallow these maggots, and every time the imbiber of alcohol in any shape feels vertigo or rheumatism or nausea, it is only the jubilee of these maggots. Efforts are being made for the discovery of some germicide that can kill the parasites of alcoholism, but the only thing that will ever extirpate them is abstinence, to which I would before God swear all young men and old.

Mysteries Everywhere.

MANY reject the Bible because there are mysteries in it they cannot explain. Many stab themselves to death with interrogation points. What! will you not believe anything you cannot explain? Have you finger nails? You say, "Yes." You believe in the law of gravitation: explain it, if you can. I can ask you a hundred questions about your eyes, about your ears, about your face, about your feet, that you cannot answer, and yet you find fault that I cannot answer all the questions you may ask about this Bible. I would not give a farthing for the Bible if I could understand everything in it. I should know that the heights and depths of God's truth were not very great if, with my poor, finite mind, I could reach everything.

Religious Tramps.

THERE are a great many useful brethren who go about on Sabbaths, only to do good by speaking words of encouragement to schools. But there is another class entirely different from these. Being too lazy to teach a class in the church where they belong on Sabbath afternoons, they go around to maul Sunday Schools! Sabbath School superintendents grow pale before them—they have that most malignant kind of itch for talking. This tribe is increasing rapidly, and I call upon superintendents to put an end to their ravages. They generally begin by telling the children "that they love children;" when the truth is some of them are old bachelors, and are so constructed that children cannot bear the sight of them! They have been around to all the conventions and have gathered up all the anecdotes, and when one of them has got started to speak you have got to let him go on, for the plug is out of the bunghole and the stream will flow on until the barrel is empty.

DURING the Havana blockade, and when that city was suffering most keenly from the effects of the war, the distress among the poor, and particularly among the poor children, was appalling. It was a time when no one having the means of succor at disposal could find it in his heart to withhold it. Under these circumstances, the Director-General of the Lee Orphanage and Asylum (which was in a large measure supported by the generosity of our readers), felt justified in giving shelter to a number of destitute children, in addition to the orphans already in his charge, and this even at the risk of taxing the somewhat limited accommodations of the institution. Another reason for this course being adopted was that the Beneficiencia, or municipal orphanage of Havana (which can ordinarily accommodate 3,000 of the poor and homeless), had been seized by the military authorities, and was utilized as a barracks for troops. Now, however, the war being over, and the municipal shelter re-opened for the benefit of the poor and destitute, the Lee Orphanage is relieved of the necessity of housing so many children, and the Director-General has accordingly been instructed to reduce the number of his little charges to the normal proportion consistent with the suitable accommodation and sanitary well being of the inmates. Although this step is not taken without regret, it is believed to be the most advisable under the circumstances.

PULPIT AND PEW.

IN 1887, Dr. Parker of London, held a conference of clergy and laymen to consider the subject of the workingman's desertion of church services; and Dr. Parker's opinion was, "that churches demanded a variety of preachers, rather than one man." But the ability of one man to crowd a church year after year can be proved abundantly. Taking Spurgeon as the type of such a preacher, we find his sermons vehement, picturesque, and even humorous. Thus he encouraged the despondent by saying, "Face it again like a man! Never say die!" He compared some Christians to "isolated icebergs, whom nobody goes near, and who float about in a sea of forgetfulness," and added, "though we shall be glad to meet them in heaven, we are precious glad to get rid of them on earth." This is not the kind of preaching we hear in quarter-filled churches, but it is the kind of preaching that Englishmen listened to in the Sixteenth Century when the pulpit was such a mighty power.

At that time it was customary to preach outside the church, and even at the Market Cross, and both preacher and people felt more at their ease than they did in the consecrated building. Anecdote, wit, proverbs, and flashing repartee winged the words of the Gospel home, as the preacher told evil-doers, even in high places, their faults. "Have at them, Master Latimer! Have at them!" cried the crowds in St. Paul's churchyard, as they made a passage for him to reach the Cross. And Latimer did "have at them!" He attacked the judges for bribery and the women for their vanity in "laying out their hair in tussocks and tufts," and the citizens for their greed and gluttony. Nor did royalty close the preacher's mouth. Lever warned the king and his nobles, "in the name of God to take heed; for," he said, "when the Lord of Hosts shall make inquiry for his flock, he will follow the trace of their blood, and it will lead him straightway into this court."

There is nothing the Pew likes better than clear, positive theology set pithily and plainly to the common affairs of life; nothing they care for less than dignified sermons on Biblical criticism. It is true the searching questions on Biblical criticism are finding their way into the popular mind, but the need of religion to the individual soul amid the shocks and sorrows of life is quite sufficient to keep the bulk of mankind in the track of faith.

Another need of the Pew is that the preacher should put whatever the spirit of Christ requires of us into the current language of the day. We are always Christ's cotemporaries, and we want the Christ of the First Century made present to the Nineteenth Century—as really so as when forty years ago he was brought into the temples to condemn slavery. And there is little doubt that united concert in this way, against any crime, would condemn and abolish it.

Extempore speech is another demand of the present day, in fact it is as necessary in the Pulpit as it is at the bar or legislature. The incapacity for it should be a disqualification for the ministry. Among the Jewish prophets to be "a dumb dog" was the climax of inefficiency. Men who cannot proclaim the Gospel without putting their words on paper should confine their teaching to the class-room; their place is not in the pulpit. Christ sent men to preach, not to read the Gospel. Preachers of this day should divine for us what Christ would think about present affairs, should bring Christ into our daily, domestic, social, national life. We want new, as well as old things, out of the treasury. We do not want the phraseology of dead dogmas; we want the living speech of 1898—and if the church will only make Christ our cotemporary, she will find this to be the day of her visitation, the day of her great opportunity.

There never was an age when bad sermons meet with so little toleration as at the present day. The schoolmaster has been through the length and breadth of the land, and the great ability with which all important questions are canvassed in our daily papers, has educated the mental palate of even the mechanic and the laborer to a high degree of sensitiveness. But the good preacher has no rival in cheap, good literature; especially among the vast body of workingmen, from whom congregations ought to be in a large measure drawn. For this class, as soon as they rise above the pressure of actual want, are the most sensitive of all to the consolations of the supernatural. They were the first depository of Christian faith, and the sharp famine of a rough but vivid conscience drives them to choose between their material appetites and the solicitations of Divine love.

A Judge's Dilemma.

There is a pathetic note in the remarks of a judge in New York, who has to decide whether a property-owner has suffered loss by the Elevated railroad being constructed near to his house. Judge Scott is evidently anxious to do justice in the case but he is puzzled by the contradictory evidence given by real estate experts. Thus in one case, each party produced an expert who had dealt in real estate more than twenty-five years and given special attention to the neighborhood of the property of the plaintiff. Both of them impressed the court as men of intelligence, and both testified positively and with apparent sincerity. Yet these experts differed irreconcilably and radically in their estimates of past and present values. It is difficult to understand how two experts can differ on a question of fact, but we know that even the same man may at different periods of his life place a very different estimate of value on the same property.

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ (Phil. 3:7).

THE AMERICAN AND SPANISH EVACUATION COMMISSION IN SESSION IN HAVANA.

A Mysterious Wreck.

The public on both sides the Atlantic has been shocked by the stories of the appalling catastrophe of October 14. The steamer Mohegan, which left London the previous day, had reached the southwest coast of England and had signalled "All well," when suddenly she struck on a well-known rock, and in a few minutes plunged headlong to the bottom. There were fifty-three passengers and a crew of ninety-one men aboard, according to the accounts at present accessible. Of this total of 144, fifty-one persons certainly perished, for their bodies have been washed ashore, and forty-three are missing. Only fifty are known to have been saved, though it is hoped that some may have been picked up who have not yet been heard from. The calamity was so sudden that it is surprising that any were saved. It is the general testimony of the survivors that the officers and crew worked nobly to save life, and gave the preference in all cases to the passengers, especially to the women, who were put first on board the boats. Only eleven passengers, however were saved, for the boats capsized owing to the heavy sea. The cause of the wreck is unexplained at the date of writing. The ship was seven miles out of her proper course, and one of the survivors says that she was heading straight for the shore when she struck. There must have been gross error in calculation somewhere, and against that the heroism which is admitted, was of little avail. There are some spiritual wrecks of whom the same thing may be said. They show nobility of character and high moral purpose, but having rejected the guidance of the Saviour, they are without hope and without God in the world.

The way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps (Jer. 10:23).

Reprimanded for Saving Life.

Heroism does not always receive the reward it deserves, but it is not often that it brings a man into trouble. The New York Herald, however, reports an instance of this kind. It states that Mr. Joseph Bleibtrey, a traveling salesman, has incurred the wrath of certain officers by rescuing a boy from drowning. It appears that Mr. Bleibtrey was walking by the lake in Central Park a few days ago when he noticed two boys lying on the bank and looking at the reflection of their faces in the water. As he approached the little fellows, he was horrified to see the younger of them, a bright little boy of eight years, reach over so far that he over-balanced and fell into the deep water. Mr. Bleibtrey dived in just as he was, with all his clothes on, and seized the child. The water at that place is said to be ten feet deep and it was not easy, weighted with his burden and encumbered with his own garments, to get the boy out. Eventually, however, he reached the shore and put the child safely on dry ground, enjoining him to run home as quickly as he could. As he stood watching to see that he was obeyed, two laborers came up to him and demanded to know what he meant by jumping in the lake. He explained that he had saved the life of a child. They replied that he had no right to do anything of the kind; there were stringent rules against swimming in the lake. Another person, who seemed to have authority in the park, then came up and joined in expostulating with him. He showed the drenched, shivering man the rule he had broken, and warned him that he was liable to a penalty for what he had done. We may hope that if he is ever in like circumstances the brave man will break the rules again. He shares the fate that sometimes attends men outside the regular church organizations who try to save souls. The Lord had occasion, in his day, to express his opinion of such criticism:

We saw one casting out devils in thy name and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us. And Jesus said, Forbid him not: for he that is not against us is for us (Luke 9:49).

A Burglar's Double Life.

The New York detectives have made an important arrest which should bring them the gratitude of surrounding towns. In the course of conversation with a notorious burglar whom they had in prison, they learned that there was living, somewhere in Brooklyn, a clever house-breaker who had never been caught. Their prisoner was deploring his own fate and said that if he had been as wise as another man in the same business, he would have escaped the numerous imprisonments he had undergone. This man, he said, had no partners and no confidants, so he was never betrayed. The detectives were put on their mettle by this disclosure and at once proceeded to search for the shrewd burglar. Their hunt has been successful. A quiet, gentlemanly, suave citizen of Brooklyn, who was supposed to be a commercial traveler representing a jewelry firm in New York, was arrested, as he returned from a trip to Hartford, Conn. On being searched, burglar's implements were found on his person, and a quantity of silver plate was in the valise he was carrying. More valuable goods were found in his house. He had evidently been in this business for years, yet neither his wife, nor his mother, nor his mother-in-law had any suspicion of his criminality. Even after his arrest they could not believe he was guilty. He was a kind husband, a dutiful son, and a well-behaved citizen; yet in secret, he was breaking into houses and stealing the property of the owners. His apparent respectability and his high reputation will count for nothing, now that he is in the toils. So will it be in the day of final judgment with many who, though not criminal like he was, are yet without true religion.

They come unto thee as thy people come, and they sit before thee as my people and they hear thy words but do them not: for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after covetousness (Ezek. 33:31).

Tagged Immigrants.

There was an interesting party of immigrants in the steerage of the Cunard steamship Campania when she arrived at New York, from Liverpool, on her last trip. It was composed of ten children, whose ages varied from eleven years old to five. Only three of them belonged to the same family. They were two boys and a girl, who were going to their father in Michigan. The other seven were solitary travelers, some of them on their way to an uncle or an aunt, and others to brothers who are settled here. One of them, a little girl eleven years old, is going as far as North Dakota. The children were play-fellows on their voyage across the Atlantic, and seemed sorry on their arrival here to have to separate. The passengers took quite an interest in the children, who, from various causes, were making the journey unprotected. Each child wore a tag like a piece of merchandise, on which was inscribed its name and destination. The expenses of transit had been paid through, and there is little doubt of their reaching their friends in safety. How glad parents would be if they could so send their beloved children on their journey through life with the same security of their reaching the house of their heavenly Father. But there is no tag that will secure that most desirable result. They have, however, the promise contingent on their own treatment of them:

Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it (Prov. 22:6).

Palestine's Precious Fountains

Springs that Give Life and Beauty to the Holy Land

SELAH MERRILL

Water Courses that Enrich the Soil and Make it Fruitful

MUCH of the interesting part of Palestinian life is connected with water. We turn over the pages of the Bible, and read of the clouds, the rain and dew, of springs and fountains, of brooks, streams and rivers, of floods which lift up their mighty voice, of mountain torrents which sweep away the works of man and obliterate their dwelling-places, and of the cup of cold water so refreshing to the lips of the weary traveler. Hebrew literature is full of thoughts, phrases and beautiful sayings that have become historic gems suggested by this wonderful natural blessing. The world will never forget that for the expressive and impressible words, "fountain of life," we are indebted to the ancient Hebrews. In one of the very earliest hymns of praise in the Bible, and in the very latest picture of future and heavenly joys, the writers chose this phrase to express their lofty thought (Ps. 36: 9; Rev. 21: 6). Such language is not merely a coincidence: there must be a special reason for it grounded on the experience of the nation. No one can dispute, therefore, that such a subject as we have chosen is worthy of more than a moment's attention.

GOATS AT A FOUNTAIN.

The legends and lore of fountains had an important place in the literature of Greece, but in that case there were forests and green fields in abundance which in Palestine do not exist, so that its fountains appeal to us in a way that those of Greece could never do. What is meant can be made evident even to the eye by reference to Ain Jidy, the En-gedi of the Bible, in whose over-hanging cliffs David hid himself from Saul (1. Samuel 23: 29). The earth is destitute of grass and the rugged mountains have no signs of life. For many ages they have been worn and bleached by storm and torrent till their dreariness and desolation are awful. In the midst of such surroundings, how surprising it is to find a great fountain of water bursting forth from barren rock and desert earth. It is a wonder of God's power. We judge of things by contrast, and the sterile region about Ain Jidy only enhances the beauty of the verdure which surrounds it and lines the stream flowing from it down the mountain side. Beyond the fountain and near the summit of the mountain appears evidence of the power of the winter torrents, which during long centuries have worn for themselves in the rocks a smooth path, which one might easily be persuaded was made by the hand of man. The water from this fountain after flowing down a thousand feet, irrigates a small, but beautiful plain, famous in ancient times for its vineyards (Song of Solomon 1: 14), and in our Lord's day for its palm groves, its fruit and its wheat. It is a real oasis in a wilderness of desert shore and mountain.

Farther along towards the northern end of the Dead Sea, there is another fountain of immense proportions called Ain Feshkah. Its level is only a few feet above that of the Dead Sea itself, consequently it is four thousand feet below the summit of the grand mountain from whose bowels it bursts forth. Were its level considerably higher than it is, ponds and lakes might easily be created by this river from the depths of the earth. The shore of the Dead Sea is barren, and so are the wild hills that rise far above this fountain, and this wealth of water which might irrigate forty or fifty square miles of the plain to the north, is immediately swallowed up in the salt lake.

Very few of all the multitude of visitors to Palestine have seen Ain Jidy or Ain Feshkah, for they are out of the line of travel; but that is not the case with the much smaller Fountain of Elisha, at Jericho. Pictures and details of this fountain are in everybody's hands; still familiarity with it does not, by any means, diminish our interest in this wonderful source of life. No one who has seen this fountain, will ever forget how its clear waters well up from the earth as if they were eager to go forth and bless the thirsty plain. Nor can one forget the rank vegetation which springs up and flourishes wherever these waters reach.

THE UPPER POOL OF GIHON, PALESTINE.

Elisha's Fountain is not the only source for irrigating the Jericho Plain. About three miles farther west, where the mountains recede, forming a great triangular valley, we find a copious water supply called Ain Ed-Duk. Between this and Elisha's Fountain there is a difference in level of over two hundred feet. "Dom" or "Sidr" trees of very great size and in every stage of deformity and decay, which have lived by the life of this fountain, have fallen over it like crippled giants. The shade of these trees by the cool water is delightful and refreshing, in contrast with the hot and barren earth on either side. A portion of this water is carried a long distance, by means of a canal, which is lined with verdure, while the bulk of it dashes down into the valley below and is lost. Many times I have exclaimed: "Oh, for means and skill to husband the waters of these two great fountains and carry them over the Jordan plain!" The fountains being at such different levels, every acre of that portion of the plain could be irrigated and made one of the gardens of the world.

I doubt if the reader's attention has ever been called to the fact of the vast amount of water that is stored up in the mountain ranges of the Holy Land. Seams and caverns, some of them of enormous size, abound in the limestone formations, and this is especially true of the hills of Palestine, from Lebanon southward to the desert. Not all the rain which falls, which is twenty-five to thirty-five inches annually, runs away to the sea: a large proportion of it is stored up in these unseen, unmeasured reservoirs that exist in the depths of the hills. The most striking evidence of this fact is found in the Lebanon region and about Mount Hermon. A large number of springs burst out of the mountain side. Some of these are of great size, as for example the well known fountain at Banias and that at Dan, and in other cases the water gushes forth in a full grown stream like Nahr el-Kelb, north of Beirut. In some of these springs the water is as cold as ice, showing that the valleys and rifts in the rocks above are full of snow.

Without having actually witnessed the fact some persons are sceptical when told of the marvelous transformations produced in the Jordan Valley simply by the application of water. The soil there is naturally fertile and canals from these many fountains, from the sea of Galilee, and from the river Jordan itself might irrigate every part of its six hundred square miles. At present, however, large sections of it have very little vegetation. Where water is applied the change is wonderful. I have ridden through fields of wild mustard which was as high as the horse's back, and sometimes as high as my own shoulders. Thistles and various kinds of weeds grow equally rank. In seeking a place for my camp I have had to clear the ground of this luxuriant growth before I could pitch my tent. I make no reserve in saying that water is the blessing needed in Palestine: that water is the life of the land. When one observes its transforming power on soil that appears to be barren, he finds in it an emblem of the power of the New Life upon the human soul when it appears to be dead.

CARRYING WATER-SKINS.

One of the most characteristic and un-American scenes in Palestine is that of a fountain at morning or evening when it is busy with life. Flocks come from far and near, and shepherds strive for places. Women and girls, dressed in the universal blue gown, each with a jar upon her head, crowd around the place awaiting their turn. There is talking, laughing, jesting, which is frequently very coarse, and the din of their sharp shrill voices is anything but pleasant to the ear. When a jar is filled one woman helps another raise it to her head. Those from one camp or village usually go together, single file, up and down over the rocky paths toward their homes. A little later in the day the women return to do their washing. They sit upon a stone half buried in the water, place their clothes upon another, which is between their knees, and pound them with a stick, but generally with their hands. In the jostling for place and rinsing women find it useless to keep their faces veiled according to Moslem rule, so their features are exposed, which in many instances the foreigner regrets, because they are so very unattractive. These fountain scenes are very picturesque. They are curious and interesting in all their details. Artists have frequently tried to copy them. They are pictures that remain willingly and pleasantly in the mind. While such scenes would be intensely interesting to my readers it would be impossible for Orientals to be near enthusiastic over them, and they wonder how foreigners can see anything there attractive in such a commonplace matter. In many things the Orientals are destitute of what we call sentiment. A native woman, with a native dress and a jar of water upon her head, is a picturesque object, although she herself is entirely unconscious of it.

SELAH MERRILL.

A Doctor's Felon.

There is only one way of becoming really sympathetic, and that is to pass through suffering. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews tells us that even Christ acquired his power in no other way (Heb. 2: 18). A writer in the Youth's Companion relates an incident which illustrates this principle of learning. He says that a famous surgeon in New York had a large clinic, and among others who came to him were students who needed surgical help. Sometimes it was a felon, and the old doctor would say he would lance it. "It won't hurt," was always the comforting assurance to the patient.

The doctor was very irritable if the patient made any outcry or bother over the lancing of a felon. "Put your finger right there," indicating the edge of the table, "and keep still," he commanded; and truth to tell, patients, as a rule, made little fuss.

Time passed on, and in the mutations of life, Doctor S. got a felon on his left forefinger, and it was a bad one. He poulticed it and fussed with it for a week. He walked the floor with pain at night. At last it became unendurable, and he went to his assistant surgeon and said nervously: "I say, doctor, will you take a look at my finger? The assistant surgeon looked and remarked gravely, "It ought to have been lanced before." "I—I—I suppose so—probably—but—" said Doctor S.; and then, in a long breath, "Perhaps you had better lance it now." "Certainly," said the assistant surgeon. "Put your finger on the table."

Doctor S. quietly complied, and with a face as white as paper, watched the knife.

"Pray be very gentle," he cautioned; "that's an awful sore finger!" "It won't hurt," remarked the assistant surgeon, and the sharp steel descended. There was a howl of agony from Doctor S., who with his finger in his other hand, danced about the room crying, "Oh! oh! oh!"

"Why," remarked the cool assistant surgeon, "I have heard you tell patients hundreds of times that it didn't hurt to have a felon."

"No doubt, my dear sir; no doubt you have!" groaned Doctor S. "But that depends on which end of the knife a man is at, you know."

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

An Humble Meal.

Immigrant Homes—The Thrifty Family—Love and Industry.

VERY similar scenes to that in our picture may be witnessed in the Teutonic and Scandinavian colonies of our great Northwest, where dwell hundreds of Germans, Dutch, Norwegians and Swedes, speaking their own language, living their own lives, and reproducing in an interesting degree on American soil their national dress and customs. Of the thousands who yearly seek our shores, Germany contributes the largest percentage; Great Britain and Ireland, Norway and Sweden, and Austria-Hungary follow: the rate from Russia has largely increased of late years. While not inviting indiscriminate immigration, America is always glad to welcome the thrifty foreigner and to encourage him in his efforts to make himself at home. Of those who come, few the home-loving Teuton excelings longest to the customs of his beloved fatherland. The German and Dutch peasantry are famous for their economicity and piety; and we incorporate quaint and charming phases of it with the Americanism.

The board around which the devout family in our picture are gathered in such reverent gratitude, is certainly not what those accustomed to abundant American repasts would call a very bountiful one, yet it much resembles that blessed meal of holy writ described as the "dinner of herbs where love is." The bowl on the table holds only potatoes—steaming hot; yet we hope, from one of the smaller pots; and soup may be ladled from the other. In the largest vessel, a treat for the cows has been cooked—meal, potatoes and chopped hay. These fortunate animals are cared for with great tenderness and forethought; they live in comfortable stalls in an annex under the hayloft to which a ladder conveniently placed leads; they are gentle and docile, and most valuable friends—how else would come the butter and cheese and milk that goes to market? The farmer and his son must be thrifty; for a family is fairly prosperous having three cows and plenty of hay; the grandmother and daughter-in-law are plainly industrious and careful, for the humble abode is exquisitely clean. It is characteristic of this class for even the children to contribute their quota of labor to the general welfare, weeding the wheat and barley in season, peeling the potatoes, running errands, and making themselves useful in various ways—an experience as helpful to them as to the old folk for the school of service is a good auxiliary to the school of book-lore, and vice versa.

"GRACE BEFORE MEAT" IN THE OLD FARM KITCHEN.

Royalty and the Thimble.

The popular fad for art needlework has given fresh importance to this little implement upon the fashioning of which, in some instances, such nice workmanship and so many jewels are expended, that trifle light as air though they be, they cost at very high prices. The King of Siam, impressed by seeing the thimble in such use by English and American ladies of high degree, made his queen a gift of one which was in the form of a lotus bud (the royal flower), studded with diamonds, arranged to form her name and the date of her marriage; forthwith thimbles became fashionable in Siam. In China wealthy women use very dainty thimbles; some are carved from enormous pearls, with bands of gold whose curious etchings catch the needle as do the holes in an ordinary thimble. French thimbles are said to be the most durable. The first thimbles in England were made by John Lofting, a metal worker, about 200 years ago, of iron or brass, were worn on the thumb and called "thumb-bells." Though clumsy-looking things, they cost more than the thimble of to-day. Some are still in existence, as carefully preserved heirlooms in old families.

"The Church Cradle."

"I can't come to church because I can't leave my baby at home" is a frequent and well-founded excuse for non-attendance on religious services. Now and then, we hear of a pastor who meets this objection with what is known as a "church cradle" or "creche." In a room, in some way connected with the church, downy cradles and infantile comforts are provided; ladies of the congregation who have more leisure than others, engage to take care of the babies, turn-a-bout, on Sundays. The plan operates to enlarge the congregation, although "The Cradle's" number of guests is not always sufficient to explain the increase.

The Work of Aged Fingers.

Mrs. M. A. Haggard, a cheery old lady of eighty-four, residing in White Cloud, Kansas, recently gave the following account of herself:

When I was fifty-three years old, a neighbor made light of my undertaking a common log-cabin quilt, and said I would never live to finish it. This was amusing, and I resolved to keep a list of my unnecessary needlework from that date. Besides common sewing and housework—and I am a great reader—this is a list of work done by me in the past thirty years: Scrap quilts pieced, containing from 500 to almost 63,000 separate pieces, 112; quilted quilts, 39; embroidered bedspreads, 10; embroidered pillow shams, 5; embroidered head rests, 6; embroidered and tufted sofa cushions, 21; embroidered doilies, 67; embroidered splashers, 2; embroidered night-gown sets, 6; knitted bedspreads, 1; knitted doilies, 18; knitted toilet sets, 6; knitted lamp mats, 28; knitted hats, 2; knitted edging, yards, 59; knitted pulse warmers, pairs, 20; knitted chair scarfs, 6; knitted shoulder capes, 4; knitted shawls, 1; knitted stockings, pairs, 117; knitted mittens, pairs, 47; rag carpet, yards, 125; rag rugs, 27. I am not through with my work yet. Besides the above list, I have a large box of embroidered things that I have done since my last birthday, which was in April, and I expect to do much more.

Queen Victoria's Favorite Hymns.

Among the hymns selected for the Castle services—a selection usually made by Princess Beatrice, or the ladies in personal attendance on the British sovereign—"Nearer My God to Thee," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," "How Sweet the Name of Jesus Sounds," and a number of hymns relating to the future state, are most frequently chosen as being the acknowledged favorites of the Queen. "The Soldier's Hymn," by Rev. Arthur Robbins, of Holy Trinity Church, Windsor, sung to Rossini's music, is another favorite of the Queen, whose heart always beats true to her soldiers. One of her greatest soldiers, the martyred Gordon, prepared himself for death at Khartoum with Newman's hymn, "Praise to the Holiest in the Height."

The Flowery Valley of Var.

The little valley of Var, in southeastern France, is one of the sweetest smelling places on earth. The inhabitants have been engaged for centuries in the industry of making perfumes from flowers. In season the whole valley is a great garden of roses, orange trees, tube-roses, violets, jonquils, acacia and jasmine. Women and children are the flower gatherers. The people of Var have learned many of the flower world's secrets. Thus, they learned that "the scent of a flower is not contained in any gland or little sac, but is exhaled by the flower somewhat in the manner of breathing." Also, that "there seems a series of flowers which by combining their perfumes will make about every known odor in the world." These, they say, are the following seven: rose, violet, orange, acacia, jonquil, tube-rose and jasmine. In a single season, the valley has grown over 1,500,000 pounds of orange blossoms, 500,000 pounds of roses, and nearly 100,000 pounds of violets and jasmine.

The Two Kitties.

Two little kitties, playing in the sun,
Tossing and tumbling and having lots of fun;
One doth wear a linen gown and one a gown of fur.
"Kitty, come!" one mamma calls,
And one mamma says "P-u-r-r!"
And though they use such different words,
Each mamma's baby understands
The one who calls for her.

—KATHERINE HAPGOOD.

THE HIGHEST TASK.

GREAT deeds are trumpeted, loud bells are rung,
And men turn round to hear
The high peaks echo to the pæns sung,
And some great victor cheer, and yet great deeds are few.
The mightiest men find opportunities but now and then.

The sweetest lives are those to duty wed.
The world may sound no trumpets, ring no bells.
The Book of Life the shining record tells.

God help us mothers all to live aright,
And may our homes all truth and love enfold,
Since life for us no loftier aims can hold
Than leading little children in the light.

The Flight of the Birds.

THE southward flight of birds in Autumn is one of nature's delightful marvels, which never loses interest. Children living in the country love to hear the whir of wings, the far cry in the ether, to look up and see the long line of winged pilgrims speeding on their quest for warm homes and fruitful fields far away. And every child asks: "How do they know that the Winter is coming?" "Doth the hawk fly by wisdom and stretch her wings to the South?" was a question Job could not answer. From far Hudson's Bay, said a close observer in mid-September, from the swamps of Alaska, from the sedgy Canadian lakes and from the marshes of northern Minnesota and Wisconsin four great streams of wanderers are pouring southward. If they could be photographed a thousand yards in air, they would show four parallel black lines across the face of the land beneath them. These are ducks, geese, brant and swans. One line extends down the Atlantic coast. Another long line sweeps above Superior, Erie, Huron and Michigan lakes. Another is flying swiftly just to the eastward of the great Rocky chain, and still another is to the westward of those mountains, bound to the feeding grounds of Southern California and Mexico. The blue-winged teal is one of the first pilgrims; sometimes his migration begins in August. Down in Texas the senna ponds were lately populous with them; ducks are fond of senna seeds, and even the fish-eating varieties fly in from the Gulf to these ponds for their fresh-water supply. The teals roost upon the bays at night, floating in sleep, and they may be seen upon the water when there is moonlight, a black patch acres in extent, and containing thousands of birds. They do not tarry in Texas long; their wings are swift, and they are bound for more southern seas. They will be followed by green-wings, sprig-tails, wood ducks, mallards, butter balls, widgeons, spoonbills, black mallards, redheads, canvasbacks and the hooded merganza. This order of southward migration, governed by some law unknown to man, never varies.

Bridal Presents.

Authorities on good form are enunciating the law that only relatives and intimate friends of the contracting parties, and members of the two families have the right to make gifts to a bridal pair: and that it is in wretched taste for the mere acquaintance to venture on such a liberty. The rule is a sensible one. When Ophelia returns Hamlet's gifts, Shakspeare makes her say:

Rich gifts wax poor when givers grow unkind.

And only those who love us should make us gifts; even when we give alms, our gifts are poor if we give not love with them. Every gift that goes to the newly-wedded should be accompanied with love and good wishes as fervent as prayer. The gift that Black's heroine, "Nan," appreciated most, was a basket of wild roses, every thorn removed from the stem by a poor wanderer to whom she had been kind, and who handed them to her as she came out of church.

THE GOSPEL IN ITALIAN VALLEYS.

A Unique Settlement Among the Sabine Hills—The Angelini Mission.

NESTLED among the hills of Sabina, Italy, lies the little village of Forano, which has for several years past been the scene of one of the most zealous and progressive Christian missions in the ancient kingdom. Concerning this work, which is known as the Angelini Mission, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received much interesting information from Rev. A. Nelson Hollifield, D.D., Pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, Newark, N. J., who is thoroughly familiar with its various phases: also from Mrs. Angelini, and from Miss Teaido, an Italian missionary in New York, who at one time visited the Angelini Mission.

REV. LUIGI ANGELINI.

Forano has 1,200 inhabitants, is thirty miles north of Rome, and the centre of a densely populated district; forty-five villages, containing one thousand people each, crowning the hills which stand as sentinels about it. Seven of these villages constitute out-stations of the mission, and give bright promise of growth. The mission is named in honor of its founder, the Rev. Luigi Angelini. Mr. Angelini, born in Forano, educated for, and ordained to, the Romish priesthood, was parish priest in Forano at the time of his conversion to Protestantism twenty-five years ago, which was through the instrumentality of the eloquent Gavazzi. For many years he was Deputy of the Free Church of Italy to our country, and was instrumental in securing $50,000 for it.

PROTESTANT CHURCH AT FORANO, FOUNDED BY MR. ANGELINI.

In 1888 he conceived the idea of organizing a mission in Forano, so that the present year marks the tenth anniversary of this work, one second to none in Italy in its strategic position among the Sabine hills, the efficiency of its methods, the completeness of organization and equipment, and the thoroughness of its work. The spirit of American progress is visible in church, and school, and manse, and a refining and elevating influence is exerted upon the entire community.

Some years ago Mr. Angelini purchased a body of land around Forano, which is farmed on shares by forty-five families connected with his church, they receiving two-thirds, and himself one-third (which is more than consumed by taxes, etc.), of crops grown thereon. The adoption of this plan, which is that followed by the Roman Church, was necessary to the preservation of the Mission, which otherwise might be without a habitation, and its members without land to cultivate—a condition of things hard to be understood in America. In connection with the church and Sunday School there is a day school, a kindergarten Helping Hand, Christian Endeavor societies, sewing circles, etc. The church and school property is held in trust, until such time as, in the judgment of the trustees, it may be expedient to transfer it to the Waldensian or some other Italian ecclesiastical organization. The following gentlemen constitute the Board of Trustees: Mr. Charles P. Platt, President, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Hon. Ralph E. Prince, Yonkers, N. Y.; Mr. Horace Alling, Newark, N. J.; Albridge C. Smith, Esq., Secretary, New York City; Frank C. Bartlett, Esq., Newark, N. J.; Rev. George S. Bishop, D.D., Orange, N. J.; Rev. I. B. Hopwood, D.D., Newark, N. J. The mission is sustained by the National Angelini Society of the United States of America, the officers of which are: President, Mrs. Horace Alling, Newark, N. J.; Vice-President, Mrs. A. Nelson Hollifield, Newark, N. J.; Recording Secretary, Miss M. R. McIlvaine, Newark, N. J.; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. H. F. Scott, Poughkeepsie, N.Y.; Treasurer, Mrs. E. P. Platt, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. The Rev. Matteo Prochet, D.D., President of the Committee of Evangelization, of the Waldensian Church in Italy, has supervision of the work, and as soon as a mortgage of $1,800 on the church property is paid it is expected that the mission will be regularly received into the Waldensian Church. Mrs. Angelini (who is a native of Maryland, and who met Mr. Angelini while attending school at Florence, Italy), during a recent visit to this country, has raised the above sum with the exception of $300. This lady is indeed a helpmeet to her husband, training the young people and fitting them for Christian work; she teaches the kindergarten, a teachers' class, Bible class, and conducts the Helping Hand, sewing circle, etc. Her lecture, "The Roman Woman, Past and Present," delivered while here for the benefit of the mission, was heard with interest, showing, as it did, that she thoroughly understands and truly loves the people among whom her lot is cast. Her kindergarten session continues till four p. m., because the mothers of the children are at work in the fields; after it is dismissed, the little ones linger about the manse, loath to go, and as she sits at the window with her sewing, little Italian voices are always calling up confidences to the "Senora." The manse is open every evening to the people; they bring their knitting and their sewing; their flax and their distaffs from which in primitive way, they spin the linen thread; the young men and maidens, the boys and girls come, and make themselves at home. Before leave-taking, they are called together in family prayer. Forano is cold in winter and the people are ill-prepared for it, for they are very, very poor, and the warmth of the fires in the pastor's home is a great boon to them. They rarely have meat to eat except on holidays, their staple diet during winter being corn-meal cakes, cooked in the ashes, and called pizza. There was great joy at the manse among the simple villagers there, when their beloved "Senora," just from America, opened her boxes, and showed the treasures she had brought,—dolls for little girls, who had never seen a doll; tops, hitherto unknown delights to little boys, picture cards, a croquet set, for summer time, and various winter games for the young peoples' evenings at the manse; needles and thread for the sewing-circle; and for all who could use them to advantage, seeds of every kind of vegetable, sugar-cane seed with the rest. With the introduction of American methods and ideas, there is promise of temporal, as well as spiritual, advancement for this little Protestant farming community in Forano.

The Inward Voice.

Matron Falke, of the Good Samaritan Home for Girls in New York, relates this striking story of rescue and conversion:

"One bitterly cold night last winter, I felt impelled to visit the slums, in search of a girl who I believed needed kindly counsel. Once before I had had this girl in our Home, but had to send her away for misconduct. On this bleak night an inward voice kept saying to me: 'Go and get Katie and bring her to the Home;' and, though it was eleven o'clock and very stormy, I dressed and went down to the slums and found my girl. I then learned something at which I wondered. About half an hour before I met her—or at the very moment when I had felt the impulse to go—she had gone forward at a mission meeting, and had asked God to save her from her sinful life, and give her an opportunity to live decently. Though one of the vilest of women, yet on that day she was gloriously saved, and today is earning an honest living, kept by the power of God.

"In my work in the Home, I have seen many girls saved, but I think that this case is the most wonderful, for surely it was altogether of God's doing. Truly, God's mercy is boundless."

THE KAISER'S PALESTINE TOUR.

He Will Witness the Consecration of the New Lutheran Church in Jerusalem, and Visit the Holy Places of Palestine.

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S visit to Palestine is just now attracting the attention of Europe, which is always interested in the doings of this energetic ruler. He will be accompanied by the Empress, who is an ardent photographer, and who will take with her a complete photographic outfit to picture all the interesting scenes and functions. Knackfuss, a well-known painter, and Waltzmann, a marine painter, accompany the party, as will the Oriental artist, Israel Goentz, whose father accompanied Crown Prince Frederick of Prussia to Jerusalem in 1869, and who painted a famous picture now hanging in the Berlin National Gallery.

It is said that the Emperor's programme includes a religious ceremony on the Mount of Olives, on October 30. The imperial party will number 128 persons; the horses and mules will total over 8,000, and 1,000 Turkish troops will form the escort. The political side of Emperor William's visit to Palestine is attracting close attention abroad.

The imperial journey to Jerusalem began on October 11, when the Emperor and Empress left Potsdam. More than one hundred retainers of high and low degree, including the Foreign Minister, the Chancellor of the Order of St. John, Jerusalem, a Bishop; military, marine, and Oriental painters, photographers, secretaries, soldiers, writers, and couriers combined will make a picturesque cavalcade. The plans were to reach the Bosphorus and enter Constantinople on Monday, the 17th, the Emperor to ride into the city on a pure-bred Arab horse, the gift of the Sultan, the metal part of the harness being of gold and silver.

The royal pilgrims leaving the Turkish capital October 22, expect to disembark at Haifa on the 25th inst., and thence traverse the road to Jerusalem, partly on horseback and partly in carriages. They will encamp before the Holy City on the 27th, and make their entry at 3:30 p.m. on the same day, and proceed afoot from the Jaffa gate to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, where religious services will be held. The Mount of Olives will be visited on the 30th, and the crowning ceremony will be the dedication of the Church of the Redeemer, on the 31st, the anniversary of the date when Luther nailed his theses to the church door at Wittenburg. On the same date, in 1893, the cornerstone of the church was laid (as recorded in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at the time), and within the stone a document was deposited which had been written by the present Emperor, and also declaring that it "shall stand as a monument to the Faith opened to evangelical Christendom through the reformers, and as a visible witness to the unity of faith which the evangelical churches of Germany are bound with each other and all outside." The Church of the Redeemer is built upon the site of the ancient Muristan, or hospital of the Christian Knights of St. John, which had been a ruin for many years before it was presented, in 1869, by the Sultan to Emperor William I. It was officially taken possession of by the Crown Prince, afterward Frederick III., at the time of the opening of the Suez Canal, and four years ago, as already stated, the cornerstone of the great and imposing edifice, now completed, was laid with solemn ceremonies. It is believed to be Emperor William's purpose to make the new church a centre of Protestantism in the East. There are some who assert that he even has higher aims, and that he foresees, in the growth of Protestantism and the gradual decline of the power of the Papacy and of the Orthodox Russian Church, an opportunity to invest Protestantism in the East with greater power and influence than it has ever commanded in the past.

Great preparations have been made for the imperial visitors. The roads have been repaired, and many beautifully decorated carriages will be placed at the disposal of the pilgrims by the Turkish authorities. The royal itinerary, it is understood, includes a visit to every place of sacred or historic interest in Palestine. According to the programme, as announced, these will include:

A drive to Jericho, camping that evening at the foot of Deschebel-Karantel. On November 1, they will spend a couple of hours by the Dead Sea, going thence to the Jordan, lunching probably near the place of baptism, and return to Jericho to camp. Afterward a visit will be paid to the Chapel of the Temptation, in a grotto of Mount Karantel, inhabited by Russian monks. Wednesday and Thursday, the 2d and 3d, will be spent in Jerusalem. On Friday, November 4, visits will be paid to the Monastery of Marsala and the Jews' Wailing Place. On Saturday, November 5, the party will bid goodby to Jerusalem and travel to Jaffa once more, by rail this time, and will there embark. Sunday should see them at Haifa, whence, on Monday, they will drive and ride to Nazareth and Mount Tabor, where they will camp for the night, having viewed those two famous places. The summit of Mount Tabor commands a splendid view; on the north, the Mount of Beatitudes, the head of Galilee; on the east, the Jordan Valley and mountains of Gilead; on the south, Endor and the plains of Esdraelon; on the west, Nazareth, Mount Carmel and the Mediterranean. On Tuesday, November 8, they will move on to Tiberias, and spend the day on the shores of the Sea of Galilee. On Wednesday they will return to Haifa and sail for Beyrout, which will be reached on Friday. Among the sights here are Sennacherib, the Assyrian's rock sculptures. On Saturday, November 12, a special train will carry the party to Damascus, where the hotel will be used. The whole of Sunday will be devoted to a tour of the oldest city in the world. Among the sights may be mentioned the house of Judas, the house of Ananias, the Lepers' Hospital, which is the reputed site of Naaman's, and the bazaars, said to be finer than those of Cairo or Constantinople. On Monday another special train will transport the party to that other ancient place called Baalbec, or rather its ruins—Baalbec, the Baal god of Joshua, the Heliopolis of the Greeks, once the most magnificent city of Syria. On Tuesday the party will return to Beyrout, and on Wednesday, November 16, they will sail for home.

It is also said that a special firman has been granted by the Sultan, permitting excavations to be made under the Emperor's directions, the expectation or hope being that some ancient temple or other building of Biblical times may be found under the debris of the Holy City.

BROWN:—I had just the same experience until I read one of the Ivory Soap advertisements about too much alkali in some soaps, which draws the natural oil from the skin and leaves it dry and liable to crack, so I sent out and got a cake of Ivory Soap, and found it all the advertisement promised; my hands are soft and smooth the year round.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Young Women and the Problem of Life in Town — About Weddings — Regarding Literary Work, etc.

THERE are several ways in which young girls coming to New York from the country to study art or music can establish themselves comfortably. Of course if they have money enough they may board, but the price of board in New York is very high, and it is rather discouraging to a girl who must count every penny of her income to make a pilgrimage from house to house, finding that all she can manage for the money she can pay is a cheerless hall bedroom, so small that there is room in it for little more than her bed and bureau, and with no opportunity for heat beyond that afforded by the gas jet. The problem has been solved pleasantly for some self-supporting young women in these latter days by the establishment of pleasant homes for themselves. The plan is something like the following:

One girl, whose mother or elder sister can accompany her, establishes the home. The mother takes an apartment and furnishes it, and then as many young women as can be accommodated join the first under the care of the older woman. These either pay a certain weekly amount in board, or they put their earnings together in such a way that they can afford to keep house. I have had the pleasure several times of being entertained as a guest in these delightful girl colonies, and nothing is more interesting than to see the way in which they economize space and the pleasant home effect which they produce. Young journalists, artists, and other wage-earning women thus uniting can make a very charming resting-place for themselves when their day's work is done, at much less expense than the individual girl will be obliged to lay out if she simply boards by herself. In these homes it is amusing and interesting to see how every inch of room is made to tell. An old cooking stove is transformed into a dressing table by the judicious use of draperies; and a corner closet is easily turned into book-shelves. There is nothing like a bed visible in the little parlor, but the divan on which you sit so comfortably is a big chest with a lid which opens and in which clothing reposes, and its padded top with springs and cushions forms an admirable bed at night. It is well if one must economize space to have a divan rather than a folding bed. A folding bed proclaims itself for what it is, while a divan is at home in the drawing room and cunningly conceals its ulterior object.

YOUNG women coming to a large city in which they have no friends should put themselves at once in communication with the Young Women's Christian Association of the place. By doing this they will at once find helpful hands extended to them, be welcomed by good women, and in a general way find their comfort cared for and opportunities given them for safely establishing themselves in the new environment. But do not come, girls, unless you are prepared for hard times and disappointments and long waiting.

* * *

READER. There is no absolute rule about the hour preferred for a wedding. Ultra fashionable people have lately followed the English custom, and been married in the morning before twelve o'clock; but afternoon and evening weddings are just as common as ever. Usually, at a church wedding the bride comes in on the arm of her father, the ushers, maids of honor and mother having preceded them down the aisle. The groom steps forward to meet the bride, the groom and best man waiting with the clergyman at the altar. The ring is put on the bride's finger by the officiating clergyman, who asks for it at the proper time. It is important that the groom should have the ring in a convenient pocket where he can easily get it. I once knew a marriage ceremony to be delayed in the very middle a half hour while search was made for the ring, which was finally discovered in the pocket of the groom's coat in the bottom of a trunk. Have your wits about you when you are getting married. You need them then quite as much as at any other time in life.

* * *

I CAN hardly urge another friend who wishes to give up a remunerative occupation to do this and engage in literary work. The strong probability is that she would enter upon a career of disappointment and lack of success, and in the meantime the work she now has would have drifted into other hands. Nothing is more uncertain than literary pursuits, and when stories are persistently returned by editors with the polite formula "Declined with thanks," the writers would better turn their attention to something else. One thing which many young writers forget is that their circumstances have nothing to do with the acceptance or rejection of their stories. It is never worth while to send word to an editor that you are poor, that you have a mortgage on your farm, that you have anything at all to trouble you. All that the editor has a right to be concerned with is whether or not that which you write is suitable to his paper.

* * *

THOSE who have papers and books with which they are willing to part, and who would like to send them to a settlement where they will be greatly appreciated, may do good by sending to Mrs. N. 1. Barham, Pittsburg, Crawford Co., Kansas. In every case will those sending reading matter be good enough to prepay fully the cost of transit, whether postage or expressage, as my friend writes, "We of the Kansas plains are not burdened with over much cash." This friend writes a very beautiful letter. You may remember that I spoke of her before. She says: "If you only knew the soul-thirsting and heart-hungering there is for good reading matter you would use your pen in persuading its distribution."

STARVING

In the Midst of Plenty.

That's what people with poor digestion are doing every day. They have no appetite or if they do have an appetite and eat what they require it does them no good, because the stomach does not digest it and the fermenting mass of food becomes a source of disease, of headache, sleeplessness, languor and the thousand and one symptoms of disordered digestion. Mr. Judson A. Stanion, the great Church and Sunday School worker and president Christian Endeavor Union, St. Louis, Mo., says:

"I have had to be extremely careful what I ate. Many things were indigestible, and after a hearty dinner I could scarcely keep awake. I never have been sick in bed, but have had a great deal of inconvenience from indigestion. Since I learned of the merits of Stuart's Tablets I keep them in my desk or carry them in my pocket, and find that I can eat anything at all without discomfort. They were recommended to me by a friend who is enthusiastic in their praise. I cannot afford to be drowsy after lunch, and find these tablets just the thing to aid digestion and keep all my faculties wide-awake." Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets promptly relieve and cure all forms of indigestion. They have done it in thousands of cases and will do it in yours. The reason is simple. They digest the food whether the stomach works or not and that's the whole secret. At druggists, 50 cents a box. For book on stomach diseases giving valuable advice address F. A. The Wing Piano

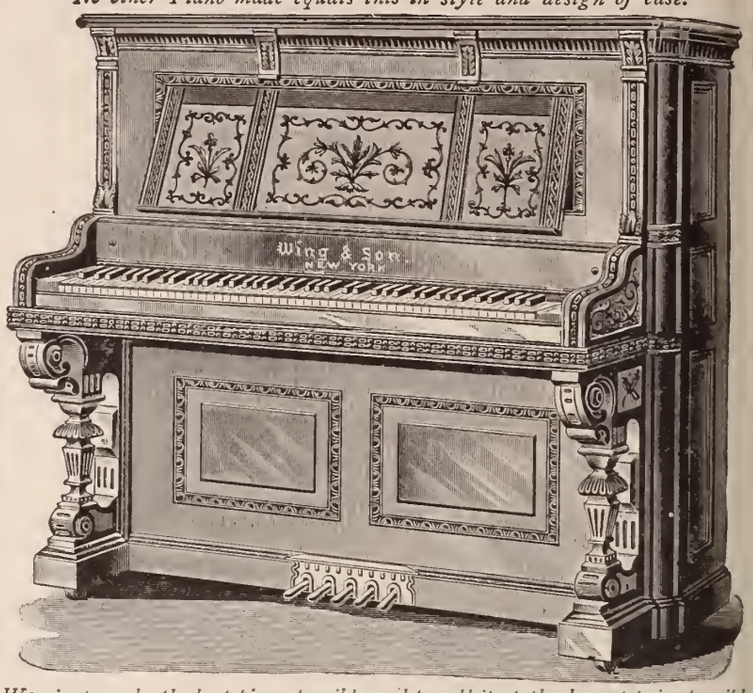
STYLE 29. CONCERT GRAND UPRIGHT.

No other Piano made equals this in style and design of case.



We aim to make the best piano possible and to sell it at the lowest price possible. If you wish to buy a fine piano at a low price, write us.

DESCRIPTION OF STYLE 29.

7⅓ octaves.

Double lever, grand repeating action.

Grand scale, overstrung bass; three strings to each note in middle and treble registers.

The scale is the same as in grand pianos, with the largest size of sound board and strings of greatest length, thus giving the greatest volume and power of tone.

Case.—Double veneered inside and outside.

Choice of superior Circassian walnut, rich figured mahogany, genuine quartered oak and ebonized.

Keys.—Of best ivory and ebony.

SPECIAL INFORMATION.

Tone.—The one great object for which a piano is made is its tone. The Wing Piano possesses magnificent tone-qualities, durability, sweetness, richness, power, singing quality and evenness.

Action.—The Wing action is patterned after the perfected double lever grand repeating action, to secure the greatest strength and power and greatest repeating qualities. Every note acts instantaneously and recovers promptly, ready for the repeat, so that after a note is played the same note may be sounded again immediately without taking the finger from key.

Improvements.—Wing Pianos have the following improvements, viz.: "Built up" wrest plank construction. "Dovetail" top and bottom frame case construction. Full metal plate, with metal depression bar and metal supports for key bed. Improved noiseless direct motion pedal action. Improved practice attachment. Full length duet music desk. Carved panels. Instrumental attachment.

THE INSTRUMENTAL ATTACHMENT

imitates perfectly the tones of the Mandolin, Guitar, Harp, Zither and Banjo. Music written for these instruments, with and without piano accompaniment, can be played just as perfectly by a single player on the piano as though rendered by a parlor orchestra.

Every Wing Piano is guaranteed for twelve (12) years against any defect in tone, action, workmanship or material

SENT ON TRIAL FREIGHT PREPAID. We will send this piano or your choice of four other styles, to any part of the United States on trial (all freight paid by us), allow ample time for a thorough examination and trial in the home, and, if the instrument is in any particular unsatisfactory, we will take it back at our own expense. No conditions are attached to this trial. We ask for no advance payment, no deposit. We pay all freights in advance. Our object in offering these terms is to give everyone an opportunity to examine the Wing Piano free of expense or risk.

Over 18,000 Wing Pianos Manufactured and Sold in 30 Years (since 1868).

WE WILL SEND FREE ON REQUEST "The Book of Complete Information about Pianos," 118 pages, handsomely bound in cloth. Everyone who intends to purchase a piano should have this book. Sent free on request with twelve (12) pieces of music.

OPEN DOORS FOR WOMEN.

The Chicago Training School, and its Work in Equipping Women for Mission Fields.

TWENTY-FIVE years ago, it was not easy for a woman to find employment along religious lines. Very few women were employed as missionaries, either in the home or foreign field. But there has been a great change. So active has woman become in Christian work—so many women are, indeed, devoting their whole time to it, that it has become a characteristic of the times, from a religious point of view. And a most hopeful characteristic. In our various foreign and home missionary societies, and in the great Deaconess movement, which engages in this country alone some six or seven hundred women devoting themselves entirely to unsalaried Christian work, we have a return of one of the methods of the Apostolic Church. The great commission: "Go—teach—preach," was given not to the twelve alone, but in spirit, at least, and probably in letter, to all of Christ's followers. And among the disciples scattered abroad by the persecution which arose about Stephen," must have been not only men but women, preaching the Word." Not always from pulpit or platform, for preaching does not always mean proclaiming, but telling about, talking about, illustrating in daily word and deed, the spirit of the crucified and risen Jesus. This modern "laying hold" of the latent power of woman, and giving it free scope in many kinds of religious work, is of the utmost significance.

But how to find women whose hearts God was touching, and how to find places for them—this was the great problem. And it was solved at the same time with another, even more difficult. For, side by side with this great demand, came another, that our missionary women be trained. Our Theological Schools have for generations furnished technical training for our young men, but it is a curious fact that only recently have our young women been given opportunity for special training in missionary work. For many years, all our missionary societies have put into the field, as a rule, trained men; and all of these societies—if they sent women at all—sent out untrained women. That our sisters in the field have succeeded and in a large majority of cases in so well meeting their varied and important responsibilities is simply astonishing, but they have done so well without training, may not their success be greatly increased by a few months or years of special drill and experience under capable teachers?

Thirteen years ago, there was established in Chicago, an institution which has exercised great influence upon popular sentiment in reference to the training of women for religious work; it was the Chicago Training School for City, Home and Foreign Missions. More than 1,000 women have studied in this school, and out from it have gone more than 300 to the foreign mission fields. So to various departments of home missionary and evangelistic work, and about 300 into the deaconess work.

All the present Superintendents of Deaconess' Homes in Omaha, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Chicago, Detroit, New York, Baltimore (Lutheran). Fall River, Mass., Providence, R. I., and Boston have gone out from this school. The course of study embraces a careful analytical study of the Bible; New Testament Greek; methods of Bible teaching and missionary work; sacred history, with special lessons and lectures on church history; Christian evidences and doctrines; elocution and music, and practical mission work, under experienced teachers. The work is undenominational. Expenses to students are reduced to a minimum, and assistance is given, wherever possible, to worthy applicants. It is not necessary to determine to devote one's self to any form of missionary work before entering the school; it is only necessary to desire to know more of the Bible, and to get wide views of religious work in a great city.

Those who may desire further information concerning the work, can address the writer at No. 4949 Indiana avenue, Chicago, Ill.

THE BEST POEMS IN THE WORLD

The poems in this series will be admirably illustrated, and, wherever possible, there will be given a sketch of the life of the poet, with a portrait, and the story of how each poem came to be written. The poems will be selected, not from the standpoint of the ultra-literary man or woman, but for their appeal to lovers of sentiment. They will be poems of the emotions—those that appeal to the heart; poems that tell a story—those that are filled with human interest. They belong to what may be called the "pocketbook school of poetry"—those poems that one cuts from a newspaper and carries in the pocketbook till they are worn through at the creases. ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

THE LESSON OF THE LEAF.*

By Charles W. Hubner.

IN sun and starlight shimmering,
And fanned by zephyr's silken wing,
Ah! what a blithe and beauteous thing,
Dead leaf, wert thou,
All through the summer's merry time,
Rejoicing still, or rain or shine,
Upon the bough.

Resplendent o'er thine airy home
Arose the sky's majestic dome;
Had never king upon the throne
Such canopy!
The bliss divine of sun and moon,
Of stars and song and fragrant bloom
Was given to thee.

Like thine our youth is fresh and green,
Our summer time a merry scene;
The sky is bright with wondrous sheen,
Our path with flowers;
What splendor circles our estate!
How leaps the heart with hopes elate!
How little do we dream of fate
And wintry hours!

Learn from the lesson of the leaf
That death is sure, that life is brief;
And foolish he whose ear is deaf,
And hath not caught
With subtle sense the solemn sound
The perfect harmony profound
Of nature, lifting round by round
The soul to God.

Departed Blessedness.†

Where is then the blessedness ye spake of.—Gal. 4: 15.

WHEN you can read anything, everything, in preference to the Bible; when prayer comes to be weariness, so that you have no delight or pleasure in it, yours is a questionable state. A little girl, one evening when all was silent, looked anxiously in the face of her backsliding father, who had ceased to pray in his family, and said to him with quivering lips, "Pa, is God dead?" "No, my child, why do ask?" "Why, pa, you never talk to him now as you used to," she replied. These words haunted the father until he was mercifully reclaimed. Montgomery says, "prayer is the breath of the soul," Breath is an indication of life, and whenever one ceases to breathe it needs no logic to convince that the subject has ceased to live. I once watched two plants growing in the same soil under the same sun; the one was a mass of flowers which dazzled the eye with beauty and filled the whole space with perfume, the other, fruitless and flowerless, hung its drooping leaves and seemed pining unto death under a deep decline. Whence the difference? The cause was neither obscure nor remote. The one had been often watered, the other neglected. Now what water is to thirsty plants, prayer is to our Christian graces. We stand astonished at the love which animated and the fruitfulness which characterized the first Christians. The riddle is read, the mystery is solved in these few words: "They continued steadfast in prayer."

It is related of a hero in Scottish history that when an overwhelming force was in full pursuit and all his followers were urging him to more rapid flight, he coolly dismounted, in order to repair a flaw in his horse's harness. Whilst he busied himself with the broken buckle, the distant cloud swept down in nearer thunder, but just as the prancing hoofs, and eager spears were ready to dash down on him, the flaw was mended, the clasp was fastened, the steed was mounted, and, like a sweeping falcon, he vanished from their view. The broken buckle would have left him in the field an inglorious prisoner, the timely delay sent him in safety to his comrades. There is in daily life the same profitable delay. The man, who from his prayerless waking hurries off to the business of the day, however admirable his talents and great his diligence, is only galloping on a steed harnessed with a broken buckle, and must not be astonished if in his hottest haste, he is left inglorious in the dust.

A want of religious enjoyment is an evidence of a departed blessedness. Most of us have all the fears and none of the joys of religion. We do most of our duties under the disagreeable idea that God expects it of us. When our hearts are in right relation with God we will perform all our religious duties, not because we must, but because we may. When our religious duties seem to us privileges, then they become to us sources of rich and continual enjoyment. Of course it is better to do our duty from the low level of a sense of duty, but we lose the charm of serving God, until our supreme love of him will make us enjoy his service at every step. He who serves God through fear of hell, or hope of heaven, serves him for the loaves and fishes. A third evidence of your departed blessedness you will find in your giving less to the cause of Christ than you used to. The goods that God has given you are to be laid out for the good of others; sacred trusts are not to be greedily hoarded, lavishly squandered, nor selfishly to be enjoyed, but generously to be employed for the glory of God. He is not rich who lays up much, but he only who lays out much. You are not to deprive yourself of the pleasures of society. God does not ask that you shall spend half of your time in hard working and the other half in hard praying. But God has made the world beautiful that it may minister to our delight. He intends us to be happy in it. It is a mistake to think that God would have us write over the church door, "All joy abandon, ye who enter here." What would become of society if all Christians stayed out of it?

NEVER BEFORE,

and we doubt if ever again will the readers of the Christian Herald have such an opportunity of getting so much music of like quality on such liberal terms and for so little money—a superb six-volume publication entitled

"Library of the World's Best Music."

Six large art volumes containing more than five hundred and fifty songs and instrumental selections for the piano or organ. Also, four hundred and fifty superb illustrations. It is a wonderful collection of music compiled by one of America's greatest musicians. It contains the gems of Reginald De Koven, Pinsuti, Schumann, Gerrit Smith, Paderewski, Sullivan, Dudley Buck, Haydn, Chopin, and hundreds of others.

The Keynote says: "The most complete and valuable Musical Library ever published."

Margaret E. Sangster, Ed. Harper's Bazar, says: "Nothing so fine and well worth having in one's home."

The Etude says: "It is a publication we can recommend. There is something that will interest all."

The Pianist says: "A vocal and instrumental library of rare excellence and comprehensiveness."

FREE

This six-volume Library of Music will be sent Free of all charges to readers of this periodical on inspection, giving them an opportunity of seeing what a wonderful collection of music it is and trying the songs and instrumental pieces. In two weeks it can be returned and no charges made, or retained by sending one dollar to the Club treasurer and agreeing to send one dollar each month for fourteen months. Club membership will be limited to one thousand.

The Library contains all the old favorite songs worthy of retention, solos, duets trios, quartettes and choruses; choice, new, original compositions by the most eminent American composers, including De Koven, Gerrit Smith, Pratt and Ambrose, and many of the best recent songs copyrighted by the Ditson Co., the Century Co., and other publishers; also a rare selection of the masterpieces of composers, such as Haydn Mendelssohn, Behr, Wagner, Arditi and Schwarenka. This collection of music is not intended for great professional musicians, but is that best adapted for use in American homes of culture and refinement.

There are also over three hundred critical estimates and biographical sketches of composers and their compositions, and nearly five hundred portraits and illustrations including many exquisite full-page half-tone plates, making it a complete Musical Library. This treasury of music, portraits and biographies is procurable by club members at one-tenth of the cost of the music alone in sheet form.

It is only possible to sell this collection on these terms and prices by reason of the club being able to place an enormous order, and it is their purpose to give their members the benefit of the purchase. Moreover, members will be entitled to such further collections and volumes as it may be deemed wise to issue from time to time at wholesale rates.

We feel confident that the limited edition will be rapidly exhausted, and inasmuch as no risk or obligation is incurred by sending for the set, it would be well for musicians and families to get their names in at the earliest possible date. Address

Choosing an Empress in China.

WHILE there are many singular marriage customs in the East, that of choosing the bride in China is probably the most remarkable of all that have relation to the matrimonial ceremony. It is thus described by an Englishman, long resident in Pekin:

"An Empress of China attains to that dignity by competitive examination. Just ten years ago this ordeal was passed through by a large number of young ladies, who were entitled to compete for the honor. The initial qualification is that the aspirant must belong to a family of a certain rank, and of Manchu extraction. A series of inspections are made, during which the number of candidates are reduced to a manageable compass. On the last occasion (which was just ten years ago), the first two inspections left thirty-one damsels in the field. They were conveyed in closed carts into the palace at a very early hour in the morning. A banquet was set before them to refresh them after their night's travel, and then they were ushered into the presence of that august, but terrible Majesty, the Empress-Dowager, who passed them under review in groups of four or five. Her Majesty on that occasion wore an apricot yellow silk robe, with a black velvet jacket over it. Each girl carried a tablet bearing her age, name and pedigree, which was handed to the empress, the girls standing before her. After some interrogations, and even scraps of grandmotherly advice, Her Majesty made up her mind respecting the candidate. When the opinion was unfavorable, the girl's tablet was handed to one of the attendants, with an order to present the disappointed one with a roll of silk. She, with her silk, was then conducted back to her cart, and was out of the competition. On the last occasion, the third scrutiny left fifteen, who were retained in the palace until it should please Her Majesty to summon them to further examinations.

REDUCED RATES TO PHILADELPHIA VIA PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD, ACCOUNT PEACE JUBILEE.

For the grand Peace Jubilee at Philadelphia, October 26 and 27, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will sell excursion tickets from all ticket stations on its line, to Philadelphia, at rate of single fare for the round trip (minimum rate, 25 cents). Tickets will be sold and good, going, October 24 to 27, and returning leaving Philadelphia October 31, inclusive.

This jubilee will be one of the greatest events in the history of Philadelphia. The rededication of Independence Hall, recently restored; the unveiling of the Grant Equestrian Monument, Fairmount Park; a monster civic and industrial parade, and a grand military and naval pageant, led by General Miles and other distinguished heroes of the late war, will be prominent features. The President and his Cabinet are also expected to be present.

A New Remedy for Rheumatism

Dr. Wm. Porter, St. Louis, writes: "The Tartarlithine you sent me some months ago seemed exactly what I needed. I used it for a long time, and even now have to go back to it; but I notice the indications for it are less and less frequent. I consider it quite an addition to my list. My general health is quite restored."

wheat has been the most important food of the human race. In the early centuries the entire wheat kernel was used in making bread, and "there were giants in those days." The Franklin Mills Fine Flour of the Entire Wheat is manufactured by a process that retains the Starch, Gluten, Mineral Salts and Phosphate elements just as nature stored them in the grain. As a consequence this flour supplies the food that will build up, repair, nourish and sustain the brain, bones, muscles, nerves and working tissues of the body.

OVER THE RIVER.*

WHEN our work is ended, we shall sweetly rest,
'Mid the sainted spirits, on our Saviour's breast.
All our trials over, we shall gladly sing,
Grave, where is thy victory? Death, where is thy sting?

Though the dark waves roll high, we will be undismayed,
Let us pass over the river, and rest under the shade.

Earth hath many sorrows, but they cannot last,
And our greatest troubles quickly will be past;
If we look to Jesus, he will give us strength;
By his grace we shall be conquerors at length.

When the storm is over, sweet will be the calm,
After life's long battle, bright the victor's palm;
And the cross of anguish, which now weighs us down,
We'll exchange in heaven, for a shining crown.

* This hymn, which has been asked for by several readers, is an old favorite and was based on Stonewall Jackson's last words.

Negro Training at Tuskegee.

During the last few years the Tuskegee, Ala., Normal and Training Institute has made remarkable strides under the able management of Booker T. Washington, the negro educator and philanthropist. This year it has an enrollment of 1,047 students (712 boys and 335 girls). The scholars, together with the teachers and their families, who live on the grounds, make a total population of 1,200 persons. It is the purpose of the Institute to elevate the negro and develop Christian character. Besides the spiritual training, each pupil is taught a trade or industry, and given a thorough academic course, making him an intelligent and desirable citizen, and a helper and teacher of his own race. In all there are taught twenty-six industries. It is estimated that at least 3,000 workers from the Institute are now scattered throughout the South. 321 of these are graduates, the others having left before the completion of the course on account of a lack of funds, but still with a good start in the right direction. The only way to help and elevate the negro, Mr. Washington contends, is to teach him a good trade, or a training in dairying or agriculture. This he receives at the Institute; a large proportion of the food consumed being raised on the place.

A splendid large new chapel has been built by the students, and also an Agricultural Building, and a Science Hall. The Tuskegee School and the Hampton Institute together, have done more to help the colored people in the South than most other agencies, and deserve all the assistance that can be given them.

BRONCHITIS.

Dr. Hunter's Lecture No. 4.

In my last letter I said that catarrhal inflammation of the mucous membrane of the air passages often extends to the bronchial tubes, and then becomes a very distressing and dangerous disorder. It may involve the membrane on one side of the chest only, or the whole mucous lining of both lungs, and in the latter case puts the patient's life in great peril.

This catarrh of the lungs sometimes lingers long in the dry stage. In most instances, however, it soon begins to secrete a glary mucus. This secretion is clear and very tenacious. It clings together in one mass, so that you can hardly pour it from one vessel to another, and its surface is covered with froth. The froth is made by the churning of the matter with the air in the lungs in the efforts of the patient to force it up by coughing.

So long as the inflammation continues active, the matter remains viscid and frothy. But the moment it begins to subside it loses its transparency, becomes opaque and of a yellowish or greenish yellow color. The froth disappears, the breathing becomes freer, and all the bad symptoms are lessened.

The above course of Catarrh of the Lungs and Acute Bronchitis when it progresses to recovery. It generally begins to break up from the fourteenth to the eighth day. When the symptoms do not yield to the treatment, [illegible] of impending suffocation soon show themselves, the lips and tongue become of a purplish color, the face assumes a livid paleness, the skin is bathed in clammy perspiration, and the patient tosses from side to side in great anxiety. The lividity shows that the poisonous, venus blood is circulating through the arteries, because sufficient air cannot be drawn into the lungs to change it. The bronchial tubes are so choked with the viscid mucus, before described, that the patient has not strength to cough it up.

I attended a case some time ago which very clearly exemplifies the peril of bronchitis. I was called to a lady at the Gramercy Park Hotel, who was thought to be dying. I found her sitting up in bed, unable to lie down and laboring for breath. Her face was livid, her shoulders elevated, and nostrils distended and working violently. She could hardly speak, and was in great fear of suffocation. She had been in that condition for several days, and was steadily growing weaker. Her friends had gathered around her bedside, anticipating death at any moment. To give her all the air possible, I cleared the room of every one not needed; applied strong mustard drafts to her feet and calves of her legs; rubbed a powerful embrocation into her chest to draw the blood away from the lungs; ordered hot emollient inhalations to soothe the inflammed membrane, to be given every half hour, and diffused through the air of her room a sedative and antisposmodic vapor that every breath she drew should bear a healing, soothing balm directly to the diseased parts. Under this treatment, copious expectorations soon commenced, the breathing became less and less labored, and within 24 hours the bronchial inflammation was subdued, and all danger passed. But for this local treatment, I am convinced she would not have lived more than a few hours. General treatment is of very little value in such cases. Every effort must be directed to the inflammed membrane, and to relieving the breathing by promoting free expectorations from the lungs.

Specialist in Throat and Lung Cases,
No. 117 West 45th St. New York.

NOTE.—Dr. Hunter's book explaining the anti-septic air treatment of all lung diseases will be sent free to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who are interested, by addressing him as above.

THE GOOD FIGHT.

Th Christian Life a Struggle to be Won l Imparted Strength. I. Timothy 6: 11- 1 II. Timothy 4: 7, 8.

From certain sermons and prayers that are often heard, a mischievous idea has become prevalent as to the means by which a Christian may grow in grace. Many persons think that they may re- passive until some miracle is worked p them which will suddenly deliver e from liability to sin and make them nerable to temptation. The Apostle al does not seem to have had that e in the two passages selected for the He sets forth the Christian life as s ggle, requiring effort and vigilance. an could give more glory to God for his race than he; none could depend pe it more implicitly; but he did not that grace relieved men of the neces- or effort. He fought himself, eminent was, and he urged his young disciple t. He did not wait for a blessing h should confer upon him, as a suit othes, the graces he proceeds to erate. The image he uses implies here are enemies to overcome, and ience confirms his idea. There are neies without, in the shape of trials, ions, annoyances, temptations—all ting to disturb the spirit and arouse ilbassions. There are also enemies it , in the shape of evil propensities, l. malice, sloth, avarice, envy, we are expected to overcome. oes not hope to overcome them own power. In the familiar pas- n the seventh chapter of Romans es a vivid description of the failure ttends the effort to conquer unaided: ith God's help he is sure of victory. in the power that Christ imparts to who seek it that he sees the promise umph. The discouraged man who ied and failed; the discouraged man as prayed for deliverance and has en delivered, may here learn the of success. Free to all Readers.—The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

As stated in the last issue the new botanical discovery Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorder action of the Kidneys and urinary organs. The New York World publishes the remarkable case Rev. A. C. Darling, minister of the gospel at North Constantia, New York, cured by Alkavis, when he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing himself for certain death. Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from others, including many suffering from disorders peculiar to woman- The Church Kidney Cure Co., of No. 499 Fourth Avenue, New York, who so far are its only owners, are so anxious to prove its value that for the purpose of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Pelvic Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

RIO, WIS., June 30th, 1898.

GENTLEMEN:—In reply to your letter requesting the use of my photograph for advertising purposes, and asking how I am pleased with the work, would say I do not object to your using my photograph, as your prices are very low and garments so exact to my measurements that I gladly recommend you. I would add that I have never made less than $80.00 per month since I received your first outfit, and in the best months have made as high as $350.00 per month. Very truly,

E. J. DOYLE.

Should you write Mr. Doyle, be sure to enclose a 2c stamp for reply.

We have hundreds of letters similar to Mr. Doyle's.

We Want to Engage You to take orders for our Made-to-Order and Measure Custom Tailoring, (Men's Suits, Pants and Overcoats). We put you in the way to take orders from almost every man in your county, a business better than a store with a $20,000.00 stock. You will have no competition.

WE ARE THE LARGEST TAILORS IN AMERICA of Fine Custom-Made Garments. We buy our cloth direct from the largest European and American Mills. We control the product of several woolen mills. We operate the most extensive and economic custom tailoring plants in existence, thus reducing the price of Suits and Overcoats made-to-order to $5.00 and upward; Pants from $1.50 to $5.00. Prices so low that nearly every one in your county will be glad to have their Suits and Overcoats made to order.

WE FURNISH YOU A large, handsome leather bound book containing large cloth samples of our entire line of Suitings, Overcoatings and Pantaloonings, a book which costs us several dollars to get up, also Fine Colored Fashion Plates, Instruction Book, Tape Measure, Business Cards, Stationery, Advertising Matter, your name on rubber stamp with pad complete. We also furnish you a Salesman's Net Confidential Price List. The prices are left blank under each description so you can fill in your own selling prices, arranging your profit to suit yourself. As soon as you have received your sample book and general outfit and have read our book of instructions carefully, which teaches you how to take orders, and marked in your selling price you are ready for business and can begin taking orders from every one. At your low prices business men, farmers, and in fact every one will order their suits made. You can take several orders every day at $1.00 to $5.00 profit on each order, for every one will be astonished at your low prices.

YOU REQUIRE NO MONEY Just take the orders and send them to us and we will make the garments within 5 days and send direct to your customers by express C. O. D., subject to examination and approval, at your selling price, and collect your full selling price, and every week we will send you a check for all your profit. You need collect no money, deliver no goods, simply go on taking orders, adding a liberal profit, and we deliver the goods, collect all the money and every week promptly send you in one round check your full profit for the week. Nearly all our good men get a check from us of at least $40.00 every week in the year.

THE OUTFIT IS FREE We make no charge for the book and complete outfit, but as EACH OUTFIT COSTS US SEVERAL DOLLARS, to protect ourselves against many who would impose on us by sending for the outfit with no intention of working, but merely out of idle curiosity, AS A GUARANTEE OF GOOD FAITH ON THE PART OF EVERY APPLICANT, we require you to fill out the blank lines below, giving the names of two parties as reference, and further agreeing to pay ONE DOLLAR and express charges for the outfit when received, if found as represented and really a sure way of making big wages. The $1.00 you agree to pay when outfit is received does not begin to pay the cost to us but insures us you mean business. WE WILL REFUND YOUR $1.00 AS SOON AS YOUR ORDERS HAVE AMOUNTED TO $25.00, which amount you can take the first day you work.

Fill out the following lines carefully, sign your name, cut out and send to us, and the outfit will be sent you at once

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Mrs. C. E. S. When, where and why was the name of Saul of Tarsus, called Paul the Apostle?

Nothing is said in the Scripture to explain the change of name. It is known, however, that it was quite common in those times for Jews to bear, besides their own Jewish name, another borrowed from the country or nation with which they had become connected. Thus Simeon had the surname of Niger, Barsabas was also called Justus, and John received or adopted the appellation of Marcus. Saul, the Jew of Tarsus, would with equal facility become Paulus among the Gentiles, the transposition being a very slight one, and, as already shown, in accordance with a very prevalent custom.

Young Student, Portland, Me. What does the word "genre" mean in art criticism? What is a "genre" painter?

He is one who paints domestic, rural or village scenes. "Genre," broadly interpreted, means man, his customs, habits, and ways of life.

C. W. A., Tomahawk, Va. 1. Are there any missionaries in Egypt, and is that country being converted to Christ? 2. Who is our Consul-General there?

1. Missionary work is conducted in Egypt by the United Presbyterian Church of the United States and the Church Missionary Society of London. The first-named has the largest work. Miss Whately (now dead), did excellent mission work in establishing schools for the Moslem children, which are now in charge of the Church Missionary Society. The Wesleyan Methodists and Colonial and Continental Society have also missions in Egypt, the former chiefly confining its work to the army. 2. Thos. S. Harrison, at Cairo, Egypt.

S. J. M., Philadelphia, Pa. How did the phrase, "Father of his Country," originate?

Cicero was so called by the Roman Senate. Marius was offered the same title, but declined to accept it. Julius and Augustus Cæsar were also honored with this title. Cosmo de Medici also bore it in the fifteenth century. The title is inscribed on the statue of Andrea Doria in Genoa, and the Emperor Andronicus Paleologus II. was so designated. There is an equivalent phrase employed in 1. Chron. 4:14.

Paper-maker, Niagara Falls, N. Y. You published a number of Biblical quotations against liquor-drinking, but you said nothing about Paul's advice to Timothy (I. Timothy 5:23), to drink no more water, but use wine for his stomach's sake. How does that advice agree with your contention that the Bible is against liquor?

The principles of the Bible are against liquor, and if you apply them to your own life you will abstain. There may be cases in which wine may do good as a medicine, just as there are complaints in which morphine may be beneficial, and Timothy's may have been one of them. But that is a very different thing from the tippling habits we were discussing which the Bible condemns. The passage shows that Timothy, whom Paul had trained, was an abstainer, but Paul who had said (I. Timothy 3:3), that bishops must "not be given to wine," appears to have regarded the case as exceptional. The evil that liquor does in these days in breaking up homes, ruining lives, and filling our jails and almshouses is so great, that if Paul saw it, the man who said that if meat caused his brother to stumble, he would eat no meat while the world standeth, would undoubtedly counsel abstinence.

E. I. B., Bridgeport, Conn. Would a man of fifty-eight years of age, accustomed to mission work in the slums and prepared for self-sacrifice and labor, be acceptable for missionary work in Africa?

We would earnestly advise him not to go. He would probably fall a victim to the climate, and if he lived, would lose much precious time in learning the language. He had far better continue his mission work at home, and leave the foreign field to younger men.

Hartlea, Wilmington, Del. Can you tell me whether a person is a Christian who has never felt any sudden conviction of sin or emotional change which could be called conversion but who has wept bitterly over sin and has honestly tried to amend?

Sorrow over sin and an effort to amend, are Christian duties, but do not make a person a Christian. Neither do the sudden conviction of sin and emotional change, that you mention, though they may accompany, or precede, the new birth, by which a person becomes a Christian. As you will see by Christ's own explanation to Nicodemus (John 3:3–21), the new birth is the work of the Holy Spirit, which is given freely to all who seek. When a person ardently desires to become a Christian, he asks Christ to save him, not only from future punishment, but from present sin. He should believe in Christ's power to do so, and should confidently place his case in Christ's hands, as he would place his case in the hands of a physician, if he were sick. The effort to amend will then take new shape, because Christ's life and strength will be imparted and victory assured. Christ promises to dwell in the heart of any who desire his presence and will yield themselves to him. With Christ in the heart there will be new life, and by union with him the person becomes a Christian.

R. M., Paterson, N. J. At a debating club here, a few evenings ago, it was contended that Rome was the oldest existing city in the world. Are there not older cities?

Yes, several. Athens is its senior, being about 3,450 years old, while Rome is a mere stripling of 2,600 by comparison. Tangier, in Morocco, is a full century older than Rome. Pekin, China, claims an antiquity of 3,000 or more and Jerusalem nearly 4,000, while Damascus, which is said to have been founded by a great-grandson of Noah, boasts of an authenticated existence covering 4,200 years.

D. F., Sauble Falls, Ont. What do you think of the reorganized church of Latter Day Saints? Do the leaders uphold polygamy?

We do not think there has been any improvement in the doctrines of the church. These have been repeatedly exposed and denounced in the press, and exposures have been made by people who once belonged to the church but left it in disgust. The elder, who you say is preaching in your neighborhood, probably keeps their most objectionable features in the background. The Mormon missionaries usually do so. We believe that ostensibly the leaders do not now uphold polygamy, as it is contrary to law; but it is alleged, by persons who are regarded as good authority, that the law is evaded, and that marriages are made which are not recognized by law, but are held valid by the Mormon church. You can obtain full particulars by addressing Gen. John Eaton, The Concord, Washington, D. C.

A. S., Dickinson, Va. 1. What was meant by "Clay being in succession?" 2. Give pronunciation of Coleridge, Bysshe, plebiscite.

1. You do not state in what connection the phrase was used. 2. "Co-ler-idge;" "o" long and other vowels short; "bish," the "i" being short; "pleb-is-it," all vowels short.

J. G., Sloane, Pa. Is it right to be continually saying in prayer that we are altogether vile? Ought we to consider it presuming to try to literally fulfill Christ's demand to be perfect?

There are many people so impressed with their own imperfections that with them such expressions cannot be restrained. It is well that the fact of absolute dependence on God's grace for spiritual life, and of distrust of our own strength should be felt. There is Scriptural warrant for both. At the same time, there ought to be effort after a higher life. Those who strive most earnestly after perfection are generally those who most sincerely feel their own shortcomings. There is no presumption in the effort to be perfect, though there often is in the claim to perfection.

M. G. M., Poughkeepsie, N. Y. What poet wrote the lines:

> The means the heavens provide
> Are not neglected.
> They should be embraced?

You probably refer to the following from Shakspeare:

The means that heaven yields must be embraced
And not neglected.

Minnie L. B., Terryville, Conn. According to the law of the State of New York, can a publisher advertise to send a paper three months for ten cents, and then continue on beyond the time thus subscribed for, without being directed to do so? Can he then collect pay for the papers which he has sent of his own accord? If so, why cannot grocerymen and marketmen do the same with their wares?

A publisher cannot exact payment for his paper for a longer period than the time actually covered by the subscription. If he sends it afterward, he does so at his own risk. On the other hand, the person to whom [illegible] sent should refuse to take it from the [illegible] office or to accept it from the letter-c[illegible]. By taking it, he practically endorses the [illegible] of the publisher in sending it and incu[illegible] liability, just as a housekeeper, who (i[illegible] tinuation of previous dealings), acceptin[illegible] using food delivered to her without an [illegible] would be legally responsible for the pr[illegible] the same.

Reader, Albany, N. Y. Why is it that i[illegible] days Christians attend the theatre, da[illegible] play cards so much more generally th[illegible] used to do? Is there any reason for th[illegible] that they are innocent?

The reason probably is that in these [illegible] the profession of religion is to a cert[illegible] tent fashionable, and people finding [illegible] barrier to worldly success join the [illegible] without experiencing a change of heart. [illegible] people do not find in religion the gratifi[illegible] they want, and so seek it in the world [illegible] true Christian is just as much opposed [illegible] amusements you mention as were the [illegible] tians of former times.

Edward E., Old Orchard, Me. What is th[illegible] wick School, to which I hear of some pr[illegible] belonging? What peculiar doctrines [illegible] teach?

The name comes from certain confe[illegible] of Christians, which have been held a[illegible] at Keswick, England. The believers, wh[illegible] part in them, strive for a deepening of sp[illegible] life in the soul. They hold it to be a [illegible] n's duty to consecrate all he is and [illegible] Christ; to put away from him every hin[illegible] to progress, and earnestly endeavor [illegible] without sin. They believe that, so [illegible] Christ will fill his heart as "the ind[illegible] Christ," giving him a distaste for worl[illegible] and all forms of evil, and will impart [illegible] new strength for greater attainments [illegible] that he will enjoy a sweet peace, cons[illegible] on the cessation of the struggle betwe[illegible] evil and the good within him, the evi[illegible] brought into subjection, and so he wil[illegible] in grace and become increasingly Chris[illegible]

There is no record in the Bible of his [illegible] repented, but there is a tradition to that [illegible] Dean Farrar relates a tradition current [illegible] the Jews, also as to the circumstances [illegible] death. It is that he died while worshi[illegible] the temple that he had built. THE BIRTHPLACE OF OUR NATIONAL FLAG.

In the quaint, old-fashioned house shown in the photograph—the residence of Mrs. Elizabeth Ross, No. 239 Arch street, Philadelphia, was born "Old Glory," on June 14, 1777. In the latter part of May, or early in June of that year, Washington and a committee of Congress called on Mrs. Ross and requested her to make a flag after a rough design Washington himself had drawn. She examined the sketch, and after suggesting the substitution of five-pointed stars for six-pointed ones, agreed to make the flag. The original national standard had thirteen stripes and thirteen stars. The next day after the committee called, Mrs. Ross had the flag finished, and it was greatly admired. Congress adopted it on June 14. It now waves over a continent from ocean to ocean, and within a few weeks past its folds have floated out over our new conquests in the East and West Indies. Porto Rico especially made "the raising of the flag" an occasion of universal jubilation. Steps are now being taken to preserve the Ross house, as an object of national interest, and several historical and patriotic societies are endeavoring to secure the old homestead for that purpose.

KAISER WILHELM IN STAMBOUL.

The Sultan Greets the Royal Pilgrims and the Mohammedan Capital Rejoices—Picturesque Scenes Visited.

As the imperial German cortege moves eastward on its journey to the Holy Land, it is everywhere received with distinguished honors. On reaching Constantinople, the royal yacht Hohenzollern, with the steamships Hertha and Hela, was welcomed with the thunder of guns from the Turkish warships and land batteries, while nearly every vessel in the harbor was decorated in honor of the event. At the landing of the Dolmabagche Palace, they were received by the Sultan in person, that potentate being surrounded by a brilliant staff and by all the ministers, high civil functionaries and German officers now in the Sultan's employ. Levees, receptions and imposing ceremonials in honor of the visitors extended over a period of several days. During their sojourn in the ancient city, the Emperor, Empress and suite visited various places of interest. At the famous Yildiz Palace, which had been specially prepared by the Sultan's orders for the reception of the imperial guests, the Kaiser and his party were housed in a manner becoming the ruler of a great nation. The route between the palaces was lined with troops. In a splendidly appointed carriage the Sultan sat in full uniform, with the Empress of Germany at his right hand. In a second carriage sat the Kaiser in hussar uniform, and with the Turkish Grand Vizier, Fuad Pasha, by his side. Following them in open carriages were the brilliant suites of the distinguished guests. The same afternoon the monarchs exchanged visits. One of the sights to be witnessed there on Friday awakened the profound interest of the visitors. Friday is the Mohammedan Sabbath, and Miss Emma Hadock Telford thus describes some of the familiar events of that day:

"As attendance upon the Mosque on Friday is obligatory to all devout Mussulmen, the Sultan forms no exception. He, representing in his own person the absolute Caliph of the Faith. The duty of presiding at this solemn office has been incumbent upon the Sultans of Turkey since the year A. D. 1361, when the reigning sovereign Murad I., found himself unable to give evidence before the Kadi in a case where one of his favorites was concerned, because, according to the Koran, no person can be admitted to witness in a religious court of justice who does not joined in common prayer at the Mosque.

"Recognizing the justice of this decision, Murad proceeded to the Mosque on the following Friday in great state—a custom never since omitted by any Sultan for any reason whatever. Indeed, the failure of the Caliph to appear at this most highly regarded of his privileges would almost provoke a riot, as while he is bowed in devotion, the whole Mussulman world feel that their petition is being offered through him. Though no giaour has ever been permitted to view this impressive ceremony in the Mosque, the outside display of Selamlik is open to all the world, who, eager to avail themselves of the great spectacular performance, block the streets, fill the windows and balconies overlooking the route of the procession, and overflow the slopes leading from the enclosure of Yildiz Kiosk to the Hamidieh, or Mosque of Abd-ul-Hamid II., where the Sultan chooses to perform his devotions. Preceded by a gorgeously attired suite of high officials, dignitaries, guards, female relatives and a few favorites selected from his six hundred wives, attended by numerous battalions of stalwart soldiers fancifully uniformed and representing every part of his dominion, heralded by bands of music and the shouts from thousands of throats, 'Padishah Tchok Yasha!' ('Long live the Sultan'), the august monarch appears, usually accompanied by the dignified Osman Pasha, the hero of Plevna. Now, according to Oriental etiquette, every umbrella must be closed, not an opera-glass open, nor a sound allowed to break the silence, as Hamid II. alights from his carriage or dismounts from his splendidly appareled white steed, and, passing over the carpet spread for his royal feet, enters the Mosque, closely surrounded by dozens of his officers glittering in gold lace and decorative orders. All is quiet without until he has finished his prayer. Then a bugle note is heard, the multitudes crane their necks for a better view, the carpet is again spread, and the 'Lord of Two Continents and Two Seas' reappears, seats himself within his carriage, taking the reins himself, or again mounts his horse, and is rapidly borne from sight. The thousands of troops, the bands, the sacred banners of green inscribed with texts from the Koran, the gaping crowds, the pomp and pageantry melt away, and worship is ended.

"While the Turks, to a man, are thus attending to their own religion and the pursuit of gain, the Turkish women and children are making the most of the holiday. Attired in their gayest gowns and most transparent yashmaks, they go in waddling groups to the Frank shops in Pera, or, attended by a negress, an aged dunna or sour-visaged Eunuch, betake themselves to their favorite picnic ground, the 'Sweet Waters of Asia.' Here every Friday in summer, the velvet turf is crowded with picturesque groups of Turkish women, who sit upon the grassy carpet, or gay mats, spread for them by their obsequious attendants, smoking, eating fruit and sweets ad libitum, chattering and abusing the Frank women—"brazen creatures who dare to walk among men with their faces uncovered"—or lost in dreamy contemplation. The light caiques fly incessantly over the blue waters, filled with new arrivals from the harem; great gilded arabas, drawn by oxen with gorgeous trappings, and filled with women and children, drop their contingent of merry-makers, or a modern brougham brings the favorite of some great Pasha, whose European petticoats and gauzint of yashmaks betokens the leaven of the "new woman" working even here. Some fasten shawls to the boughs of a tree, and, in this improvised cradle, swing an oddly befezzed Turkish baby to sleep, while the children play games or flit from group to group like abnormal butterflies.

"Dancers and musicians, gypsy fortune-tellers, hurdy gurdies and puppet shows add their quota to the general festivities, while the venders of ice-cream, sherbet and even "stick-jaw" find a ready market for their wares. There is the hum of voices, the sound of laughter, the music of flute and violin. But the lengthening shadows proclaim the Sabbath nearly ended, and a sudden flutter seizes the feminine throng; for every woman, rich or poor, must be in her home by sundown. The caiques race madly over the water; the arabas are quickly loaded and creak up the hills and down again; the stately beauties of the broughams join the hurrying throng, and every Turkish dame, of high or low degree, hastens home to see that all is in readiness for the coming of her lord and master. Lower and lower sinks the sun, its golden light falling on the grand palaces of the Sultan, the gilded dome of St. Sophia, the mosques, the cypress groves and the old Seraglio. Scutari, touched by its reflection, gives its glow from every pane of glass; and as it trembles and fades and dies away, the Muezzin's voice proclaims from every minaret throughout the Turkish Empire the Sabbath's close."

On leaving Constantinople, the royal pilgrims will proceed to Beyrout, and thence by easy stages to Jerusalem (as stated in the programme published in a previous issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD). On Oct. 31, according to the arrangements, the Kaiser and party were to attend the dedication of the new German Lutheran Church of the Redeemer, built on the site of the ancient Muristan.

Biela's Comet.

Astronomers state that the comet of Biela—one of the most erratic of heavenly bodies, and which visits us every six and two-third years—is now approaching the earth, and its advance will be heralded, about the middle of November, by a splendid meteoric display. An entire year must pass, however, before we plunge into the great mass of debris of this wrecked comet. During all of 1899, the remains of the comet will be sweeping through our orbit at the rate of about two and a half million miles daily. Biela's comet has been divided into two distinct comets, has gradually been dissipated, and has been looked upon as a visitor who threatens dire disaster, and who brings fire and pestilence. Its visitation in 1845 was most remarkable. In the January following, when the comet was in perihelion, it was observed that it had separated into two distinct portions of unequal brightness. In 1826, when seen by the Austrian Biela, after whom it was named, it had appeared as one body. It was the same when seen in 1805 by the French astronomer Poms, and likewise when viewed by Montaigne on March 8, 1772, likely the first observation ever made of it. When in January, 1846, it appeared as two comets, it attracted the attention of the entire scientific world. Finally, after being visible three months, it disappeared into the solar depths.

Though not seen since 1852, two meteoric streams with periods corresponding to those of the two parts of the divided comet have already appeared.

"Christ" the Password.

Sydney Watson, a converted London waif, now a popular author of Christian books in England, relates the following incident in his own experience. While a prisoner in the East Indies, he had as fellow prisoner an old Scottish soldier who, after traveling over half the globe, had come there to die. He lay lingering between life and death. "For a brief interval he once more became conscious. On opening his eyes he glanced around, as if surprised at his surroundings, and murmured in broken utterances: 'I thought me in my mither's cot in Perthshire.' After a moment or two's pause, his lips slowly parted, and with a quiet, fixed, peaceful look heavenward, he gasped:

"'Nae ither name—one Mediator—Jesus Christ—He is faith—ful—just—forgive sins.'

"His mind wandered again for a moment. He had once been a soldier, it was evident, for he tried to raise his head as he said, short and sharp, with a dying energy:

"'Password? Yes! Blood of Christ—Christ cleanseth from all sin.'

"A thrill passed through his frame, and the watchers knew that he was dead."

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

IMPROVEMENTS IN HEAVEN.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Rev. 21: 1, ... And I saw a new heaven.

THE stereotyped heaven does not make adequate impression upon us. We need the old story told in new style in order to arouse our appreciation. I do not suppose that we are compelled to the old phraseology. King James's translators did not exhaust all the good and graphic words in the English dictionary. I suppose if we should take the idea of heaven, and translate it into modern phrase, we would find that its atmosphere is a combination of early June and of the Indian summer in October,—a place combining the advantages of city and country, the streets standing for the one, and the twelve manner of fruits for the other; a place of musical entertainments,—harpers, pipers, trumpeters, doxologies; a place of wonderful architecture,—behold the temples! a place where there may be the higher forms of animal life,—the beasts which were on earth beaten, lash-whipped, and galled and unblanketed, and worked to death, turned out among the white horses which the Book of Revelation describes as being in heaven; a place of stupendous literature,—the books open; a place of aristocratic and democratic attractiveness,—the kings standing for the one, all nations for the other; all botanical, pomological, ornithological, arborescent, worshipful beauty and grandeur.

But my idea now is to speak chiefly of the improved heaven. People sometimes talk of heaven as though it were an old city, finished centuries ago, when I have to tell you that no city on earth, during the last fifty years, has had such changes as heaven. It is not the same place as when Job, and David, and Paul wrote of it. For hundreds and hundreds of years it has been going through peaceful revolution, and year by year, and month by month, and hour by hour, and moment by moment, it is changing, and changing for something better. Away back there was only one residence in the universe—the residence of the Almighty. Heaven had not yet been started. Immensity was the park all around about this great residence; but God's sympathetic heart after a while overflowed in other creations, and there came, all through this vast country of immensity, inhabited villages, which grew and enlarged until they joined each other, and became one great central metropolis of the universe, streeted, gated, templed, watered, inhabited. One angel went forth with a reed, we are told, and he measured heaven on one side, and then he went forth and measured heaven on the other side; and then St. John tried to take the census of that city, and he became so bewildered that he gave it up.

That brings me to the first thought of my theme—that heaven is vastly improved in numbers. Noting little under this head about the multitude of adults who have gone into glory during the last hundred, or five hundred, or thousand years, I remember there are sixteen hundred millions of people in the world, and that the vast majority of people die in infancy. How many children must have gone into heaven during the last five hundred or thousand years! If New York should gather in one generation a million population, if London should gather in one generation four million population, what a vast increase! But what a mere nothing as compared with the five hundred million, the two thousand million, the "multitude that no man can number," that have gone into that city! Of course, all this takes for granted that every child that dies goes as straight into heaven as ever the light sped from a star; and that is one reason why heaven will always be fresh and beautiful—the great multitude of children in it. Put five hundred million children in a country, it will be a blessed and lively country.

But add to this, if you will, the great multitude of adults who have gone into glory, and how the census of heaven must run up! Many years ago a clergyman stood in a New England pulpit, and said that he believed that the vast majority of the race would finally be destroyed, and that not more than one person out of two thousand persons would be finally saved. There happened to be about two thousand people in the village where he preached. Next Sabbath two persons were heard discussing the subject, and wondering which one of the two thousand people in the village would finally reach heaven, and one thought it would be the minister, and the other thought it would be the old deacon. Now, I have not much admiration for a life-boat which will go out to a ship sinking with two thousand passengers, and get one off in safety, and let nineteen hundred and ninety-nine go to the bottom. Why, heaven must have been a village when Abel, the first soul from earth entered it, as compared with the present population of that great city!
